That so much of section 5 of an act of June 11, 1870, in relation to the Hot Springs reservation of Arkansas, as provides for the appointment of a receiver by the court, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the right of the United States to collect and receive rents already due.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, upon the passage of this act, to appoint three discreet, competent, and disinterested persons, who shall constitute a board of commissioners, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum, who are hereby authorized to perform and discharge the duties specified by this act, and for that purpose shall meet at Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas, within thirty days after their appointment, and shall, before entering upon the discharge of their duties, subscribe to the usual oath for civil officers, and shall, at their first meeting, organize by the election of one of their number as chairman of the board, having given ten days' notice of the time and place of meeting in some daily paper published at Hot Springs, which notice shall be continued during the entire session of said board of commissioners, and all the evidence herein provided to be taken by said board shall be taken at Hot Springs.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of said commissioners, after examination of the topography of the reservation, to lay out into convenient squares, blocks, lots, avenues, streets, and alleys, the lines of which shall correspond with the existing boundary-lines of occupants of said reservation as near as may be consistent with the interests of the United States, the following-described lands, to wit: The south half of section 28, the south half of section 29, all of sections 32 and 33, in township 2 south and range 19 west; and the north half of section 4, the north half of section 5, in township 3 south and range 19 west, situate in the county of Garland and State of Arkansas, and known as the Hot Springs reservation.

SEC. 4. That before making any subdivision of said lands, as described in the preceding section, it shall be the duty of said board of commissioners, under the direction and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to designate a tract of land included in one boundary, sufficient in extent to include, and which shall include, all the hot or warm springs situate on the lands aforesaid, to embrace, as near as may be, what is known as Hot Springs Mountain, and the same is hereby reserved from sale, and shall remain under the charge of a superintendent, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall prevent the Secretary of the Interior from fixing a special tax on water taken from said springs, sufficient to pay for the protection and necessary improvement of the same.

SEC. 5. "That it shall be the duty of said commissioners to show, by metes and bounds on the map herein provided for, the parcels or tracts of lands claimed by reason of improvements made thereon" or occupied by each and every such claimant and occupant on said reservation; to hear any and all proof offered by such claimants and occupants and the United States in respect to said lands and in respect to the improvements thereon; and to finally determine the right of each claimant or occupant to purchase the same, or any portion thereof, at the appraised value, which shall be fixed by said commissioners: Provided, however, That such claimants and occupants shall file their claims, under the provisions of this act, before said commissioners within six calendar months after the first sitting of the said board of commissioners or their claims shall be forever barred; and no claim shall be considered which has accrued since the 24th day of April, 1876.

SEC. 6. That the said commissioners shall have power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers touching the occupancy or improvements of or on said lands, or any other matter in any wise belonging or appertaining either to the said lands or the improvements thereon; shall have power to examine under oath all witnesses that may come before them; and all testimony shall be reduced to writing, and preserved as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 7. That said commissioners shall have power to remove, or cause to be removed, all buildings or obstructions upon the said Hot Springs reservation when the same may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, as also all obstructions to streets, alleys, or roads, to be laid off, straightened, or widened, as herein provided for.

SEC. 8. That the commissioners shall have power to straighten or widen any of the present streets or alleys in the town of Hot Springs, and to lay off such additional streets, alleys, and roads in said Hot Springs reservation, or in the town, before the sale or disposition of any of the property herein mentioned, as the convenience of the public and the interest of the United States may require, and for that purpose may condemn all buildings that they may find necessary to condemn in order to straighten or widen said streets and alleys, or to lay off new streets, alleys, and roads, and also all buildings or improvements on the reservation herein made, and to fix the value on all property thus condemned.

SEC. 9. That it shall be the duty of said commissioners, without delay, to file, in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, the map and survey herein provided for, with the boundary-lines of each claim clearly marked thereon, and with each division and subdivision traced and numbered, accompanied by a schedule showing the name of each claimant, and of each lot or parcel of land, the appraised value thereof, numbers to correspond with such claim upon the map; also all of the evidence taken by them respecting the claimants' possessory right of occupation to any portion of the Hot Springs reservation and their findings in each case; also their appraisal of each tract or parcel of land, and the improvements thereon; and it shall be the duty of said commissioners to issue a certificate to each claimant, setting forth the amount of land the holder is entitled to purchase, and the valuation fixed thereon, and also showing the character and the valuation fixed upon the improvements of said tract or parcel of land, and to issue a certificate or certificates to all persons whose improvements are condemned, as herein provided, showing the value of said improvements.

SEC. 10. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, within thirty days after said commissioners file said report and map in his office, to instruct the United States land officers of Little Rock (Arkansas) land district to allow said lands to be entered as hereinafter provided, and to cause a patent to issue therefor; and it shall be the duty of the land officers authorized to sell said lands to give twenty days' public notice in the Little Rock and Hot Springs newspapers that said lands are subject to entry in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. That any claimant or occupant, his heirs or legal representatives, in whose favor said commissioners have adjudicated, shall, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, have the sole right to enter and pay for, at the price fixed by said commissioners, the amount of land the commissioners had adjudged that they were entitled to purchase, at any time within twelve months next after the land officers give the public notice herein required.

SEC. 12. That upon the failure of any claimant or occupant in whose favor the commissioners have adjudged to pay the valuation fixed upon said land within the time and in the manner herein prescribed, then said lands, together with all other lands that no one has an adjudicated right to purchase under this act, shall be sold by direction of the Secretary of the Interior to the highest bidder at public sale, for not less than the appraised value thereof, at the land office at Little Rock, after notice of such sale has been advertised three months in some newspaper in the town of Hot Springs, and in such other papers as he may designate, said lands and improvements to be sold together; and the proceeds arising from the sale thereof shall be paid to the receiver of public moneys at the land office in Little Rock, Arkansas.

SEC. 13. That any claimant or occupant who does not desire to purchase the lands adjudicated to him or her at the valuation fixed by said commissioners shall have the right to remove any improvements made on said land, at his or her own cost, before the time fixed for the payment for said lands.

SEC. 14. That the money arising from the sale of the lands shall be paid into the Treasury in the same manner as other moneys arising from the sale of public lands, and held for the purpose herein specified and at the further disposal of Congress; and the money arising from water rents shall be under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, and expended by him for the purposes hereinbefore stated, an account of which shall be annually rendered to Congress, showing the amount received, the amount expended, and the amount remaining on hand at the end of each fiscal year.

SEC. 15. That the United States marshal for the judicial district of Arkansas in which the Hot Springs may be situated shall execute all processes required to be executed by this act.

SEC. 16. That said commissioners shall hold their offices for the period of one year from the date of appointment and shall have power to employ competent engineers to make the maps and surveys herein provided for, at a reasonable compensation; to employ a stenographer, who shall also act as clerk, at a compensation of not more than $8 per day; to rent an office and purchase the necessary stationery; and the compensation of said commissioners shall be $10 per day each, all of which shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior upon the certified vouchers of said commissioners.

SEC. 17. That the right of way be, and the same is hereby, granted to the Hot Springs Railroad Company, a company duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the State of Arkansas, to construct, maintain, and operate its line of railroad upon, over, and across the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas, as follows: Commencing on the east line of the south half of section 33, in township 2 south of the base-line, in range 19 west of the fifth principal meridian, in the county of Garland and State of Arkansas, at a point about six hundred feet from the southeast corner of said section; thence running up a ravine parallel to and south of the Benton wagon-road, westwardly through said section, to a point where the same will intersect with the Malvern stage-road at a point south of the graveyard on said reservation.

SEC. 18. The right of way hereby granted shall consist of a strip of land fifty feet wide on each side of said railroad, measured from the center line thereof, from the point on the east line of said section of land where said railroad enters the same to the terminus of the track of said road: Provided, That said railway company may purchase upon the same terms as individuals land for shops, depots, and other purposes, not exceeding twenty acres: Provided, however, That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this section.

SEC. 19. That a suitable tract of land, not exceeding five acres, shall be laid off by said commissioners, and the same is hereby granted to the county of Garland, in the State of Arkansas, as a site for the public buildings of said county: Provided, That the tract of land hereby granted shall not be taken from the land named herein for the use of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DORSEY the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill for the disposition of the reservation of Hot Springs, and for other purposes."

DISTRICT TAX BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives nonconcurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4554) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes.

Mr. DORSEY. I move that the Senate grant the conference asked for.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate.

Messrs. SPENCER, DORSEY, and BARNUM were appointed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session, the doors were re-opened, and (at five o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 24, at ten o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 23, 1877.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that a new legislative day has been reached, and the Chaplain will now offer prayer.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 901) for the relief of J. E. Robertson, of Indianapolis, Indiana; and

An act (S. No. 691) for the relief of Edward A. Leland.

SMOKING IN THE HALL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the attention of the House for a moment while he directs attention to a matter of complaint which has come to him. It has been a subject of repeated complaint that Rule 65 is violated on the floor of the House. That rule is as follows:

Smoking is prohibited within the bar of the House or gallery.

The Chair desires to say that the complaint which comes to him to-day is that gentlemen who are not members of the House, but who are here by the courtesy of the House, are in the habit of smoking within the bar of the House. The Chair has noticed that members sometimes in the hurry of coming from the cloak-room to vote keep their cigars in their hands, but hereafter the Chair requests that members when they come into the Hall of the House from the cloak-room, where they have the privilege of smoking, will see that they do not smoke within the bar. The ventilation of the Hall is a subject of serious complaint and a source of injury to the health of members; and smoking inside the bar of the House increases and augments the difficulty in that respect. The Chair hopes that, therefore, from now until the close of the session he will have no further complaints in this respect.

Mr. BANKS. Will the Chair allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BANKS. If it is not the privilege and duty of gentlemen to smoke cigars here, why is it that from a half dozen to a dozen cigar-stands for the sale of cigars are found in this part of the Capitol?

The SPEAKER. In answer to that question the Chair desires to say that since he was called to the position which he now occupies he has given no permission for any cigar-stand whatever anywhere about the building, and that the fault, if there be any in that respect, does not rest with the present occupant of the Chair.

Mr. BANKS. I ask consent to offer a resolution instructing the Committee on Public Buildings to report a resolution that shall forbid the sale of cigars within that part of the Capitol controlled by the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Chair soon after occupying the place he now holds was besieged by persons desiring to have stands in the south wing of the Capitol for every conceivable purpose as to the sale of articles. These applications became oppressive to the Chair, notwithstanding constant refusal upon his part. He therefore transferred that duty to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, believing it is not a part of his duty to allow these stands about the building. The Chair has always entertained the opinion that they ought not to be here at all, that persons who pay rent in the city should be treated properly, and that persons should not be allowed to sell in the Capitol without the payment of any rent. The Chair will entertain the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

Mr. BANKS. I offer then the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings be instructed to report forthwith a resolution forbidding the sale of cigars within that portion of the Capitol controlled by the House of Representatives.

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman allow an amendment to insert after the word "cigars" the words "or any other merchandise?"

Mr. BANKS. I accept that amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. Do not include newspapers.

Mr. FRYE. No; I ask the gentleman to add these words, "or any other merchandise, except newspapers, periodicals, and photographs."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Literary ware.

Mr. BANKS. I ask for the reading of the resolution as modified.

The Clerk read the resolution, as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings be instructed to report forthwith a resolution forbidding the sale of cigars or any other merchandise, except newspapers, periodicals, and photographs, within that portion of the Capitol under the control of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that resolution in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that it is in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a very late hour in the session to be adopting a resolution like that. Let it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] desire a reference?

Mr. BANKS. No, sir; I desire a vote on the resolution. It is certainly in order, because the Chair called attention to this matter as interfering with the business of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the resolution is clearly in order. The House has a right to protect itself.

Mr. BANKS. I call the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was seconded, there being on a division—ayes 91, noes 59.

The main question was then ordered, being upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I desire to ask a question for information. I want to know what is meant by the term "merchandise?" I want to know whether it includes spirituous liquors?

The SPEAKER. It is not within the province of the Chair to answer that question.

The question was taken upon the adoption of the resolution; and on a division there were—ayes 84, noes 74.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. FRANKLIN called for tellers.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and there were 34 in the affirmative.

So the affirmative being more than one-fifth of a quorum, tellers were ordered; and Mr. BANKS and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 70, noes 88.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. BANKS called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. O, no; this is too small business for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and upon a division there were ayes 28, noes 127.

So (one-fifth not voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The resolution accordingly was not adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 3163) to authorize the Ocean City Bridge Company to maintain and operate a bridge heretofore erected over and across Synepuxent Bay, in Worcester County, Maryland; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4668) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States and of the statutes relating to the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years and for other purposes.

TARIFF LAWS.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, presented the following memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, relative to the tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The following memorial respectfully showeth that the Philadelphia Board of Trade deprecates a change under the plea of revision in the tariff and internal-revenue laws of the country, believing that any agitation concerning them at this time must result largely to the prejudice of the industrial interests of the United States; and while we recognize many errors and conflicting rules in the present tariff, they are of minor importance compared with the vast benefits resulting from our present protective laws.

In view of the foregoing, the Philadelphia Board of Trade respectfully requests your honorable bodies to make no change or alteration in the present tariff of duties, believing stability in our revenue laws to be of great importance and that any material change would unsettle business and prove a great disadvantage to our people generally.

Resolved, That our manufacturing interests are rapidly developing under the beneficent protection of our tariff laws, which, continued for a few years longer, will enable our manufacturers and producers to compete with their fellow-manufacturers in all parts of the world.

And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

JAMES O. HAND, Vice-President.
GEO. L. BUZBY, Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA, February 19, 1877.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN asked and obtained unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the bill, with Senate amendments, (H. R. No. 4559,) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years, and for other purposes; and the bill, with the amendments, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

JOHN W. DODD & CO.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4252) for the relief of John W. Dodd & Co., of Indianapolis, Indiana; and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SPEAKER KERR.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for action at this time Senate bill No. 1270, to authorize the printing and distribution of the memorial addresses on the life and character of the late Michael C. Kerr, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The bill, which was read, provides that nine thousand copies of the memorial addresses on the life and character of the late Michael C. Kerr, Speaker of the House of Representatives, be printed; three thousand copies for the use of the Senate and six thousand copies for the use of the House of Representatives; and that the Secretary of the Treasury have engraved and printed the portrait of Mr. Kerr to accompany the same, for which the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to move to amend this bill so as to provide for the printing of twelve thousand copies in all; of which three thousand copies shall be for the use of the Senate and nine thousand copies for the use of the House of Representatives. That is the usual proportion in the distribution of copies.

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING EXTRA COPIES OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, asked and obtained unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Printing the following concurrent resolutions:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed 4,500 extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the years 1874 and 1875; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the commissioner of fish and fisheries.

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed 4,500 extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the years 1875 and 1876; of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the commissioner of fish and fisheries.

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring), That 5,000 additional copies of the testimony taken before the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the late presidential election in the States of Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina, and to the casting of the electoral votes in the State of Oregon, be printed; 1,500 for the use of the Senate and 3,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That of a digest of the opinions of the Attorneys-General and of the decisions of the Federal courts with reference to international law and kindred subjects, prepared at the Department of State, there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 500 copies for the use of the Senate, 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of State.

EULOGIES OF SENATOR CAPERTON.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, asked and obtained unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1271) to authorize the printing and distribution of the eulogies delivered in Congress on the announcement of the death of the late Allen T. Caperton, a Senator from the State of West Virginia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that nine thousand copies of the eulogies delivered in the two Houses of Congress upon the late Allen T. Caperton, a Senator from the State of West Virginia, be printed; three thousand copies for the use of the Senate and six thousand copies for the use of the House of Representatives; and that the Secretary of the Treasury have engraved and printed the portrait of Mr. Caperton to accompany the same, for which the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. S. M'COMB.

Mr. COOK. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back, with a unanimous recommendation in favor of its passage, Senate bill No 286, for the relief of W. S. McComb, of the State of Georgia.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let the bill and report be read.

The bill was read, directing the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the claim of W. S. McComb, of the State of Georgia, for furnishing stable room for Government animals after the suppression of hostilities in the late war, and for which a voucher is now on file in the Treasury Department, and to allow him the sum of $195, the amount named in the voucher.

Mr. WILSON. As there is a voucher on file, I will make no objection to the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. Pending that motion, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, the Chair entertains the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] as taking precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRIGHT. This is objection day.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BRIGHT, there were—ayes 72, noes 98.

Mr. BRIGHT called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion of Mr. BRIGHT was not agreed to.

The question then recurring on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, the motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3163) to authorize the Ocean City Bridge Company to maintain and operate a bridge heretofore erected over and across Synepuxent Bay, in Worcester County, Maryland; and

An act (H. R. No. 4668) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States, and of the statutes relating to the District of Columbia.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE DISTRICT.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. NEAL, Mr. HARTRIDGE, and Mr. CRAPO as the committee of conference on the part of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4554) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House then, in accordance with the motion previously adopted, resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. BUCKNER in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expense of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The pending amendment was that offered by Mr. HALE, to insert the following:

The balance, not to exceed $18,000, of the appropriation for survey for coast defenses now standing on the books of the Treasury Department is hereby made available for the surveys and reconnaissances by the engineer officers attached to the headquarters of the various military divisions and departments and for the publication of maps for the use of the War Department and the Army.

Mr. HOLMAN. The date of the appropriation should be inserted. Let the amendment be modified by inserting after the word "appropriation" the words "of February 10, 1875."

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that modification.

The amendment, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. PIERCE. I move to amend by inserting the following:

National Medical Library: For printing and stereotyping three thousand copies of the catalogue of the National Medical Library, and to obtain the necessary type to have the work done by the Government Printer in the style approved by the Surgeon-General, $50,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing the appropriation.

Mr. PIERCE. If there is not, I hope we shall make one. The National Medical Library, the catalogue of which it is proposed to print, is the largest——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must sustain the point of order unless the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PIERCE] can show some law authorizing the appropriation.

Mr. PIERCE. This National Medical Library is established by the Government of the United States. This is a simple proposition to print a catalogue of that library. Now I submit that this must be within the provisions of the law. The library is the property of the United States; it is so by the laws of the United States. It cannot be possible that Congress in a bill of this kind cannot order the printing of a catalogue of a library which the Government has purchased and now owns.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is very clear that there must be some express law authorizing such an expenditure as this.

Mr. WARREN. Does the gentleman contend that we cannot pass a law to provide for binding books for our library?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly you can, but you cannot put it on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of stock for the nursery and care of the same, $500.

Mr. WARREN. I raise a point of order on this clause of the bill, that there is no existing law authorizing the appropriation. There is doubtless a general law establishing this nursery, just as there is a general law establishing the National Medical Library; but there is no express law authorizing this appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I concede the point of order. Let the clause go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the clause just read is out of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improving various reservations, $2,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by inserting after what has just been read the following:

And the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds is hereby prohibited from taking down or removing any paling or fence now inclosing any of the reservations, parks, or squares belonging to the United States in the city of Washington, unless hereafter expressly authorized by Congress.

Mr. HALE. I raise a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman raises a point of order I shall merely have to change the form of the amendment. Why make that point of order?

Mr. HALE. Well, to begin with, I do not think this is a good thing to do; and besides, it is new legislation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Maine will allow a vote on my proposition.

Mr. HALE. I must insist on the point of order because I think——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. In lieu of the words stricken out, I move to insert the following:

Provided, That no sum of money herein appropriated shall be expended by the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds to take down or remove any fence or paling around any square or reservation in the city of Washington.

Now the object of this is very apparent. The vandalism of removing these fences around inclosures and turning into public commons the parks of this city ought to have been rebuked long since, as not only necessarily expensive in the expenditure of large sums of money, but taking away from this city so far as these parks are concerned their principal elements of beauty. If there ever was a piece of vandalism perpetrated anywhere it was in the removal of the inclosure around the reservation at the northwest corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Seventh street, one of the coziest, most cheerful, country-like spots in this city; in removing the fence around it and turning it into a common, making it no more graceful or attractive to the eye than the ordinary streets of the city. I am afraid the same vandalism will invade Lafayette Square, and when we come back here we shall find that too has had the iron fence taken down and that beautiful piece of ground turned into a common. My amendment is offered for the purpose of putting a stop hereafter to these acts of vandalism.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very glad to take lessons in taste from the gentleman from Indiana, but I cannot agree with him on this because in my judgment one of the most unsightly objects which arrests the eye of the beholder in the city of Washington are these fences about the different reservations and other pieces of Government property. They have the appearance, with their high iron fences, of the inclosures surrounding jails, and are dark, gloomy, forbidding places, instead of being pleasant, cheerful, and attractive spots where people might congregate. These fences instead of being maintained ought every one of them to come down and the pleasant parks and reservations of the city should be seen in whatever beauty we give them by our appropriations. The gentleman is all wrong in this regard, and instead of discouraging the taking down of these unsightly fences we ought to encourage it. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.]

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Chairman, I try in all matters involving the expenditure of the public money to follow the lead of the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; but, sir, on this point——

Mr. MILLS. I raise the point of order that questions of taste are not proper questions for discussion on this floor.

Mr. CLYMER. I have the floor and will proceed. I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that on all questions involving the expenditure of public money I am in the habit of agreeing with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but in a matter of taste and public convenience and what is most attractive to the eye I trust we may each be allowed to exercise his own individual opinion. In the olden time, before proper police regulations were enforced in this city, when animals were allowed to stray at large and go upon the public reservations, when the parks and other reservations in this city were injured by these incursions, it was proper to provide the parks should be fenced and inclosed as though they were prison-yards. But now, sir, when there is no longer any such necessity, in my judgment it does seem to be a sort of barbarism to keep these green spots, these oases in this great city, closed to the public and surrounded with iron fences. These fences are a matter of expense which hereafter need not be incurred, and surely if we are to be governed in this by that good taste which seems to prevail in other large cities of the world we would take these fences down. It would be better to do as they do in the olden countries, where higher and more refined taste prevails in respect to these matters, and put up on all these reservations the mere notification, "These grounds are committed to the care of the public." Nowhere in any continental city is there any necessity for other protection of the trees, plants, and shrubbery in the public parks than that notification—that they are committed to the care of the public. I believe our own people are as well educated, as mindful of what good taste requires, as desirous to have their public parks as convenient and as beautiful as any people on the continent. Therefore, I would be willing to have all these fences around the public reservations in this city removed.

Mr. HARRISON. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of giving the gentleman from Indiana some information. He wishes to know why these fences have been taken down. Now, there is the best reason in the world why they were taken down. They were taken down because some one wanted to have the job to put up a new fence. [Laughter.] The old fence was a perfect one, better far than the present one, and yet some person wanted a job to put up a new one. That was the reason why the old one was torn down and the present one was put up. Another object seems to have been to let the boys take that old fence to play see-saw upon the reservation, as can be seen any day by any one who passes that place. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] says that in foreign countries they have their parks open and leave them to public taste for protection. That is true. But there is behind that a police regulation so effective that, if the public taste does not protect the parks, every one desecrating them is thrown into prison and punished severely. We cannot do that here, but the idea of having in this city, which has so much required to be done for it, fences pulled down that would last for years, simply to give some contractor a chance to put up a new fence or to satisfy the æsthetic taste of a few individuals, is absolute folly.

The question was taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment; and it was agreed to, ayes 67, noes not counted.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For pedestal for the statue of General George H. Thomas, the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated for this purpose in the act of July 31, 1876, is hereby re-appropriated and rendered available.

Mr. CATE. I offer the following amendment, to come in immediately after that paragraph:

For second installment for the colossal statue of Admiral Farragut, $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. That amendment should come from the Committee on the Library, and I see that the chairman of that committee is present, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.]

Mr. CLYMER. That is right; it is proper that this appropriation should be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a subject which the Committee on the Library is of course conversant with. I know there is a law authorizing this contract to be made, and if the committee decide that this amount is due, all right.

Mr. CLYMER. Proper evidence has been furnished to the Committee on the Library that this installment is due.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

Construction, maintenance, and repair of military telegraph lines: For the construction and continuing the construction, maintenance, and use of military telegraph lines on the Indian and Mexican frontiers; for the connection of military posts and stations, and for the better protection of immigration and the frontier settlements from depredations, especially in the State of Texas and the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and the Indian Territory, under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1875, $15,000.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I move to amend that paragraph by adding to it the following:

And it is made the duty of the operators of the line, when Associated Press dispatches and others of general news are transmitted over it at Government expense, to give one copy of the same for the use of the citizens at each station, when requested.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish for the present to reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I will explain the object of the amendment. I would not be understood as reflecting at all upon the officers in charge of the military telegraph line. They have usually been exceedingly kind to the people of the country through which the line passes, but at one single station the people have been refused the use of the Associated Press dispatches. Those dispatches cost the Government nothing, as I understand it, and this amendment only proposes to require that one copy may be delivered to the citizens at any station upon the line where they request it, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I rise to oppose this amendment, and while upon my feet I wish to call the attention of the committee to certain remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] yesterday. He said:

I am exceedingly glad to hear so sensible a speech from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] He has spoken argument, and has not shown his temper or his teeth.

Now, sir, this is the second time that the gentleman has arraigned my manners in this House. I have not chosen that gentleman as my guardian and I repudiate his guardianship, and I say to him, through you, sir, that it is easy to be impertinent without being witty.

Mr. HARRISON. And the gentleman illustrates his statement.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I hope the gentleman will let my manners alone when they are not connected with the public business.

The question was taken on Mr. CATE'S amendment; and it was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For geographical surveys of the territory west of the one hundredth meridian, and for preparing, engraving, and printing the cuts, charts, plates, and atlas-sheets for geographical surveys west of the one hundredth meridian, $20,000; which shall be immediately available.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I move to amend that paragraph by striking out "$20,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000."

Mr. Chairman, any one who is familiar with the nature of this work will readily see that, for the purpose of continuing this work in the field and also the publication of maps connected with this survey, $20,000 is entirely insufficient and such an appropriation would result in crippling the work.

Now I would like to call the attention of the House to this fact: that there has been, for the several years through which this survey has been carried on, perishable stock accumulated, worth between one and two hundred thousand dollars. And I would ask gentlemen here to consider whether it is a wise policy to cripple this work and to keep this perishable property on hand, or if it would not be wiser to use it to its full extent and utilize the work which has been previously done. I have myself examined some of the work done on these surveys, and I can say that it compares very favorably with any work of that kind done anywhere in Europe. There is at present no civilized government which does not carry on work of a similar nature.

It seems to me that it must be clear to everybody that one of the most practical branches of knowledge is an intimate knowledge of our country, and that knowledge can neither be acquired nor imparted without these surveys and maps. It is a policy recognized by every civilized government, and this Government has followed it in the past. The Committee on Appropriations have recognized the usefulness of these surveys by making an appropriation, but I ask now is it a wise policy to cripple this work when there is a large stock of perishable material on hand, and merely keep the work scarcely alive, instead of placing those in charge of it in a condition to prosecute the work vigorously and to the best interests of the country?

Mr. FORT. I am in favor of appropriating liberally for the purpose of collecting this information. But unless some different policy is adopted by Congress, it sometimes occurs to me that the whole thing ought to be dispensed with. The information is collected, and this report is made and it is printed for the use of the Department. The next thing is that we see in some newspaper a statement that Wheeler's report has been made and is ready for distribution, and then thousands of letters come to us asking for a copy of that report. We get no copies whatever for free distribution among the people, and if we had copies we would have to pay the postage on them to the people. Now, unless Congress is ready in the first place to pay the postage on these documents, for the printing of which they pay, it occurs to me that it is not worth while to spend so much money in making the collection of this information.

Why, sir, you might as well require members of Congress to pay for the printing of these documents as to require them to pay the postage on them. Worse than all that, you have to answer every one of these letters that come to you asking for a copy of these works, and you cannot answer them in a moment; you must explain why you cannot furnish the copies, and it is a great labor to do so.

In my judgment something ought to be done by Congress, either to provide for distributing these works among the people or to satisfy them that members of Congress cannot furnish them. They all expect them. I received this morning several letters asking for these very reports, because the writers of those letters had seen in the public press a statement that these reports were now ready for distribution. Now the fact is that we have none of these reports for distribution.

If we appropriate so much money to collect this information (and I am in favor of it) I think it is quite time we should go further and provide for distributing this information among the people. What good does it do the people to collect all this information and file it away in the War Department or Interior Department, or elsewhere? What distribution is made of these documents I do not know. I presume of the documents published a very limited number are distributed among the people. While we are at this thing, and appropriating so much money for collecting this information, let us determine how this information shall be distributed among the people.

Mr. LANE. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying that I concur most fully in what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT.] We are continually importuned by our constituents for these reports, or the results of these surveys. That indicates to my mind, and I must be guided by the wishes of my people, the importance and value of this work. I insist that there should be appropriated an amount commensurate with the value of the work. I think also with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] that an appropriation should be made to enable us to distribute this work among our constituents. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. WAIT.]

Mr. WAIT. I certainly hope this amendment will be adopted. I look upon these reports as most valuable. Representing as I do a district in an Eastern State, I can say that I have sent all the copies allotted to me to my district and placed them in public libraries, and they are invaluable to the public for examination. They give a knowledge of the West, of the resources of that country, especially of the mineral resources, the character of its soil, its climate and productions. Coming as I do from the far East, I can say that I value these reports very highly and have sent them to the public libraries in my district, where the public can examine them and acquaint themselves with what the West is and its resources.

In regard to distributing these reports, I desire to say that I send mine to my district by express for fear they will be lost. The public institutions to which I give these works are willing to pay the cost of expressage, or indeed any price, in order to obtain them. For one, I certainly hope that the amendment will prevail, and that the sum of $50,000 will be appropriated to carry on these surveys and to complete this important work. I do not know that I can say anything further.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I wish to ask the gentleman this question: While I am in favor of this appropriation, I would ask him if there should not be an amendment providing some means of distributing these reports?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlemen has expired.

Mr. WAIT. I am willing to vote for an amendment of that kind. I want this information published so that it can be distributed among the people.

Mr. ATKINS. I want to say that I think the House of Representatives ought to consider this proposition a little. I have made some little investigation in regard to it. I do not profess to be by any means a scientific man. I want to say that I am not opposed to an appropriation for this purpose.

The point I want to bring to the attention of this House is that we are making appropriation for duplicate and triplicate work. There are three surveying parties in the field; one under Lieutenant Wheeler, to which this paragraph relates, one under Major Powell, and one under Professor Hayden. Now I assert it to be the fact that these three surveying parties or companies have been to a considerable extent going over the same territory and making the very same surveys. The Government is appropriating for these three companies to make the same report with similar maps.

Mr. WIGGINTON. They are very different reports.

Mr. ATKINS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, they go over the same territory.

Mr. WIGGINTON. While in some instances they may go over the same territory, the surveys are different; some of them are geological and some are geographical surveys.

Mr. ATKINS. They embrace the same territory.

Mr. LANE. Wherein?

Mr. ATKINS. In Wyoming and in Utah and Southern California.

Mr. LANE. I do not think that is so.

Mr. WIGGINTON. The gentleman is mistaken, at least as to their embracing the same territory in Southern California.

Mr. ATKINS. I think this appropriation is intended to subserve scientific purposes. We all want these geological and geographical surveys, and deem them important for the information of the people. But I apprehend, I believe that these three appropriations contain more of personal interest than they do of any purpose to subserve the best scientific interests of the country. I believe these three companies ought to be consolidated. I expressed a wish the other day that this matter should all be handed over to the President of the United States, believing that he would appoint a commission that would do this work more economically and more perfectly than it is now being done. I however offer that only as a suggestion; I make no motion about it. But I certainly think the Committee on Appropriations have reported a sufficient sum for these purposes. They propose to appropriate $20,000 to enable Lieutenant Wheeler to complete his survey. They also propose an appropriation of $20,000 for the continuation of Major Powell's survey. I understand that both these gentlemen get transportation from the Army. Lieutenant Wheeler is an officer of the Army. Professor Hayden, however, does not get, as I understand, any Army transportation. Hence the appropriation for his surveying company has been enlarged to $50,000.

I think the bill appropriates enough for these purposes. I believe that the duty of Congress (it cannot be done this session, but it should receive prompt attention next session) is to take up this subject and put it into the hands of a committee that will make proper investigation and report, so that the House can act advisedly, and that we may not make appropriations here for three companies doing duplicate and triplicate work, making duplicate and triplicate maps and duplicate and triplicate reports.

Mr. FORT. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

And the further sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated for printing the report of such survey, to be distributed by Congress. And all public documents published by order of Congress shall pass in the mail free of postage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is out of order.

Mr. FORT. I modify the amendment by striking out the last clause.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is still subject to the point of order. In the first place there is no law authorizing this report to be hereafter made; secondly, under the rule this subject must go to the Committee on Printing.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I hope that my amendment will be adopted. This book and these maps are of such a character that they are not expected to be found in every house; it is not everybody in the community that wants them. But they ought to be in every local library; and I believe that the present mode of distribution, giving every member of Congress three copies, is sufficient to insure their distribution to the various local libraries throughout the country. In this way these documents are accessible to all those who take an interest in them. Those who do not take interest enough in them to visit the libraries in order to see them, have no business to have them at home.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] makes a great mistake in confounding a geological survey with a geographical survey. One is the basis of the other. The country must first be laid out and examined topographically and geographically, and afterward the geologist goes over the ground and finds what substances it contains. The two methods of survey are not connected at all.

My friend from Tennessee appears to impute personal motives in connection with this matter. I am sure the gentleman has no right to impugn the motives of those who urge this increased appropriation. Such imputations are entirely out of place.

Mr. ATKINS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I do not question the motives of any member of Congress; but I know the fact that there are persons going about this Capitol soliciting votes of members in regard to this matter.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. Well, that may be so. Such applications are made on almost every bill coming before us; and if such persons urge good reasons which convince our judgment, I see no objection, because it is not supposed that every member of Congress is well-posted upon every subject, scientific and otherwise; and if upon information obtained from some one better informed than himself he feels satisfied and supports a measure, then I say he is perfectly right.

I wish to call attention to the fact that this company has on hand probably one hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty mules, and a large quantity of perishable property—tents, and other sorts of supplies. Are these things to lie idle, and are the mules not to be fed for want of money? Is it not better economy to give money enough to do vigorous work and when the work has been completed, stop?

Mr. ATKINS. If there are supplies on hand why not use them in the Army?

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise for the purpose of asking that the debate on this paragraph terminate. The early passage of this bill, as gentlemen must see, is a matter of the highest public importance, and the ordinary time has been consumed in this debate. But before asking that the debate close, I wish to make one or two suggestions.

My friend from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] is mistaken in one respect. There are four of these surveys provided for in this bill. An appropriation of $18,000 for Major Elliot's survey has been added to the bill to-day, making the fourth survey authorized by the bill, these surveys being substantially in the same region of country.

Mr. WIGGINTON. Does the gentleman speak of geographical or geological surveys?

Mr. HOLMAN. Topographical surveys mainly, but involving at the same time scientific research.

This bill with the amendments put upon it since it came into the House appropriates already $15,000,000. It appropriates $18,000 for Major Elliot's survey. It appropriates $20,000 for Lieutenant Wheeler's survey; and Lieutenant Wheeler, as I hope gentlemen will understand, is an officer belonging to the Engineer Corps of the Army. This $20,000 therefore is simply the appropriation for this civil duty, while he has the benefit of Army transportation and of a military establishment—part of the Engineer Corps of the Army. Twenty thousand dollars is appropriated to Major Powell's survey and $50,000 for Professor Hayden's.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to correct a statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] who said that Major Powell has Army transportation. He has not.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a fact, I believe, that he has not. After careful examination, taking into view the magnitude of this bill, it is the conviction of the Committee on Appropriations that you cannot make further additions to the bill without carrying it not only largely beyond the wants of the Government, but largely beyond the capacity of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SEELYE rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before taking my seat I wish to ask that debate on this subject close; and if there be no objection I will move that all general debate on this subject be closed after the gentleman from Massachusetts has been heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Chairman, the suggestion made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] respecting the consolidation of these surveys seems to me eminently practical and wise; and I hope the next Congress will not pass without the organization of a bureau of surveys to which this whole important business shall be referred. But we have these three separate divisions engaged in this most valuable work, with a corps of observers and explorers well organized, and it would be a very unsound economy to disband them, and very unwise to cripple them by inadequate appropriation.

I suppose gentlemen here understand that almost one-half of the area of the United States, forty-nine-hundredths lying west of the ninety-eighth parallel and most of it west of the one hundredth parallel, exclusive of Alaska, is not susceptible of cultivation except through engineering or mechanical appliances, and that the United States has not an acre of public land left for disposal to settlers except that land which cannot be made productive except by engineering appliances. This one-half of our territory, of which with all these surveys have done hardly 7 per cent. has yet been explored, remains land of which we know nothing.

It has been said these three parties cover the same ground, and to a certain degree that is true, but they do not conflict. Lieutenant Wheeler's object is largely military and very desirable. Major Powell's and Professor Hayden's objects are largely geographical and in a subordinate degree scientific.

Now, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen must remember such an expedition as this needs to be thoroughly organized, needs to be accompanied by competent explorers, men competent to do geographical, geological, or any other of the scientific works connected with these expeditions, needs quite a corps of laborers not quite competent to do that work and who cannot be furnished without an adequate appropriation. Therefore it is very unwise economy, for instance, to engage a person capable of carrying out surveys by triangulation where one man is able to do the work sufficient for five topographers—it is very unwise economy to oblige that one man to do the work for only three topographers and then oblige him to do the work of a topographer, a topographer costing perhaps $1,500 a year, and a man competent for triangulation surveys costing $3,000 a year. To cut down these appropriations produces exactly that result. You are obliged to have these high scientific men for these surveys, and to cut down the appropriations makes these scientific men do not simply scientific work but mechanical work, which is a very costly and uneconomical procedure. I hope the appropriation which the gentleman from Texas has suggested will be promptly voted by the committee, and that the increased appropriation which I understand the Committee on Public Lands has unanimously directed shall be voted for Major Powell.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps there will be no objection to passing this over, to be taken up for consideration in connection with the other surveys.

Objection was made.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 39.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. SCHLEICHER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 114, noes 33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDEN. I give notice I shall demand a vote in the House on this bill.

Mr. HANCOCK. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the examination of and report upon the most practical route for commercial, postal, and military purposes, from Austin, Texas, to Eagle Pass, on the Rio Grande, and to extend said examination and report, permission having been obtained through the Department of State from the government of Mexico, to the bay of Topolovampo, on the gulf of California, under the Secretary of War, $10,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order there is no law for any such work. It seems to me there is enough money spent on surveys in this bill already.

Mr. HANCOCK. I wish to be heard on the point of order. I do not know that there is any special statutory provision for this work. Indeed there are but few laws which have been passed by Congress appropriating money for such work which have ever been extended to the section of the Union from which I come. We do not have any laws that authorize the expenditure of money in our section of the Union, because there has been very little legislation for a great while applicable to that section of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman admit that there is no law authorizing this expenditure?

Mr. HANCOCK. I say there is no express statutory provision, but I do submit that the amendment is entirely in order in this view: It is in the interest of the postal service of the country, and I maintain that it does not require any literal express statutory provision to provide for more efficiency and greater benefits that may be secured in that branch of the service. But I maintain that it is in the interest of the military service of the country that this survey and exploration should be made. It is a route that is possessed of sufficient importance to have attracted the attention of the executive branch of the Government and led to an official correspondence between the Secretary of State and the government of Mexico, in consequence of which permission was obtained to make this exploration. It is represented as being probably the best route from salt water to salt water on this continent. The amount is very insignificant, and, in the interest of these different services, it seems to me that Congress should have the power to make a little appropriation for the purpose of carrying out the survey and explorations that are here asked for.

And under this view the amendment, it seems to me, is clearly legitimate and in order. We certainly have power to make appropriations of small sums of money for the purpose of ascertaining whether a postal route may be advantageously established in a particular locality, or through a particular district or country. In many instances, if explorations had been made in advance, they would have proved of very great value.

It is certainly of great importance in a military point of view that we should have a correct understanding of the topography of this country, its accessibility, and the distance intervening between different points.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. HANCOCK. I have been endeavoring to discuss the point of order, and I submit the amendment is clearly in order for the reasons I have stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this amendment is excluded by the rule.

Mr. ATKINS. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "available" insert the following:
Provided that no transportation shall be furnished by the War Department.

It has been asserted that no transportation has been furnished Lieutenant Wheeler. I assert that transportation has been furnished; and I propose now, as the House has increased the appropriation to $50,000 by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, that this amendment shall also be adopted.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I ask that the amendment may be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I wish to remark that the gentleman from Tennessee is in error in stating I had said that Lieutenant Wheeler never received any transportation from the quartermasters. I stated that he got it occasionally when some of the party were in need of it from the quartermaster at a post where they could spare it. In those circumstances it would be given, but not in a regular way. To show that it is not regular and to be relied upon I mentioned the fact that the expedition owns between one hundred and twenty and one hundred and forty mules for their own outfit and transportation. Transportation is occasionally given as a matter of accommodation, when it does not interfere with the service at the posts, when the quartermasters happen to have spare transportation on hand. The effect of the gentleman's amendment would be to make impossible this courtesy which is also sometimes a very important service and which costs the Government nothing.

Mr. FORT. Is the amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is in order and debate upon it is exhausted.

Mr. FORT. I ask to have the amendment again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. FORT. I would like to say a word upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is now dividing on the amendment.

Mr. FORT. The Government very often have the transportation and it does not cost them a cent.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 18, noes 57; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ATKINS and Mr. SCHLEICHER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 77.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Support of National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers:
For current expenses, including construction and repairs, namely: for Central branch, Eastern branch, Northwestern branch, Southern branch, and for outdoor relief and incidental expenses, $880,000.

Mr. TERRY. I offer the following amendment:

Add these words at the end of the paragraph:
And the term of office of some of the managers of said House having expired, Hon. W. S. HOLMAN, of Indiana, is hereby appointed a manager——

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BANNING. Let it be read through.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. TERRY. I ask that the reading of the amendment may be completed.

The Clerk continued the reading of the amendment, as follows:

of said National Soldiers' Home for Disabled Soldiers in place of J. S. Cavender, whose term expired April 21, 1876.
L. A. Harris, of Ohio, is hereby appointed a manager of said National Home for Disabled Soldiers in place of L. B. Gunckel, whose term expired April 21, 1876.
And Richard Coulter, of Pennsylvania, is appointed one of said managers in place of James S. Negley, whose term expired April 21, 1876.
And Hon. S. A. HURLBUT, of Illinois, is hereby appointed a manager of said Soldiers' Home in place of Thomas O. Osborn of said State, who is United States minister to Venezuela.

Mr. HOLMAN. While I feel very grateful to the gentleman who has included my own name in the amendment, I desire that that name shall be stricken out and that the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. RUSK, may be substituted in my place. If that be done I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to say that the name of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was inserted without his knowledge, and simply because those who desired this action deemed him eminently qualified for the place.

Mr. HOLMAN. I feel very much complimented, but I must insist upon the condition that that name be stricken out and the name of the gentleman from Wisconsin substituted.

Mr. TERRY. Very well; I accept the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. FORT. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SAYLER. I would like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] to state his point of order to the House in full and the grounds for it. I undertake to say that the amendment is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir. It is a change of law, but it is manifestly in the interest of economy, so that it seems to me that it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not see how it is in the interest of economy.

Mr. TERRY. I am not able to see how the amendment is open to a question of order. It is not a change of law. The law provides for the appointment of managers on the occurrence of vacancies and the amendment involves no expenditure of public money.

The CHAIRMAN. But how were those appointments to be made?

Mr. TERRY. Under the law by joint resolution of the two Houses. But anything that can be done by joint resolution can unquestionably be done by an act of Congress.

Mr. BANNING. With the permission of the gentleman from Virginia, I will read the law. Section 4826 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

SEC. 4826. Nine managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers shall be elected from time to time, as vacancies occur, by joint resolution of Congress.

It will be seen that this amendment proposes no change in the law, and now I will read what their qualifications are to be:

They shall all be citizens of the United States, and all residents of States which furnished organized bodies of soldiers to aid in suppressing the rebellion commenced in 1861; and no two of them shall be residents of the same State, and no person who gave aid or countenance to the rebellion shall ever be eligible. The term of office of these managers shall be for six years, and until a successor is lected.

This bill passed the House last session with the single exception of the vacancy in Wisconsin, being a new vacancy that has occurred since then. I hope therefore there will be no objection to the amendment, and that, as we have to appoint these managers, we shall appoint them now.

Mr. BANKS. This is not the proper place for the appointment of these officers. An appropriation bill may very well regulate the laws for the government of these institutions, but it is not a proper place to put in appointments.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state how this is in the interest of economy? The Chair does not see it.

Mr. TERRY. I do not see how it is to cost anything.

Mr. FORT. You can appoint all the officers of the Government in the same way in an appropriation bill.

Mr. BANKS. The question of economy does not affect the matter in any way. I can see how an amendment regulating the government of these institutions can be put on this bill if it reduces expenditures. But this is not a law regulating the government of the institution; it is a legislative appointment provided for by a distinct provision of law and it cannot come into this bill.

Mr. BANNING. This is not a new appointment to be made by the House. The present law provides for this appointment. It is economy, because it saves the printing of a new resolution or bill; if we put the amendment on this bill it is so much economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that this should be done by a concurrent resolution, and that it is not in order as an amendment to the appropriation bill.

Mr. SAYLER. I desire to offer an amendment to this effect, that the "foregoing appropriation is made upon the conditions following, to wit:" and then I will add the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TERRY.] I claim that we have a right to make a conditional appropriation, and therefore the amendment cannot be subject to any point of order, inasmuch as it is not a change of any existing law.

Mr. EDEN. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. BANKS. This is the same amendment precisely that was offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SAYLER. I am sorry that I was overruled without having an opportunity to write out my point of order or to be heard upon it.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For the support of the Leavenworth military prison at Leavenworth, Kansas, $40,000.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I offer the following amendment to come in at the end of that paragraph:

Also, for the erection of workshops and a chapel for said prison, $25,000.

I desire to say that there has been an effort to build a chapel and workshop for several years past, and no adequate appropriation has been provided for it. The appropriation contained in this paragraph is simply for the expenses of maintaining the convicts there. We passed, a little above this, an item providing an appropriation of $15,000 for the expenses of maintaining convicts in State penitentiaries. The amendment which I offer is a necessary one. It reduces expenditures and is in the line of economy, and I ask its adoption.

The question was taken on the amendment; and on a division there were ayes 9, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For furnishing artificial limbs or appliances, or commutation therefor, and for transportation, $100,000.

Mr. MCMAHON. I desire to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and it is whether the amount appropriated for artificial limbs in this bill is the amount estimated for by the Surgeon-General?

Mr. HOLMAN. The estimate was $150,000, but we have appropriated already for the present fiscal year $213,000 and allowed that to be available at once; so that the amount appropriated for the next fiscal year will largely exceed the estimates of the Pension Bureau. In view of the appropriation of so large a sum as $213,000 for the balance of the year, the Committee on Appropriations were of the opinion that an appropriation of $100,000 now was ample for next year. These artificial limbs are only furnished once in five years. Before the passage of the act of last August, which gave the right to artificial limbs to soldiers who had lost a limb above the elbow and above the knee, the whole estimate for this purpose was $52,000. That sum we appropriated in conformity with the estimate of the Pension Bureau. Afterward we passed an act extending the benefit of artificial limbs to the class of persons I have named, and we also transferred this duty to the Surgeon-General, instead of its being performed under the Commissioner of Pensions. We appropriate this year, in addition to the $52,000 estimated by the Pension Bureau, $213,000, and now we have appropriated $100,000; so that the gentleman will perceive that, taking the whole amount together, we appropriate largely beyond the estimates.

Mr. MCMAHON. Do I understand that the estimate comes from the Pension Office?

Mr. HOLMAN. This year it comes from the Surgeon-General; last year it came from the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. MCMAHON. The deficiency was $213,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMAHON. And this bill appropriates $100,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMAHON. Now, what I want to know is, if the Surgeon-General did not ask for $50,000 more?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but on looking at the estimates made by the Commissioner of Pensions last year, and by the Surgeon-General this year, and considering also the large sum we appropriated for deficiency, $213,000, considering the subject altogether, we were satisfied that an appropriation of $100,000 is sufficient. The gentleman will see that we appropriate for the next year altogether $313,000 as against $52,000, the entire estimate of the Pension Bureau. We believe that the amount we propose to appropriate is ample.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question. I desire to inquire whether the existing law allows these soldiers to make commutation for their artificial limbs?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GLOVER. Upon that subject I wish to say a word; and in order to do so I move to strike out the last word. Recently I have been directed to investigate two of the soldiers' homes, and have come in contact in one of them with over three thousand disabled soldiers, and in the other with about six hundred. The information I gather on this subject, as I believe without exception from the officers in charge, is that the commution should be abolished; that probably in nine cases out of ten the soldiers do not take these artificial limbs; they get the commutation for them and the money is squandered in the most unbecoming dissipation and is absolutely of no benefit to the soldier.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit me one moment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to say a word, first, if you please.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. HOLMAN. The object of commutation is to place all the soldiers on one level, so that those who can use limbs and those who cannot shall receive the same assistance from the Government.

Mr. GLOVER. I move to amend by striking out the words "or commutation therefor." I believe that it is no benefit to the soldier to allow him a commutation and that my amendment will be a great saving to the Government.

Mr. KELLEY. I rise to oppose the amendment. I am ready to admit the force of the suggestion of the gentleman as to many of the inmates of soldiers' homes, where they are cared for and are likely to misapply the money they receive for commutation. There are, however, others who have families outside of the soldiers' homes, and who are enabled to and who do apply any little money they may receive for commutation to aid in the support of their families.

There is another class, not admitted to the soldiers' homes, who in spite of their loss of limbs struggle manfully to support themselves. They certainly should have an opportunity for commutation, if their wounds are such that they cannot wear these artificial limbs. The amendment if limited to parties in soldiers' homes who have no persons dependent upon them might be less objectionable. I am opposed, however, to the amendment as a general proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think these words "or commutation therefor" should be stricken out. I think the soldiers should all be placed upon the same footing; that each should receive the same amount of benefit from the Government, either in the shape of artificial limbs or commutation in money. Further than that, there are a great many soldiers who think proper to obtain their own artificial limbs. They go to the establishments where artificial limbs are furnished and purchase them for themselves, and the money paid them by the Government as commutation enables them to pay for the limbs they thus procure.

Mr. McMAHON. As the law of the last session was very carefully considered, I trust this amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. GLOVER. I will withdraw the amendment.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair to receive a

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1231) for the relief of the board of trustees of the Antietam National Cemetery;

A bill (H. R. No. 1947) granting to the city of Stevens Point, Wisconsin, a certain piece of land;

A bill (H. R. No. 2197) for the relief of Henry B. Kelley, of Louisiana, from political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment;

A bill (H. R. No. 3093) for the relief of the legal representatives of Zachariah Washburn, deceased; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3566) to authorize the board of trustees of the city of Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, to enter and purchase for the use of said city certain public lands.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 3260) to remove the disabilities of Lawrence S. Baker, of Tarborough, North Carolina;

A bill (H. R. No. 3636) to remove the political disabilities of Richard S. Kinney and William R. Jones;

A bill (H. R. No. 3730) to remove the political disabilities of John D. Simons and Samuel V. Turner, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3791) to remove the legal and political disabilities of William A. Webb, of Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 915) to remove the political disabilities of D. H. Hill, of North Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 1096) to remove the political disabilities of R. C. Catlin, of Arkansas;

A bill (S. No. 1136) to remove the political disabilities of Wade H. Gibbes, of South Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 1225) to amend section 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to proof required in homestead entries;

A bill (S. No 1272) to remove the political disabilities of William Butler, of South Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 1273) to remove the political disabilities of William R. Jones, of Texas;

A bill (S. No. 1274) to remove the political disabilities of S. P. Moore, doctor of medicine, a citizen of Virginia;

A bill (S. No. 1276) to remove the political disabilities of W. F. Carrington, of Virginia;

A bill (S. No. 1277) to remove the political disabilities of Catesby ap Jones, of Alabama; and

A bill (S. No. 1278) to remove the political disabilities of John S. Marmaduke.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Clerk read the following:

Department of Agriculture:

For labor, manure, repairing concrete walks and laying new concrete walks, purchase of trees for arboretum, and for tools and repairs of mowing-machines; in all, $5,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the following:

For continuing and completing the preparation of a report on forestry, as provided for by an act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, approved August 15, 1876, $3,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. It will be remembered that at the last session of Congress an appropriation of $2,000 was made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, to be "expended by the Commissioner of Agriculture as compensation to some man of approved attainments, who is practically well acquainted with methods of statistical inquiry, and who has evinced an intimate acquaintance with questions relating to the national wants in regard to timber, to prosecute investigations and inquiries, with the view of ascertaining the annual amount of consumption, importation, and exportation of timber and other forest products, the probable supply for future wants, the means best adapted to their preservation and renewal, the influence of forests upon climate, and the measures that have been successfully applied in foreign countries, or that may be deemed applicable in this country, for the preservation and restoration or planting of forests."

Under this provision, the Commissioner of Agriculture appointed an eminent gentleman from New York, Dr. Franklin B. Hough, who, in September or October of last year, entered upon the prosecution of this work. But the amount appropriated was altogether too small. Dr. Hough has found it impossible to prosecute the work to completion for want of sufficient funds. The entire amount of the appropriation had to be applied for his compensation. Thus he was unable to obtain information from foreign countries although he had entered into correspondence with all the schools of forestry and many other scientific schools in Europe. He has already expended money from his own means in the prosecution of this enterprise. The Commissioner of Agriculture, in a letter which I ask the Clerk to read, has recommended the appropriation of an additional sum to enable Dr. Hough to go on with this work and complete it.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1877.

In pursuance of the act of 14th August, 1876, I appointed Hon. Franklin B. Hough, of New York, to perform the duties required by that law in relation to timber lands of the United States.

This is a most important subject and one about which the public interest is very much alive. Mr. Hough represents to me, and I am very sure with good reason, that the act of Congress referred to does not make such an appropriation as will enable him to make a thorough examination of the subject and such a report as will be satisfactory to the country.

I most heartily recommend that such an appropriation be made as will indemnify Mr. Hough for the necessary expenses he must incur in his prosecution of investigation. The public will look anxiously for Mr. Hough's report, and I trust he may be enabled to make such a one as will be creditable to him and satisfactory to the important interests involved.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully,

FRED'K WATTS,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

Hon. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN,
Chairman of Committee on Appropriations:

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. This examination was entered into by virtue of a clause in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill of last session, which provided that $2,000 of the money appropriated for the use of the Agricultural Department should be devoted to this object—a very proper provision, I think. Now, the gentleman who has been employed, and who seems to be a gentleman of respectable attainments in this field of inquiry, wishes to make some personal inspection of the timber lands of the United States, and also to obtain some translations of communications which he has received from foreign countries in European languages. It seems to me that a small appropriation for these two purposes would be very proper; but I do not think so large a sum as $3,000 is required. I trust the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] will concede that $2,000 is ample for this purpose. We will not object to that.

Mr. DUNNELL. I assent to such a modification of my amendment.

The amendment of Mr. DUNNELL, as modified by striking out "$3,000" and inserting "$2,000," was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL MISCELLANEOUS.

To pay Shepherd S. Everett for clerical services in the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, rendered necessary by reports of the commissioners of claims, $400.

Mr. McCRARY. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

To pay George P. Bradstreet for clerical services to the committee on the part of the Senate to devise a plan for counting the electoral votes and for a settlement of questions arising thereon, $100.

To pay M. H. Northrup for clerical services to the committee on the part of the House to devise a plan for counting the electoral votes and for a settlement of questions arising thereon, $100.

Mr. HOLMAN. Both these propositions are subject to a point of order, because these gentlemen, as I understand, were both in public employment; and the services for which the amendment proposes to pay them were extra services. There is a law expressly prohibiting payment for such extra services. But I have been informed that this work was generally performed outside of the usual hours of business, and was in addition to services of these gentlemen as clerks of the House. As they have performed valuable additional service, I do not press the point of order.

Mr. McCRARY. I suppose there will be no objection to the amendment. The committees in both Houses have recommended it.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just adopted the following:

To pay to the widow of Hon. Orris S. Ferry, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Connecticut, the sum of $2,500.

I understand that there is no objection to this amendment, and it is hardly necessary for me to say anything in its favor.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it go.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLE. By direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions I offer the following amendment, to come in after the amendment just adopted:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the Forty-fourth Congress the same compensation from the time of his appointment as is now allowed by law to the clerks of the Committee of Claims and War Claims, and for the same length of time, deducting such sums as have already been paid him.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must make a point of order on this amendment in its present form. I will not object to paying to the clerk of the Committee on Pensions the same sum that is paid to these other officers; but I object to the form in which this amendment is put. A proposition fixing compensation should be independent and specific. I presume, of course, that the law fixes the compensation of this clerk, and that the amendment proposes an increase.

Mr. JENKS. This does not increase it; it does not make a change of one cent in the amount.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not fix the compensation of this clerk without reference to other clerks, as can readily be done? Nothing so complicates matters and creates uncertainty as to our rule of compensation as this fixing of salaries by a reference to the salaries of somebody else.

Mr. JENKS. This does not change at all the compensation of this clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is his salary now?

Mr. JENKS. Exactly the same as these others in amount. I will state the purpose of the amendment. When the session shall have expired, this clerk's salary under the existing provision will cease. There will then be no person in charge of the papers of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Every one knows that this committee, having referred to it during the present session nearly two thousand bills, receives a large amount of evidence which, if not preserved, must be duplicated every year. To employ this clerk through the recess to take charge of the papers will avoid the necessity for rewriting letters and getting up new testimony. The object of this amendment is that there shall be some one in charge of these papers until the next session. The amount of the pay is not changed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must insist on the point of order. In the legislative appropriation bill the House has very largely reduced the number of permanent clerks in the Senate; and we cannot consistently create a new permanent clerk in the House while insisting that such clerks in the Senate be reduced. In the Senate the same reason exists as in the House for a permanent clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. If I should be a member of the committee of conference on the legislative bill, which may be appointed perhaps to-day, and if on consideration it should be found proper that there shall be in the Senate a permanent clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I will consent that the same rule shall be applied in the House. But certainly gentlemen ought not to ask the House to discriminate in favor of permanent clerks as against the Senate. I therefore must make the point of order that this amendment proposes to continue as a permanent clerk a gentleman who under existing law is simply employed during the session.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. RUSK. The facts are these: The Committee on Invalid Pensions have more private business than any other committee in this House. They have had referred to them during this Congress about fourteen hundred and fifty private bills. The clerk of that committee, by its authority, is required to call upon the Pension Office for all the papers pertaining to each case. It is the only committee in the House which receives original papers. The clerk is also required to be responsible for all these original papers and their return to the Pension Office. At the close of Congress he has to see all these cases are returned, fourteen hundred and fifty in number, and that the committee is credited with their return. It will take him at least two or three months to close up the business of the committee in proper shape, and I hope the gentleman from Indiana will permit this amendment to pass.

Mr. RIDDLE. To show that the point of order is not well taken, I ask the Clerk to read from Barclay's Digest what I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERKS OF COMMITTEES.

No committee shall be permitted to employ a clerk at the public expense without first obtaining leave of the House for that purpose.—Rule 73. [Such leave is usually granted to a portion of the committees, for a part or the whole of the session, as they may deem the service necessary; and six of the committees have permanent clerks, namely: Of Claims, by resolution of February 18, 1843; of Ways and Means, by resolution of February 18, 1856; on Public Lands, by resolution of May 27, 1862; on Appropriations, by resolution of December 12, 1865; on War Claims, by resolution of January 19, 1874; and on Invalid Pensions, by resolution of June 18, 1874.]

Mr. HOLMAN. If that statement is true as published in Barclay's Digest, then of course there is no necessity for this motion. I am satisfied, however, that it is not correct. I have the law before me of last session, which fixes five as the number of permanent clerks of committees; for the Committee of Ways and Means, the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee of Claims, the Committee on War Claims, and the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RUSK. The gentleman has left one out.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; only five were fixed by law at the last session of Congress. The Chairman will see that the only effect of the proposed amendment is to make this a sixth permanent committee clerk of this House, and the reason I make the point of order is this: The question of adjustment of clerks of the two Houses comes up before the conference committee on the legislative appropriation bill, and I trust gentlemen will not embarrass that committee by this proposed increase of the number of permanent committee clerks.

The CHAIRMAN. The authority sent up by the gentleman from Tennessee and which was read at the Clerk's desk seems to be conclusive on the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have the law of the last session before me, and that fixes the number of permanent committee clerks at five. It was not intended to make the clerk of the Committee on Pensions a permanent clerk. It was never a permanent clerkship but for one session. Gentlemen will see that to put this amendment upon this bill will only embarrass the committee of conference on the question of the adjustment of the clerks in the two Houses. That bill is already full of embarrassments, and gentlemen must see every one of these amendments placed upon the bill only diminishes the probability of the two Houses coming together on these appropriation bills. I therefore trust this amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not liable to the objection, and therefore overrules the point of order. As to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, that is for the House to determine, each member for himself, in voting for or against the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. FORT. Should not the sum be fixed in the amendment?

Mr. RIDDLE. That sufficiently fixes the amount.

Mr. RUSK. It is the same sum.

Mr. RIDDLE'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNOTT. I move to amend by adding the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Charles W. Beckham for services as clerk to select committee on the powers, privileges, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the electoral votes, for two months, at the rate of $50 per month, $100.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky whether this clerk was in the public employ when these services were rendered?

Mr. KNOTT. I will state the circumstances. He was, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. What pay did he receive?

Mr. KNOTT. He has nevertheless rendered extraordinary services, worth five times the sum proposed to be paid him by the amendment.

The amendment is offered in pursuance of the unanimous request of the committee, leaving it to myself to fix the amount, and I have fixed what I consider a very insignificant sum in view of the very extraordinary amount of work that young man has done.

Mr. HURLBUT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether the committee ever had leave to employ a clerk?

Mr. KNOTT. They never asked leave to employ a clerk. Nevertheless he ought to be paid for his services.

Mr. HOLMAN. What compensation has he been receiving?

Mr. KNOTT. The ordinary compensation of clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. Six dollars a day. I think the gentleman from Kentucky must allow me to make the point of order.

Mr. KNOTT. The same thing has been done for other clerks where they performed extra duties. I hope there will be no objection to paying this young man the hundred dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MORRISON. I offer the following amendment:

After the paragraph just adopted insert the following:
To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay bills for printing necessarily done at a private establishment on the order of the chairman of the committee investigating the election in Louisiana, $3,290, to be approved by the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. CONGER. I raise the point of order on that amendment. The law requires that all printing of the House shall be done at the Public Printing Office. That point of order has been raised before, and has been sustained.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Unless where provision has been made otherwise by the chairman of the Committee on Printing.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Michigan that this is in violation of the law requiring all public printing to be done at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. HALE. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to withhold the point of order until we have an explanation from the gentleman who has offered the amendment.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, after the return of the Louisiana committee, and at a time when it was supposed the testimony taken by the committee would be of some use and would go before the electoral commission, the Public Printing Office had partially suspended operations for want of appropriations, or on account of press of work, or for some other cause. When I applied to have the work done I was informed that it could not be done for some weeks. I supposed I would be liable to some censure unless I had the testimony taken before the committee in a shape to be used to go before the commission; and not doubting the power to have it done, or not supposing anybody in the House under the circumstances would object, I had the printing done at a private establishment. Those are the facts in relation to the matter.

Mr. HALE. This is all that the committee has had printed at a private establishment?

Mr. MORRISON. This is the testimony taken by one of the subcommittees. The other testimony has been delivered at the Government Printing Office, and the printing of the testimony taken by two of the subcommittees, delivered there more than three weeks ago, is yet unfinished.

Mr. HALE. I hope on that statement the point of order will be withdrawn.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose the point of order must be sustained of course. But I desire to say I understand a partial and mutilated report of testimony was printed at this private printing office, which was not such as ought to have been printed for the use of the House. Therefore I insist on my point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, rose.

Mr. MORRISON. I desire to say just one word in reply to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] When the committee left New Orleans the testimony was not all written up. So much of it was printed as had been forwarded and received by the committee, and that not received was not printed.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps the gentleman from Michigan refers to another matter in connection with another committee. I do not think his objection applies to this proposition, and I hope upon the statement of the chairman of the committee, although he was mistaken undoubtedly as to his powers, since it is evident that he acted in good faith, the point of order will be withdrawn. I do not think the objection of the gentleman from Michigan applies in this case.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I presume and must presume, Mr. Chairman, that the act of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] in this case was done unwittingly of the privileges of the House, and, so far as he was concerned individually, in good faith. But, sir, certain things have transpired in connection with investigating committees of this House during this Congress in this very direction which impel me to call the attention of this House to what has been done. For example, the Committee on Commerce was instructed to investigate relative to certain discriminations at Pittsburgh. They took the testimony, but never reported to this House. I found the testimony in the hands of a man who had bought it and paid for it—testimony taken by a committee of the American Congress in the hands of a man who had bought it and paid for it!

Mr. LUTTRELL. When was that? When was it that the committee failed to make their report?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have already stated it. Why did the gentleman not listen?

Mr. LUTTRELL. I was listening.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I stated that it was during this Congress. The committee never reported to this House and have not reported to this day.

Mr. LANE. I rise to a question of order. Is the gentleman from Iowa speaking to the point of order?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am addressing myself to the point of order.

Now the difficulty connected with this transaction is this, that a committee of this House should presume to do anything with its testimony before Congress has first seen it. It should have reported it here and asked the House to order it to be printed, and if the Public Printer could not have printed it, then it might have asked leave to go to a private source.

Now, sir, I cast no censure upon the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON,] because he has stated in a straightforward manner why this came about, and he did not suppose that he was doing any wrong. I must accept and do accept that statement. But, sir, in the future no chairman of an investigating committee should presume for a moment to do anything with testimony taken before his committee at the public expense without first coming to the House with it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order is insisted on the Chair thinks that it is well taken.

Mr. CONGER. I must insist on it.

Mr. MORRISON. What, then, becomes of my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the amendment is not before the committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood that the point of order was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not withdrawn.

Mr. MORRISON. Who makes the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman from Illinois will answer me one question I think I can withdraw the point of order. I desire to ask whether the testimony for the printing of which he asks this appropriation was printed exactly as it was taken?

Mr. MORRISON. So much of it as had been received at the time.

Mr. CONGER. All that had been received was printed?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. Well, then, I may have mistaken the character of that publication, and if that be so I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MORRISON. The whole testimony has since been sent to the Public Printing Office to be printed and the work will be done during the summer, probably by the 4th of July.

The question was taken on Mr. MORRISON's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that gentlemen will allow the printed bill to be read through, and will then offer their amendments as separate paragraphs to the bill.

Mr. LANE. The bill is open to amendment at this point and I desire to offer it here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the gentleman's amendment when the bill has been read through.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the last paragraph, as follows:

That the sum of $375,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated to pay the amount due to mail contractors for mail service performed in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Tennessee, and Virginia in the years 1859, 1860, 1861, and before said States respectively engaged in war against the United States; and the provisions of secion 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable to the payments herein authorized: Provided, That any such claims which have been paid by the Confederate States government shall not be again paid.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order upon that paragraph that it is contrary to existing law and that it repeals an existing law.

There are two points of order against this paragraph. The first is that this appropriation is without any authority or warrant of any law in existence; and secondly, and especially, that it is in direct violation of the existing law of the land. I call the attention of the Chair to a section of the Revised Statutes which it is proposed to repeal simultaneously with the passage of this amendment changing the existing law:

SEC. 3480. It shall be unlawful for any officer to pay any account, claim, or demand against the United States which accrued or existed prior to the 13th day of April, 1861, in favor of any person who promoted, encouraged, or in any manner sustained the late rebellion, or in favor of any person who during such rebellion was not known to be opposed thereto and distinctly in favor of its suppression; and no pardon heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted shall authorize the payment of such account, claim, or demand, until this section is modified or repealed. But this section shall not be construed to prohibit the payment of claims founded upon contracts made by any of the Departments, where such claims were assigned or contracted to be assigned prior to the 1st day of April, 1861, to the creditors of such contractors, loyal citizens of loyal States, in payment of debts incurred prior to the 1st day of March, 1861.

Now, sir, the points of order which I have raised in reference to this paragraph have been ruled upon, over and over again ever since that law was passed, by every Speaker and by every chairman of this House. I make the points again, that the Chair may again rule upon these questions.

But the chairman will remark in addition that the Congress of the United States is called upon by this provision to pay an amount of money contingent upon the amount which the Confederate States may have paid. I know of no law—and I make that as an additional point—authorizing the Government of the United States to pay that additional amount left unpaid by the confederate government. That is a provision of this amendment. I will not dwell upon the proposition; it seems so plain.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. HALE. Let us finish this bill now.

The motion of Mr. CLYMER was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BUCKNER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4682) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House now take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HALE. Let us take a vote by division first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first test the sense of the House by a viva voce vote.

The question was then taken by a viva voce vote; and the Speaker announced that he was unable to decide.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 108, not voting 51; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Ellis, Faulkner, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, Hooker, House, Humphreys, Hurd, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, Mackey, Maish, McFarland, McMahon, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Money, Morrison Mutchler, Neal, Odell, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, Rice, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stanton, Stenger, Stone, Swann, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, Jere N. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, Yeates, and Young—131.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Beebe, Belford, Bell, Bradley, William R. Brown, Burleigh, Buttz, Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Goodin, Hale, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Haymond, Hendee, Hoge, Holman, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, George M. Landers, Lapham, Le Moyne, Lynch, Magoon, McCrary, Monroe, Morgan, Nash, New, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, John Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Strait, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Warner, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Wilson, Alan Woodjr., Woodburn, and Woodworth—108.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Anderson, Bass, Blair, Horatio C. Burchard, Chapin, Davy, Douglas, Durand, Field, Gause, Gibson, Goode, Hancock, Harrison, Hays, Henderson, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Hopkins, Hunton, Frank Jones, King, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lord, MacDougall, McDill, Meade, Miller, O'Brien, Packer, Payne, Phelps, Piper, Purman, James B. Reilly, Sampson, Schumaker, Stephens, Stowell, Tarbox, Watterson, Wheeler, Willard, James Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, and Fernando Wood—51.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. HEWITT, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. MCDILL, are absent and paired.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to state that my colleagues, Mr. PACKER and Mr. JAMES B. REILLY, are absent and paired; if present Mr. PACKER would vote "no" and Mr. REILLY would vote "ay."

Mr. HENDERSON. I am paired with Mr. AINSWORTH, of Iowa. I presume that if present he would vote "ay;" I would vote "no."

Mr. BRADLEY. My colleague, Mr. WILLIAM B. WILLIAMS, having become very much indisposed, has left the Hall and retired to his room.

Accordingly (at three o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at ten o'clock a. m., Friday, February 23.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill, with Senate amendments, (H. R. No. 4187,) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; and to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and request a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WALDRON. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill, with Senate amendments, (H. R. No. 4559,) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and request a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALDRON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 1270) to authorize the printing and distribution of the memorial addresses on the life and character of the late Michael C. Kerr, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 4554) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. SPENCER, Mr. DORSEY, and Mr. BARNUM as conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Appropriations Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and moved that the House non-concur with the amendments and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

NEW EDITION OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. DURHAM. I ask unanimous consent to report back, for immediate consideration, the bill (S. No. 1216) to provide for the preparation and publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws have directed me to report back this bill and ask that it be passed with an amendment.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one person, learned in the law, as a commissioner for the purpose of preparing and publishing a new edition of the first volume of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEC. 2. That in performing this duty said commissioner shall be required to incorporate into the text of the Revised Statutes as published in the year A. D. 1875, under the act of June 20, 1874, all the amendments which have been made in the revision so published since the 1st day of December, 1873, and all that shall be made up to the close of the present session of Congress, with marginal references to such amendatory acts and to all the decisions of the several courts of the United States (as far as the same may have been published) which may have been made subsequent to those already cited in the margin of the present revision, and may include also citations to such judicial decisions of the various State courts as he may deem important; and he shall also make marginal references to the various statutes passed by Congress since the 1st day of December, 1873, not expressly therein declared to be amendments to the Revised Statutes, but which, in the opinion of said commissioner, may in any manner affect or modify any of the provisions of the said Revised Statutes, or any of the amendments thereto, indicating in such marginal notes by a difference in type the references to statutes of this kind; and he shall revise the indexes, and incorporate therein references to the additions herein required.

SEC. 3. That there shall be included in said edition the Articles of Confederation, the Declaration of our National Independence, the ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwestern Territory, the Constitution of the United States, with foot-notes referring to the decisions of the Federal courts thereon, the act to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statute laws of the United States, approved June 27, 1866, and the act providing for publication of the Revised Statutes and the laws of the United States, approved June 20, 1874, as well as the present act.

SEC. 4. That said new edition shall be completed in manuscript by said commissioner by the 1st day of January, A. D. 1878, and by him presented to the Secretary of State for his examination and approval, who is hereby required to examine and compare the same, as amended, with all the amendatory acts, and, within one month after having been submitted to him, shall, if the same shall be correct, certify to the correctness of the revision as amended, and cause 15,000 copies of the same to be printed and bound at the Government Printing Office, under the supervision of said commissioner, at the expense of the United States, and without unnecessary delay.

SEC. 5. That said commissioner shall receive, as full compensation for all services above required to be performed by him, the sum of $5,000.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all of section 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. —. That said new edition shall be completed in manuscript by said commissioner by the 1st day of January, A. D. 1878, and by him presented to the Secretary of State for his examination and approval, who is hereby required to examine and compare the same, as amended, with all the amendatory acts, and, within two months after having been submitted to him, and when the same shall be completed the said Secretary shall duly certify the same under the seal of the Secretary of State, and when promulgated as herein provided, the printed volume shall be legal evidence of the laws therein contained in all the courts of the United States and of the several States and Territories; and said Secretary shall cause 15,000 copies of the same to be printed and bound at the Government Printing Office, under the supervision of said commissioner, at the expense of the United States, and without unnecessary delay.

Mr. DURHAM. I will state the object of this amendment. The original bill does not make the Revised Statutes evidence in all the courts. The amendment provides for that deficiency in the Senate bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why does not the amendment use the words "conclusive evidence" instead of "legal evidence?" Or would it not be better to say "legal and conclusive evidence?"

Mr. DURHAM. We thought that to make the statutes legal evidence was as far as we ought to go.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think when a statute is made evidence it ought to be final.

Mr. DURHAM. I have no objection at all to the modification suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move then to insert after "legal" the words "and conclusive."

Mr. DURHAM. I have no objection to that.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was adopted; and the amendment of the committee, as thus amended, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that the President of the electoral commission had notified the Senate that the commission had arrived at a decision of the questions submitted to it in relation to the electoral votes of Oregon, and that the Senate was ready to meet the House for the purpose of laying before the two Houses the report of the commission, and to proceed with the count of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President.

POST-ROUTES.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman in one moment.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads the general bill establishing post-routes, and ask that it be put on its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. If it can be put on its passage without being read at length, I think there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that this is, with some additional routes, the same post-route bill heretofore passed by the House.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I will state that no post-route bill has passed both Houses of Congress since last May.

Mr. CONGER. There is no doubt about the necessity for the passage of this bill; but I think we have more important business this morning.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. It will not be necessary to read the bill except by its title. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CONGER. If the bill can be passed upon the reading of the title, I have no objection; but if it leads to any discussion I must object.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, as the Chair understands, the reading of the bill is waived.

The bill (H. R. No. 4692) establishing post-roads was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication; which was read and laid on the table:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1877.

SIR: I am directed by the electoral commission to inform the House of Representatives that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it under the act of Congress concerning the same, touching the electoral vote from the State of Oregon, and has transmitted its decision to the President of the Senate, to be read at the meeting of the two Houses, according to said act.

NATHAN CLIFFORD,
President of the Commission.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

COUNTING ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. McMAHON. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] as the Chair understands, desires to raise a point of order.

Mr. HALE. The submission by the Chair of the communication from the commission answers the parliamentary inquiry which I had in view. I did not propose to raise the point until there was a quorum here. I wish to raise a point of order on any proceeding which does not look to a joint meeting of the two Houses at once. But I will waive my point until I hear the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like the opportunity to announce three or four conference committees.

Mr. HALE. To that I have no objection. I will reserve the point of order, presuming that I shall be recognized hereafter.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] desires to have the naval appropriation bill taken from the Speaker's table in order that the amendments of the Senate may be non-concurred in and a conference with the Senate asked. If there be no objection this order will be made.

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following committees of conference on the part of the House:

On the deficiency appropriation bill, Mr. WALDRON, Mr. ATKINS, and Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

On the naval appropriation bill, Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. WHITTHORNE, and Mr. HALE.

On the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. CLYMER, and Mr. WALDRON.

On the post-office appropriation bill, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. BLOUNT, and Mr. FOSTER.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] is on the floor to offer a resolution.

Mr. HALE. I now raise my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALE. My point is that nothing is now in order except to inform the Senate that the House is now in readiness to meet the Senate in this Hall for the purpose of proceeding with the electoral count. As part of this point of order the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] has a motion or resolution covering the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] submits a resolution, which will be read by the Clerk, and the gentleman from Maine raises a point of order on it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be notified that the House of Representatives will be ready to meet the Senate in joint convention at one o'clock p. m., this day, for the purpose of continuing the count of the electoral vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer this resolution and raise the point of order that nothing is in order but what is there indicated; that it is a question of the very highest privilege.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House notify the Senate that the House is now ready to meet them in joint meeting of the two Houses to count the vote for President and Vice-President.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will state his point of order.

Mr. HALE. Does the gentleman offer that as a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands, and it will be first voted on. The Chair was going to state that he cannot see where the point of order comes in. He considers the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio to be in order and that the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa is in order as an amendment to that resolution.

Mr. HALE. That will give the House the opportunity of voting on both propositions?

The SPEAKER. The question will first recur on the amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have a thought in that connection which I would like to state.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Under the law under which we are now counting the electoral vote for President and Vice-President, the Hall of the House of Representatives is as much at the disposal of the Senate as it is at the disposal of the House. The very moment that joint commission notifies us they have a report ready for our action, it is not within the power of one House, without the concurrent action of the other body with whom we act in this matter under the law, to delay that count. Now, the Chair will observe that the act making provision for counting the votes arranges for the first meeting in this Hall, and I claim that it is not any greater violation of the spirit of that act that the Senate should ask us to meet them in subsequent meetings in their Hall than by any act of ours we should shut our doors to prevent them from coming into this Hall, designated under the act as the place of meeting.

I offer the resolution which has been read as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Ohio, and the matter can be determined by a majority of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa ask any ruling of the Chair on the proposition?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am well aware the Chair has ruled heretofore——

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I rise to a point of order. I insist gentlemen shall take their seats, so we may hear.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If this can be voted on as a substitute, then I have no further point to raise.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen on both sides of the House will take their seats and preserve order.

The Chair thinks it due to the House, as the gentleman from Iowa has in partial degree raised the point of order as to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, to say that the course proposed in that resolution is the course which has been pursued heretofore without objection by the House. The motion to take a recess not beyond ten o'clock of the next day is in the very words of the law itself. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, therefore, to invite the Senate within that time seems to the Chair to be perfectly in order. The original proposition of the gentleman from Ohio and the amendment moved by the gentleman from Iowa are both in order, for the reason that the House has the right, under the law, within the time stated—that is, before the next day at ten o'clock—to say when they should meet.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let me say one word.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Chair has held heretofore that no business is in order during this interval, and for that reason I have come to the conclusion——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so held in the case of a single return from a State.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Both are the same. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" from the republican side of the House.]

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question. I ask unanimous consent of the House to allow me this morning, by instructions of the Committee on Appropriations, to report the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. Wait until after the question has been stated to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is necessary this report should be made before any action is taken.

Mr. ATKINS. It is to avoid any difficulty that I now propose to make this report for printing and committal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes consent will be given, because it is desirable all the appropriation bills should be introduced.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. ATKINS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4692) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and made a special order therein after the sundry civil appropriation bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. HALE and Mr. CONGER reserved all points of order on the bill.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] for the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MCMAHON.]

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. I ask that the original resolution and substitute be again reported.

The resolution and substitute were again read.

The question being taken on the substitute, there were—ayes 126, noes 38.

Mr. SPRINGER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 87, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Beebe, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Blount, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Buttz, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Eden, Evans, Felton, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Goodin, Hale, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoge, Holman, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, King, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McDill, Miller, Mills, Monroe, Morgan, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Page, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, John Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Stowell, Strait, Tarbox, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Warren, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Woodworth—146.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Bradford, Bright, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Cutler, Davis, Dibrell, Durham, Egbert, Field, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hartzell, Hooker, House, Humphreys, Hunton, Hurd, Knott, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Lynde, Mackey, Maish, McMahon, Metcalfe, Money, Morrison, Mutchler, John Reilly, Rice, Riddle, William M. Vance, Waddell, Walling, Walsh, Warner, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Jere N. Williams, Benjamin Wilson, and Yeates—87.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Bass, Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, Samuel D. Burchard, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, De Bolt, Douglas, Durand, Ellis, Faulkner, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Hartridge, Hays, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hopkins, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Lamar, Lewis, Lord, Luttrell, McCrary, McFarland, Meade, Milliken, O'Brien, Odell, Packer, Payne, John F. Philips, Piper, Poppleton, Purman, James B. Reilly, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, William E. Smith, Sparks, Stephens, Teese, Thomas, Turney, Gilbert C. Walker, Ward, Watterson, Wheeler, and Young—57.

So the substitute was adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. STENGER. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. HOPKINS, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. My colleague from Michigan, Mr. DURAND, is absent an account of sickness.

Mr. STEVENSON. My colleague from Illinois, Mr. ANDERSON, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to state that Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. HUNTON. My colleague from Virginia, Mr. GOODE, is detained from his seat by sickness.

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleagues, Mr. JAMES B. REILLY and Mr. PACKER, are absent and paired.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My colleague, Mr. MCCRARY, and Mr. HEWITT of Alabama are paired on this series of votes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. HOOKER, and Mr. VANCE of Ohio, objected.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on agreeing to the original resolution as amended.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 142, noes 72.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. HURLBUT. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 156, nays 89, not voting 45; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Beebe, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Blount, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. So the resolution as amended was adopted.

During the roll-call,

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky, said: My colleague, Mr. WATTERSON, was quite sick yesterday evening, and I doubt not that is the cause of his detention from the House to-day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MCMAHON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. HANCOCK. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 175, nays 74, not voting 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Blount, Bradford, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

At the conclusion of the roll-call Mr. HUBBELL said: I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the Clerk will read the list of names.

The list having been read, the vote was then announced as above recorded.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTES.

At eleven o'clock and fifty-five minutes a. m., the Doorkeeper announced the Senate of the United States, who then, headed by their President pro tempore and accompanied by their Sergeant-at-Arms and Secretary, entered the Hall, the members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate took his seat as Presiding Officer of the joint meeting of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying a chair upon his left.

Senators INGALLS and ALLISON, the tellers appointed on the part of the Senate, and Mr COOK and Mr. STONE, the tellers appointed on the part of the House, took their seats at the Clerk's desk, at which the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House also occupied seats.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint meeting of Congress for counting the electoral vote resumes its session.

The two Houses, having separated pending submission to the commission of objections to the certificates of the State of Oregon, have re-assembled to receive and to coincide, or otherwise, with the decision of that tribunal.

The decision, which is in writing, by a majority of the commission, and signed by the members agreeing therein, will now be read by the Secretary of the Senate and be entered in the Journal of each House.

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

ELECTORAL COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., February 23, A. D. 1877.

To the President of the Senate of the United States, presiding in the meeting of the two Houses of Congress under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved January 29, A. D. 1877.

The electoral commission mentioned in said act, having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates, and papers accompanying the same, of the electoral votes from the State of Oregon, and the objections thereto submitted to it under said act, now report that it has duly considered the same pursuant to said act, and has by a majority of votes decided and does hereby decide that the votes of W. H. Odell, J. C. Cartwright, and J. W. Watts, named in the certificate of said persons and in the papers accompanying the same, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificates submitted to the commission as aforesaid, and marked number one (1) N. C. by said commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely:

Three (3) votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President; and Three (3) votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice-President.

The commission has by a majority of votes also decided, and does hereby decide and report, that the three persons above named were duly appointed electors in and by the State of Oregon.

The brief ground of this decision is that it appears, upon such evidence as by the Constitution and the law named in said act of Congress is competent and pertinent to the consideration of the subject, that the before-mentioned electors appear to have been lawfully appointed such electors of President and Vice-President of the United States for the term beginning March 4, A. D. 1877, of the State of Oregon, and that they voted as such at the time and in the manner provided for by the Constitution of the United States and the law.

And we are further of opinion that by the laws of the State of Oregon the duty of canvassing the returns of all the votes given at an election for electors of President and Vice-President was imposed upon the secretary of state and upon no one else; that the secretary of state did canvass the returns in the case before us and thereby ascertained that J. C. Cartwright, W. H. Odell, and J. W. Watts had a majority of all the votes given for electors and had the highest number of votes for that office, and by the express language of the statute those persons are deemed elected; that in obedience to his duty the secretary made a canvass and a tabulated statement of the votes showing this result, which according to law he placed on file in his office on the 4th day of December, A. D. 1876. All this appears by an official certificate under the seal of the State and signed by him and delivered by him to the electors and forwarded by them to the President of the Senate with their vote.

That the refusal or failure of the governor of Oregon to sign the certificate of the election of the persons so elected does not have the effect of defeating their appointment of such electors; that the act of the governor of Oregon in giving to E. A. Cronin a certificate of his election, though he received a thousand votes less than Watts, on the ground that the latter was ineligible, was without authority of law and is therefore void.

That although the evidence shows that Watts was a postmaster at the time of his election, that fact is rendered immaterial by his resignation both as postmaster and elector, and his subsequent appointment to fill the vacancy so made by the electoral college.

The commission has also decided and does hereby decide by a majority of votes and report that as a consequence of the foregoing and upon the grounds before stated the paper purporting to be a certificate of the electoral vote of said State of Oregon, signed by E. A. Cronin, J. N. T. Miller, and John Parker, marked No. 2 N. C. by the commission and herewith returned, is not the certificate of the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that they ought not to be counted as such.

Done at Washington, District of Columbia, the day and year first above written.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any objections to the decision of the Commission?

Senator KELLY. I have the honor to file certain objections to this decision signed by Senators and Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon having submitted an objection to this decision, it will be read by the Clerk of the House.

The Clerk of the House read as follows:

The undersigned, Senators and Members of the House of Representatives of the United States, object to the decision of the joint commission directing the counting of the vote of John W. Watts, an alleged elector for the State of Oregon, as given for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President, and rejecting the vote of E. A. Cronin as cast for Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, for President, and Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice-President, on the following grounds:

1. John W. Watts was not elected a presidential elector for Oregon.
2. He (J. W. Watts) was not legally appointed as a presidential elector.
3. He (Watts) was disqualified to receive any appointment as presidential elector or the vote as such, in that he held an office of trust and profit under the United States.
4. E. A. Cronin was elected a presidential elector for the State of Oregon, and in accordance with law as such cast a legal vote as an elector for Samuel J. Tilden for President and Thomas A. Hendricks for Vice-President, and the vote so cast should be counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the decision of the commission? [After a pause.] There being none, the Senate will withdraw to its Chamber, that the Houses separately may consider and determine the objection.

Accordingly, at twelve o'clock and ten minutes p. m., the Senate withdrew.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Montana Territory, for a change in the boundary lines of said Territory, to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. THORNBURGH: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Rogersville to Estillville, Tennessee, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of Thomas L. Duncan, late a private in Company I, Seventh Tennessee Mounted Infantry, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 24, 1877—10 a. m.

The recess having expired, the Senate resumed its session.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF OREGON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a communication from the president of the electoral commission. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1877.

SIR: I am directed by the electoral commission to inform the Senate that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it under the act of Congress concerning the same, touching the electoral votes from the State of Oregon, and herewith, by direction of said commission, I transmit to you the said decision, in writing, signed by the members agreeing therein, to be read at the meeting of the two Houses according to said act. All the certificates and papers sent to the commission by the President of the Senate are herewith returned.

NATHAN CLIFFORD.
President of the Commission.

Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY,
President of the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the House of Representatives be notified that we are ready to meet them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the House be notified that the Senate is ready to meet the House for the purpose of receiving the decision of the commission.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary of the Senate will so notify the House.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Is it in order to make a motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Legislative business is not in order.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If it be now in order, I present the credentials of my colleague from Michigan for re-election to the Senate for six years from the 4th of March next, and ask that they be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order. The Chair rules that credentials may be read, that matter pertaining to the personnel of this body. The credentials will be read.

The credentials of THOMAS W. FERRY, elected a Senator by the Legislature of Michigan for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1877, were read and ordered to be filed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, at eleven o'clock and three minutes a. m., by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4187) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN of Indiana, Mr. JAMES H. BLOUNT of Georgia, and Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES H. BLOUNT of Georgia, Mr. W. C. WHITTHORNE of Tennessee, and Mr. EUGENE HALE of Maine managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and prior years, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HENRY WALDRON of Michigan, Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, and Mr. ROBERT HAMILTON of New Jersey managers on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM. S. HOLMAN of Indiana, Mr. HIESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. HENRY WALDRON of Michigan managers on the part of the House.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BOGY, (at eleven o'clock and thirty minutes a. m.) Mr. President, I desire to make an explanation to the Senate. I presented a few days ago to the Senate resolutions from my State purporting to have passed both houses of the Legislature, instructing the Senators from that State and requesting the members of the House to vote for what is generally known as the Texas Pacific Railroad bill. At the time I presented the resolutions I believed they had passed both branches of the Legislature of my State. They were inclosed to me by a member of the Legislature, and from a hasty perusal of the letter in my seat I was satisfied they had passed both branches, and so believing I felt it to be my duty to present them. I have not his letter at this moment, and it may be I did not file it away, as is my habit. Now I see by the papers that the resolutions did not pass both branches, but were in fact rejected in the senate.

I therefore feel it to be my duty to myself and to the Legislature to make this explanation. The resolutions were presented to the Senate as having passed, when in fact they did not pass.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF OREGON.

At eleven o'clock and fifty minutes a. m. Mr. G. M. ADAMS, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to notify the Senate that the House is now ready to meet them in joint meeting of the two Houses to count the votes for President and Vice-President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at twelve o'clock and ten minutes p. m. and the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, having returned from the joint meeting in the House of Representatives, separated upon an objection submitted to the decision of the commission upon the certificates from the State of Oregon. The Chair will lay before the Senate that objection in writing. It will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

The undersigned, Senators and Members of the House of Representatives of the United States, object to the decision of the joint commission directing the counting of the vote of John W. Watts, an alleged elector for the State of Oregon, as given for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President, and rejecting the vote of E. A. Cronin as cast for Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, for President, and Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice-President, on the following grounds:

1. John W. Watts was not elected a presidential elector for Oregon.
2. He (J. W. Watts) was not legally appointed as a presidential elector.
3. He (Watts) was disqualified to receive any appointment as presidential elector or the vote as such, in that he held an office of trust and profit under the United States.
4. E. A. Cronin was elected a presidential elector for the State of Oregon, and in accordance with law as such cast a legal vote as an elector for Samuel J. Tilden for President and Thomas A. Hendricks for Vice-President, and the vote so cast should be counted.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Oregon stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, I believe we are limited to ten minutes in our speeches?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KELLY. I hardly think it is necessary to begin an argument in that length of time; but I wish the Senate to pass upon this point distinctly. It appears that the decision recites the fact that on 7th day of November Mr. J. W. Watts, who is objected to, was a postmaster. That fact is clear and indisputable. The commission say that, nowithstanding that fact, he still was eligible; that if he did not hold the office at the time he cast the vote, on the 6th of December, he is not disqualified. In my judgment that is a decision in plain violation of the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution says:

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

That strikes at the very beginning of the time when an elector claims to be appointed; that is, at the election. "Election" and "appointment" are here synonymous, and the Revised Statutes of the United States provide that—

The electors of President and Vice-President shall be appointed in each State on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November.

That is the day when they are to be appointed, in November. They cannot be appointed afterward. If an elector were ineligible at that time it would be impossible to render him a qualified elector by subsequent resignation. In support of this position I refer to a decision made by the supreme court of California, Searcy vs. Grow, 15 California Reports. I have not time to read it; I simply refer to it and also to two other decisions which will be remembered by every Senator.

In the State of Rhode Island the governor, under the peculiar laws of that State, submitted to the supreme court of Rhode Island the question whether Mr. Corliss, who was holding an office of trust under the United States on the day of election, was a person who could be chosen an elector. He had resigned the office after the election, but was holding it on the day of the election. The supreme court of Rhode Island held that he was ineligible; that to be eligible to be elected or appointed he must have been qualified on the day of election. Here is a solemn decision of the supreme court of Rhode Island.

The same thing was settled by the Legislature of Vermont. A man by the name of Sollace, a postmaster, was voted for, and a few days after the election he resigned. The Legislature of Vermont, being convened, by the very fact that they appointed another man, held that Sollace was ineligible and sustained the doctrine for which I contend.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator let me tell him that the Legislature did not appoint him?

Mr. KELLY. I understand that the Legislature convened immediately afterward and appointed him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. CONKLING. It passed a bill authorizing another.

Mr. KELLY. That is virtually the same thing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, the Legislature passed a general law amending the old law, so as to make it absolutely clear that the electors in all future time would have a right to fill every sort of vacancy.

Mr. CONKLING. Including that one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Including that one.

Mr. KELLY. I am sorry my time is so limited, or else I should be glad to hear from the Senator from Vermont a little longer in explanation of what he asserts; but taking the very ground suggested, it shows that the person voted for was not considered eligible; else the Legislature would not have passed a law authorizing the other electors to supply that vacancy. They recognized the fact that he being ineligible some legislation was required so as to fill the vacancy.

Here are three decisions, the decision of the Legislature of Vermont, the decision of the supreme court of Rhode Island, and the decision of the supreme court of California; and in addition we have the fact that in 1837 a joint committee appointed on the part of both Houses, of which the Senate portion consisted of Felix Grundy, Henry Clay, and Silas Wright, upon an investigation of this matter declared it to be the doctrine of the Constitution that no person holding the office of postmaster could be elected or chosen, and that a subsequent resignation did not cure the defect. If anything can be settled by legislative precedents, it seems to me that this point was settled by the unanimous decision of a joint committee of both Houses of Congress, by the Legislature of a sovereign State, and by two supreme courts. Indeed it seems to me that it does not require any adjudication to settle a point that is so plain as this.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. KELLY. I cannot. You will have ten minutes. My colleague is in the habit of interrupting me every time I get up to speak when he knows my time is limited. I think it is almost discourteous, but I will withdraw that word.

Mr. MITCHELL. Probably it is no more discourteous than to decline in the abrupt manner that my colleague has done.

Mr. KELLY. I surely cannot be called upon to give part of my time when my colleague will have ten minutes to answer me.

Mr. MITCHELL. I simply desired to say that my colleague has misapprehended the decision of the commission, and I wished to give him an opportunity to set himself right.

Mr. KELLY. I suppose my time has been exhausted by these questions, and I will not say anything further.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I cannot give the sanction of my judgment to the several decisions made by the electoral commission upon the main questions submitted to them. In my opinion its decisions contravene the spirit of the Constitution and as well that of the statute creating it, and unhappily give life and effect to the grossest fraud upon the ballot-box, establish wrong, and deprive the American people of the Chief Magistrate duly elected and fasten upon them one not so elected.

In the few minutes allowed me in this debate, I will state a very brief summary of the grounds of my opinion.

The Constitution provides in clause 2 of section 1 of article 2, as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

This clause of the Constitution plainly provides that the States shall have the right to elect the President and Vice-President, and defines how the power to be exercised for that purpose shall be exercised:

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, &c.

This power is absolute. It implies the right and power to appoint unqualifiedly, as the Legislature may direct, with one limitation, to wit:

But no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

To appoint electors means to make all laws and regulations, and to provide all tribunals, and to do all things necessary to their complete appointment. Neither in terms nor by necessary implication has the Federal Government, or any department thereof, any power to regulate or modify the manner of such appointment, or to reject or reverse the same when made as the Legislature shall direct, if the same shall not conflict with the clause of the Constitution just cited making certain classes of persons ineligible. With this exception, to determine who is an elector is unqualifiedly within the jurisdiction of the State. And when the properly constituted State authorities, the lawful State tribunals, whether one or more, shall have ascertained according to the laws of the State who is an elector, and shall have done all necessary things, made all necessary inquiries and decisions to that end, the United States—the Senate and House of Representatives sitting to count and counting the electoral vote for President and Vice-President—are bound to accept such elector and cannot reject him, or review, modify, or reverse any action or decision of the proper State authority in relation to his appointment. It is the right, the duty of the State to appoint.

The elector when so appointed is an officer or agent to do an official act for the State appointing him, affecting the several States and the United States. As soon as electors are appointed by the State, they come within the jurisdiction and authority of the United States under and in pursuance of the Constitution and laws. The Constitution further provides that—

The electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by ballot for two persons, of whom one at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a list of all the persons voted for, and of the number of votes for each; which list they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate.

Such electors must comply in all respects with the provisions just cited and all proper statutory regulations to execute the same. When they shall have voted for President and Vice-President and the vote as cast by them shall come before the Senate and House of Representatives in joint session, then the two branches of Congress, according to their respective organizations, must by necessary implication, inquire whether the Constitution and laws of the United States have been complied with; whether there was a Legislature of the State which did direct the appointment of such electors; whether such appointment was ascertained to have been made by the proper authorities of the State designated and provided by the laws of the State for that purpose, that is, by the authorities provided by the State to ascertain who shall have been appointed; whether persons purporting to be such authorities were such according to law and proceeded in their office according to law; who were the duly ascertained authorities of the State in any way connected with the appointment of such electors, as for example, who duly composed the Legislature; who was the governor, the secretary of state, the returning board, and the like. Ordinarily the two branches of Congress would take official notice of the Legislature and the several officers of the State, but in case the existence or right of these shall be duly questioned, then solemn inquiry must be made and all decisions made to that end, not for the purpose of reviewing, modifying, or reversing their action, but to see, first, that they had the right under the constitution and laws of the State to act, and secondly, that they did act according to law.

To make such inquiries and such decisions is essential, else how could the Senate and House of Representatives know that persons purporting and claiming to be electors for a State were indeed so according to law? The two branches must know who were electors, that the persons claiming so to be were such; and this implies necessarily the power to make all inquiries and decisions for that purpose. But for the existence of such a power of inquiry, decision, and judgment, conspirators might easily supplant and defeat the purposes of the Constitution. This is one of the cases where under our system the Federal Government is bound to act upon and accept, and cannot review, modify, or reject the action of the State government; it can only through its properly constituted agencies inquire and determine who were the lawful State authorities to ascertain results and what they did in ascertaining who were electors. If Congress or any other Federal tribunal could review, modify, or reverse the action of the lawful officers of the State, how, I ask, could it be said that the State appointed the electors?

Now, let us apply this exposition of the Constitution to the case of the returns from the State of Florida. It was the duty and the right of the properly constituted authorities of that State to ascertain, and they alone could ascertain lawfully, who were duly elected electors for President and Vice-President at the late election. If such authorities did act according to the laws of that State and ascertain that certain persons were elected electors, then the Senate and House of Representatives were bound to accept the returns as made by such electors, whether such ascertainment was correct or erroneous, and for the reason, that it is the right and the duty of the State to appoint the electors and to do all things and make all inquiries in and about such appointments. All such acts, inquiries, and decisions were matters solely within the jurisdiction of the State.

But it was the duty of the Senate and House of Representatives and the electoral commission under them to ascertain on questions being properly raised, whether there was the State of Florida in lawful relation with the United States; to take official notice of the constitution and laws of that State, to inquire who were the lawfully ascertained officers of that State in any way connected with the ascertainment of the result of the late presidential election there, particularly who was the duly ascertained governor, secretary of state, attorney-general, and comptroller of public accounts, and whether these three latter officers composed the returning board and whether they exercised their office in that respect according to the laws of that State in ascertaining who were duly elected electors. Ordinarily, perhaps, the Senate and House of Representatives would take official notice of these officers and their official acts, but not in case of question of their existence or their lawful conduct. Then solemn inquiry must be regularly instituted, and if it turned out that the officers purporting and claiming to be such were not duly ascertained to be such, or that they proceeded in their offices in defiance of the law as expounded by the supreme judicial tribunal of that State, then the returns ought to have been rejected as null and void.

In this case the evidence which ought to have been admitted by the commission proves that the secretary of state, the attorney-general, and the comptroller of public accounts composed the returning board of the State of Florida; that this board had lawful authority to canvass the returns of the election from the several counties; that they had only the ministerial power to count the vote, to aggregate it as it came to them; that, however, they exercised judicial powers and undertook to inquire and determine whether the vote as cast was lawful or unlawful, and in the exercise of such power falsely and fraudulently rejected the whole vote of one county and the vote of many precincts in other counties in that State, and thus willfully and corruptly and unlawfully ascertained that the persons favorable to the election of the republican candidates were elected electors; that they did this in the face and defiance of repeated decisions of the supreme court of that State expressly deciding that this board had only ministerial powers, and not judicial powers; that if the vote had been duly counted then the candidates favorable to the democratic candidates would have been ascertained to be elected; that this board did not proceed according to the law of that State, and did not ascertain the result of the election there, and as a necessary consequence the returns from that State ought at least to have been rejected.

This opportunity will not allow me to advert specially to the cases of the returns from Louisiana and Oregon, but the decisions of the electoral commission in those cases are in several respects grossly erroneous for the like and other reasons.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I wish to correct a citation which the Senator from Oregon made from the decision of the supreme court of Rhode Island, or rather to enlarge it. Among the questions submitted to the supreme court were first as to the eligibility of the candidate for elector who held the office of centennial commissioner, and fourth to the election of the democratic candidate next highest on the list. Upon this point the supreme court said:

> We think the disqualification does not result in the election of the candidate next in vote, but in a failure to elect.

Mr. KELLY. I knew that, but I referred to the other point of their decision.

Mr. MORTON. I believe, Mr. President, it was not argued by anybody upon the commission that Cronin was elected; that Tilden had a vote in Oregon; but the minority of the commission took the ground that there were but two electors chosen in Oregon, and that Hayes had but two votes in that State. Watts was postmaster at La Fayette on the 7th day of November. It was argued therefore that he was not elected, that the election was a failure so far as he was concerned, and that but two were elected. On the 13th of November Watts resigned. On the 14th his resignation was accepted, and on the same day the office was transferred to another, and to another building. When the electors met on the 6th of December, Watts handed in his resignation as an elector, and was afterward chosen to fill the vacancy, and cast his vote. Although Watts was not a postmaster or an office-holder on the 6th of December when the electors voted it was argued that there was no such vacancy in the college of electors as that college had a right to fill, and therefore that the election by the college was a nullity.

On the other hand, Watts, Odell, and Cartwright received majorities of the people's votes ranging over 1,000 above their highest competitors. The secretary of state canvassed the vote on the 4th day of December, made his certificate of the result, showing the election of Odell, Cartwright, and Watts, which was filed in the office of the secretary of state. The secretary of state was the canvassing or returning officer for the State of Oregon. I read from the Oregon statutes:

> The county clerk, immediately after making the abstract of the votes given in his county, shall make a copy of each of said abstracts, and transmit it by mail to the secretary of state, at the seat of government; and it shall be the duty of the secretary of state, in the presence of the governor, to proceed within thirty days after the election, and sooner if the returns be all received, to canvass the votes given for secretary and treasurer of state, State printer, justices of the supreme court, member of Congress, and district attorneys; the governor shall grant a certificate of election to the person having the highest number of votes, and shall also issue a proclamation declaring the election of such person.

Now, in regard to the officers named including members of Congress it is declared that the secretary of state shall canvass the votes and that the governor shall issue a certificate to the persons having the highest number of votes. He is not a canvassing officer; his duty is simply ministerial, and it is made his peremptory duty to issue a certificate to the persons having the highest number of votes. The law makes the declaration as to who is elected. The law declares that the person having the highest number of votes is elected, and it requires no declaration upon the part of any officer of that result. Then I turn to the electoral law of Oregon. I first read the sixtieth section:

> The votes for the electors shall be given, received, returned, and canvassed as the same are given, returned, and canvassed for members of Congress.

That brings it directly under the law that I have read. The secretary of state, as in the case of members of Congress, is to be the returning officer, and the secretary of state is to return as elected the person having the highest numbers of votes as in the case of member of Congress. I read on:

> The secretary of state shall prepare two lists of the electors elected and affix the seal of the State to the same. Such lists shall be signed by the governor and secretary, and by the latter delivered to the college of electors at the hour of their meeting on such first Wednesday of December.—General Statutes, section 60, page 578.

The duty of the governor is imperative, to sign the list which is made out by the secretary of state, who, as in the case of members of Congress, is made the canvassing and returning officer. The governor is no part of the returning board, has nothing to do with the canvassing of the votes, but is absolutely required to sign the list made out by the secretary of state. Then I read section 59:

> The electors of President and Vice-President shall convene at the seat of government on the first Wednesday of December next after their election, at the hour of twelve of the clock at noon of that day, and if there shall be any vacancy in the office of an elector, occasioned by death, refusal to act, neglect to attend, or otherwise, the electors present shall immediately proceed to fill by viva voce and plurality of votes such vacancy in the electoral college, and when all the electors shall appear, or the vacancies of any shall have been filled as above provided, such electors shall proceed to perform the duties required of them by the Constitution and laws of the United States.—General Laws, section 59, page 578.

It was contended by a majority of the commission that this law authorized the college of electors, a majority, to fill a vacancy arising from any cause, from death, refusal to act, failure to attend, failure to elect, or from any cause that can be imagined.

It was the purpose to give the college of electors the right to fill any vacancy, so that the State of Oregon should be fully represented in the electoral college. The college of electors, the majority, exercised this unquestioned right. Watts on the 6th day of December was not a Federal office-holder; he was as completely qualified as any citizen in Oregon.

We hold, therefore, that it was wholly immaterial whether he was a postmaster on the 7th day of November or not; because if he was not a Federal office-holder on the 6th of December, if he was then qualified, that brought him within the meaning of the Constitution. His election was not invalidated any more than the election of a Senator would be who was elected before he was thirty years old, but was thirty years old when he took his seat.

But that question became immaterial because he resigned the office of postmaster before the 6th day of December, was completely qualified, and then the college of electors had the right to elect him to fill the vacancy.

To remove any doubts he himself resigned the office of elector, so as to make a vacancy in the electoral college certain, and then the college of electors, under the unquestionable authority of the law, elected him to fill the vacancy, so as to make the electoral college complete and lawful under all circumstances and in any view of the case.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President: Oregon meant to appoint the republican presidential electors.

The people of Oregon, by a plain and undenied majority, honestly and intentionally voted for the republican presidential electors.

Two certificates having been received from Oregon, the question of the count of her votes has been examined by the electoral commission.

A majority of the commission have sent us two things:

First; a decision that the vote ought to be counted as the people of the State really and honestly meant it to be counted and as they declared at the ballot-box it should be counted.

Second; a statement of reasons by which the decision was reached by the commissioners.

On the first matter thus reported, namely the decision that Oregon's vote should be counted as designed and directed by the people of Oregon, the Senate is required to express its judgment.

The form of this expression is proposed in the pending resolution—

That resolution does not, as I understand it, summon any Senator to express his opinion of the reasons assigned for the decision submitted to us.

I therefore say nothing about the argument or the reasons which appear in the paper read in the joint meeting to-day. Every Senator is entitled to his own argument, and his own mode of arriving at his opinion.

I believe Oregon's votes should speak as those who had the right and power to utter the voice of that State, meant they should speak.

My vote here will express this judgment; all beyond this I disclaim.

In the brief moments allotted to this discussion, an argument would not be possible; I shall therefore attempt no statement of my reasons.

Indeed, could an argument be made in the ten minutes given to each Senator, I would not attempt to make one.

I will do nothing to retard or defer for a moment the conclusion of the presidential count. On the contrary, I will in every lawful way hasten the proceeding, to the end that at the earliest hour the vote of the last State may be counted, and the result declared under the law, quietly, certainly, and conclusively.

I therefore surrender, in the interest of expedition, the remainder of my time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I shall not attempt to discuss the Oregon question, but I shall avail myself of this opportunity to express very briefly my opinions in reference to the conclusions of the commission. The time limited for debate will not allow a full expression of the grounds of dissent, nevertheless I shall not permit this opportunity to pass without at least entering my protest against the action of the commission, not only in reference to the case of Oregon but also in the cases of Louisiana and Florida. In the latter State every department of her government has expressed unqualified disapproval of the unwarranted and unauthorized action of the two returning officers who fraudulently certified the election of the Hayes electors. That the Tilden electors were fairly elected in Florida is now beyond question, and the proof of that fact was tendered to the commission. Yet ignoring the very right of the matter, the majority of the commission proclaim to the people of the country that their authority and power under the Constitution and laws as they existed at the time of the creation of the commission is insufficient to overcome technicalities and inquire into the fraudulent action of a returning board. This proclamation neither meets the demands of justice and right, nor the just expectation of the American people. On the contrary it subverts right, and throws the mantle of protection over fraud.

In the Louisiana case the decision of the commission is simply monstrous. In that State it is not denied that the majority for the Tilden electors was from six to nine thousand—a majority larger than that given for any party in more than one-half of the States of the Union.

It is not denied that the returning board, notorious for its fraudulent action on former occasions, rejected in violation of law and in disregard of the rights not only of the people of Louisiana, but of the people of the whole country, more that 10,000 democratic votes, and fraudulently certified the election of the Hayes electors.

I am aware that an excuse has been made in the Senate of the United States and elsewhere for the action of the returning board of Louisiana in rejecting this large number of democratic votes on the alleged ground that there had been violence and intimidation which prevented a free and fair election. I will take this opportunity to say in reply to all such excuses, that after having visited that State and spent five weeks in investigating this very question, the conclusion which I have arrived at is that there have been more perjuries committed to prove intimidation and justify the unauthorized, illegal, and fraudulent action of the returning board in rejecting democratic votes than there were persons in the State whose votes were influenced by intimidation.

The excuses which are made for the action of this returning board are almost I had like to have said as criminal as the action of the returning board itself, because they impute to the democratic party of that State, which was honestly seeking to have a peaceful and fair election, a disposition to use violence and murder and intimidation and encourage acts which no civilized people on the face of the earth would not condemn and disapprove. The people of Louisiana knew, and knew full well, that it was their interest to have a peaceful and quiet election, because they knew that this returning board upon the least excuse whatever would defeat the result of their efforts and throw out the votes cast in the election. But I have no time to go further into that matter.

It is not denied that two of the persons certified by this board as elected and who voted for Hayes were at the time of their appointment Federal office-holders and ineligible as electors under the Constitution of the United States on the 7th day of November last. The proof of fraud on the part of the returning board in the rejection of votes from nearly one-half the parishes of the State, as well as of the ineligibility of two electors, was not only tendered to but pressed upon the commission. Yet the commission decided that such proof was inadmissible, and closed its ears to the demand of the people of the country for an honest count of the votes and the rightful settlement of the dispute. The action of the corrupt returning board of Louisiana is interposed as an estoppel to the demands of justice enforced by the voice of more than half of the American people. What would my Lord Mansfield have said could such a case have come before his court? Would he have refused to inquire into fraud when the proof was tendered? No, sir; he would have awarded an investigation and demanded its exposure, even if it shook the throne or impeached the most solemn judgment of the House of Lords. Yet this commission has declared that no fraud, however patent and susceptible of proof, can be shown to impair the validity of the action of a canvassing board, which must remain, notwithstanding such fraud, firm and stable forever.

I shall say nothing of the personnel of the commission; but neither the high character of its members nor their official position can shield their decision from the criticism of their countrymen. The American people will not be satisfied; they ought not to be satisfied. It defeats for the time being our elective system of government and will greatly impair confidence in the permanency of free institutions. It will do more; it will bring reproach upon republican government among the nations of the earth. I can only enter in the time allowed my protest as a citizen and Senator against conclusions so monstrous and so violative of right.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, the question is too grave and too important to allow it to pass without entering my solemn protest against the decision of the commission. The time allowed to each Senator is too short to enter into any argument.

In the State of Florida a returning board, acting not only outside of the law but in violation of the law as decided by the supreme court of that State, I may say robbed the people of the State of Florida of the vote they had given to Tilden and transferred it to the other candidate. I repeat, this was done in violation of law as decided by the supreme court of that State. In the State of Louisiana a returning board, acting also outside of the law and in the most corrupt manner, which is notorious and known to the whole country, without law or authority also robbed the people of that State of a majority which they had given to Tilden of some 8,000 or 10,000 votes and transferred them to the other candidate. In the State of Oregon an elector who held office at the time he was voted for, and was thereby ineligible under the Constitution of the United States, is yet sustained as a legal elector because his vote was necessary to secure a majority to the republican candidate. Under this condition of facts it is my duty as a Senator to enter my protest against the conclusion arrived at by the commission.

Mr. President, I voted for the law creating the commission. I did it because we all saw that the votes of these three States would come before the joint session. We feared we were partisans with strong attachments for one side or the other, and fearing our impartiality, and not confident in our own strength to resist party influences, we decided to create a commission which we thought would occupy a higher plane, beyond the reach of party, and beyond the influence of any party feeling. Upon that tribunal we placed five of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, men eminent for their official position and for their high character. We thereby thought that we were creating a tribunal far beyond the reach of party or the influence of partisan feeling; but the country will have to decide whether this tribunal created by us has justly met the expectations of the majority of the two Houses of Congress who created it. Indeed, it will also have to decide whether the public expectation has been fairly and justly met.

In my opinion, the tribunal thus created was as much under the influence of party as the returning boards in Florida or in Louisiana. Indeed, I believe it was more so and more completely under the influence of partisan feeling than either of the returning boards of those States. Therefore, sir, I and those like myself who voted for the commission with this understanding and this just expectation are sadly disappointed, and I believe the country will be disappointed and the decision arrived at by the commission will not be sustained by a majority of the people of the United States.

By that decision a person is forced into the office of President of the United States not elected by the people, a person is to be inaugurated as the Chief Magistrate of this country against whom a popular majority of 300,000 stands recorded, and against whom a majority of the electors also voted; and yet by the judgment of this commission he is forced upon the people of this country as the Chief Magistrate of the nation.

Sir, to me it is the beginning of a new era, the beginning of a dark period for this country, presaging the greatest evils. It seems to me that we are in the condition of Rome under Augustus, when the dark shadow of the empire gradually rose above the horizon and cast its gloom over the world. Augustus, day by day, through his satellites and parasites and corrupt supporters and adherents, gradually absorbed in his hands all the power of the republic, and through these vile and unworthy instruments extended his government over the vast empire from the city to the most distant province and from the center to the circumference. The virtue of the old Roman had departed, and in its place a system of corruption was inaugurated. From that day the liberty of Rome was lost forever, and there was inaugurated that dark imperial despotism which swayed the scepter of the world for many long years. We have arrived at that period. We have passed and left behind us the days of the purity of our fathers. We openly disregard the will of the people, and by finesse and special pleading and chicanery and cunning and ability, as Augustus had, we subvert and defy their will and inaugurate in lieu of that fraud the most gigantic and notorious. The people of the United States will so understand it, and if there be anywhere the power to correct this and repudiate it it is with them, and it is to them I appeal. My hope, if any I have, is with them alone. We are making history. What we do here to-day will be recorded. The actors are known. Their names will be inscribed on its pages, and by that tribunal they will be judged. I feel as an American who would be willing to submit to any sacrifice for the glory and happiness of my country; that what we are now doing will be for all time anything but a bright page in the nation's history. I repeat, my hope is with the people, and with them alone; and to that tribunal I appeal.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, the conclusion of the commission in its decision upon the case of Oregon is so very clearly stated, with the reasons for that decision, that perhaps nothing need be added; but I wish to express very briefly my views upon one question arising out of the facts in that case.

It has been contended by the supporters of the governor of that State, to justify the appointment of the elector Cronin, that Watts was ineligible for election on the day of election; that therefore the election was void; and the election being void, there was no vacancy to be filled by the board of electors remaining; therefore, under the law of Oregon, the electors could not fill it.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the persons taking that position lose sight of one very important matter. The office of elector at the last election was not an office created on that occasion which had never been filled. The office of elector is an office established by the Constitution of the United States, and the office has existed ever since the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. It has been filled time and again by the various electors chosen at the presidential elections to perform the duties of that office. In the State of Oregon, at the presidential election preceding the one in November, the office of elector in that State was filled by the electors appointed at that time. The term of the electors terminated with the discharge of their duties on that occasion; and the office having then been filled, the functions of the office having been discharged by the electors then appointed, when they cease to discharge the duties of their office there is a vacancy, because the office has once been filled; the people were to fill that vacancy. Grant that the attempt to elect Watts was void, grant even that position, which I do not do by any means, then there is still a vacancy, and two electors having been appointed in November under the Constitution and laws, they had a right to fill the remaining vacancy in that office. This is not the case of an office created by law which has never been filled. Only in that case would the position apply which is urged by the opponents of the election of Watts. So that every ground which has been urged in this case is without foundation, and the attempt to defeat the vote of Oregon, not challenged as being impaired with any indirectness or fraud on the part of the people, by the party claiming to be democratic, is beyond all that I can conceive of as consistent, right, or honest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. WALLACE. I offer the following substitute; strike out all after the word "resolved" and insert:

That the vote of W. H. Odell, and the vote of J. C. Cartwright, cast for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President of the United States, and for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President of the United States, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the aforesaid Odell and Cartwright, and they only, were the persons duly appointed electors in the State of Oregon at the election held November 7, A. D. 1876, there having been a failure at the said election to appoint a third elector in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the laws of the State of Oregon, and that the two votes aforesaid should be counted, and none other, from the State of Oregon.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the vote in this matter; but it strikes my mind that it is a notable circumstance that not a single member of the commission countenanced and not a member of the Senate, so far as I have observed, has risen to defend the operations whereby Mr. Cronin was made an elector in the State of Oregon or the college which he created—not one. All that great preparation, all that machinery seems to have been constructed in vain. We are brought down to the simple question whether Watts at the time that he acted in the electoral college had a right to cast the vote of an elector of the State of Oregon. Mr. Cronin departs from the scene, and with him depart in the distance Mr. Patrick and the other agents who acted in the questionable manner that has been developed by the testimony taken by the committee of the Senate. I think this is well. The other course might, perhaps, have erected a precedent that would have led to consequences fatal in our future. We certainly have virtue enough to reject without distinction of party such bald, miserable schemes as this for imposing upon the will of a people.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. KELLY] alluded to a case in 15 California Reports, Searcy vs. Grow, and held that the doctrine inculcated in it would lead to the conclusion that Watts was not only ineligible at the time of his election by the people, but ineligible at the time he was chosen by the college of Oregon to fill a vacancy existing. I do not think that is a fair deduction from the language of that decision. It may tend to show that at the time of the election by the people, although they were ignorant of the disqualification of the man whom they elected, this disqualification did prevail and that he was not elected. But this decision does not show or countenance the idea that the power of the people was exhausted in the election and could not continue and empower the college to act in selecting Watts or any other man to fill a vacancy which might exist. The supreme court of California in this case says:

We do not see how the fact that he became capable of taking the office—

That is, the person claiming it, and by resignation—

after they—

had exhausted their power, can avail the appellant. If he was not eligible at the time the votes were cast for him, the election failed.

Now, admit that that is good law, the people did not exhaust their power at the time they voted in November for electors, because they had provided by a careful statute that if any accident happened in that electoral college on the day of meeting, by which a person did not appear there from any cause, "otherwise" being the word used, and being equivalent to the words "any cause" used in the statute of Virginia, the people would still preserve their entire power to repair the loss in their college and secure their full vote in making a President of the United States. All the States had done this with more or less perfectness. Some of them, as in the case of Rhode Island, had so framed their law that if the person voted for were ineligible, and therefore was not elected, then there was no power in the college to fill that vacancy. The statute of Vermont was liable to the same criticism. The supreme court in the one case and the Legislature in the other ascertained these defects and they were remedied by the passage of appropriate general laws. But suppose that general law had been passed by the State before the occasion arose, would anyone say that it would not operate as much as if it was passed after the occasion arose? If there could be a difference in the degree of respect accorded to the respective cases, the statute which was made for general purposes and before a particular case arose should have more sanction, more authority, more respect than one that was made in the presence of the case and where it might be dictated by party expediency.

The State of Oregon had provided in the amplest manner for filling a vacancy in case the people themselves should fail to elect, or in case the man elected failed to attend or in any way was incapacitated. The law of the State is clear and plain, and is as perfect as that of any State. Now, the people of that State have acted in perfect good faith under valid and adequate laws. Shall their will be defeated?

Who stand on the equitable side of this proposition; those who are claiming that it is not right that one-third of the voice of the people of a State shall be deprived of a hearing, or those who contend for the opposite? Why, sir, each Senator must judge for himself as to his course of duty; but it seems strange to me that the Senator from Oregon has for months tried by various means and finally by his concluding argument, which was characterized by considerable ability, to prevent the voice of his State being fully heard. He would deprive his State of its due and adequate voice. It might do him injustice to say that this is because that voice is against his party affiliations. I will not assume to judge him. But other Senators who cannot have any personal connection with this matter might admit that it is a great hardship to a State, to be avoided if by any equitable means it can be by any construction which can be by reasonable intendment applied—it is a great hardship to deprive a State of representation in the electoral college. It is a degradation of the State, that should not result from hair-splitting. Rather let the honest voice of the State be heard, unless party behests are stronger than right. Justice demands it; decency compels it.

Is not that the case? Is not that the real equity of the matter? Ought we not to construe these statutes beneficially in favor of the remedy, in favor of preserving the right of a State and its voice in the highest function that a State can perform, that of the selection of President of the United States?

Now, it is not the question here what may have been done in Louisiana or what may have been done in Florida. That may have been done rightly or wrong ully. The eight who voted in those matters and in this may have been partisans and the seven who voted the other way may have been non-partisan. That is not the question. The question now is when a State in the Union, entitled to as much rights as California, New York, Illinois, or any other State, has in its laws provided a way in which a vacancy in its college shall be filled, and that vacancy has been filled by a person eligible at that time, whether the will of the State shall be fairly carried out, whether equity shall prevail, and such construction be placed on its laws and its obligations as to give it its natural voice.

It seems to me that under ordinary circumstances and removed from the case which now shadows us, which now clouds us in this Capitol and in the country generally, there would be very little difference of opinion on a matter like this. I trust the votes will show that there is less difference at the present time than mere partisans expect and seek.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I believe I have one minute left.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has spoken once. He cannot speak again.

Mr. MORTON. I thought I had a minute left.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A Senator can speak but once, no matter how much of his time he occupies when on the floor. He cannot exceed ten minutes.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, when I cast most reluctantly my vote for the electoral commission bill, I did it with the declaration in this body that I deemed it a democratic surrender; but in response to the appeal from the country for an "honest count" and in the belief that men could be found who preferred that there should be neither stultification nor dishonor connected, in any way, with the presidential office, and that the "true and lawful vote" of every State should be ascertained, I abandoned my own views and supported that measure.

The ministerial duty of discovering, by inspection of the papers, which was the true and lawful vote of a State, I had supposed, was lodged in the President of the Senate, but on all sides came up the denial that such a tremendous power as ascertaining the true and lawful vote could reside anywhere but in the two Houses of Congress. Testimony as to the eligibility of electors, fraud in the elections, villainy of the returning boards, and the whole subject of the presidential election had been raked over as with a harrow, by congressional committees in all the disputed States. We were told that the investigation of this important and all-absorbing question, beneath which lay the peace and the prosperity of millions of people, must be submitted to a grand commission composed of five Senators and five Representatives, and the infusion of a non-partisan judicial element must be put into it by withdrawing from the Supreme Court of the United States and adding to the commission five of its judges.

Well, Mr. President, what, in the language of the law, was this commission to do? To consider and decide—

Whether any and what votes from each State are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and how many and what persons were duly appointed electors in such States.

These are the words of the law, and so the people understood it when they indorsed our support of this bill. The people believed that this high commission was appointed for the express purpose of going into the inquiry and ascertaining what were the real and lawful votes of every State in this Union. They were beaten in a game of confidence. They trusted implicitly that from this high commission there would come the truth, the real truth, and nothing but the truth. The people did not understand the fine language of legal construction. They did not know that two little words were to defeat all that they had hoped for, and after the mountain had been in labor it would bring forth a mouse.

The commission—

So reads the law—

Shall proceed to consider the same with the same powers, if any, now possessed for that purpose by the two Houses acting separately or together," &c.

And here again—

and may therein take into view such petitions, depositions, and other papers, "if any," as shall by the Constitution and now existing law be competent and pertinent in such consideration.

Mr. President, the plain people did not understand that those two little words "if any" had been injected into the body of their great hope. So when Florida and Louisiana came before this extraordinary tribunal, all the "depositions and other papers," except the bare certificates and their accompanying papers, were not to be "considered and taken into view," and proof of fraud and crime, bribery and political corruption, and everything except what spoke for the republican candidates, were aliunde the ascertainment of an "honest count." And now for Oregon: that power, which before was merely ministerial, and not judicial, at once assumes the nicest exercise of judgment, and the certificate of the governor, positively required under the act of 1792, becomes aliunde, and the Watts certificate, without the governor's authentication, constitutes the paper title for the three electoral votes of Oregon. The people of Oregon had no right to elect a disqualified person as elector. The power of the State was coupled with the restriction.

"You may choose electors, but not Federal officers." That is a condition-precedent to the operation of the power. The power does not exist if you violate the inhibition. To prevent its violation, and in aid of the officers who were to recognize State electors, the act of 1792, passed by many of the men who framed the Constitution, commanded the executive authority of the State to certify to three lists of "the names of the electors," and under the constitution of Oregon the governor is sworn to obey the Constitution and laws of the United States. That is the "supreme law of the land." The governor of Oregon obeyed the Federal law and respected his oath in refusing to enter the name of Watts in the list of electors; for he would have been false to his duty had he certified to an elector who he knew was "incapable of being elected."

And now we are told by a majority of this electoral tribunal that Watts was eligible, and by the force of this one vote, cast in plain violation of the Constitution, Rutherford B. Hayes is to be President of the United States for the next four years.

Florida torn from Mr. Tilden by the plainest perversion of the law; Oregon captured in defiance of the clear inhibition of the Constitution, and Louisiana wrung from its people, who, by a majority of 10,000, repudiated the republican candidate! By such instrumentalities as these he is to be inducted into the presidential office, but, in the eyes of the people, he takes the commission to that exalted station stained and blackened with the most glaring frauds that ever disgraced a civilized country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything further on the Oregon question, and especially I had not intended to say anything at this time, nor would I were it not for the fact that my colleague, [Mr. KELLY,] in the criticism that he offered to the finding of the commission, had so misrepresented—I will not say willfully, but, out of charity, inadvertently—the decision of the commission in reference to this matter. Nor would I yet say anything were it not for the fact known to me and not known generally to the Senate that the remarks of my colleague upon this occasion and the criticisms offered by him will be telegraphed and published all over the State of Oregon, when perhaps the explanations offered by the Senator from Indiana, the Senator from California, and others will not find their way before the people of that State.

I understand my colleague, in the objection that he has urged, to imply that the commission decided that, if a person who is ineligible to be appointed presidential elector afterward resigns the position that made him ineligible, therefore that made him an eligible person at the time he casts his vote. I do not understand that the commission decided any such thing. The commission did decide, however, that, even granting for the argument that Mr. Watts was ineligible at the time of the election by reason of the fact that he at that time held an office of trust and profit under the United States, if before he cast his vote for President and Vice-President he resigned the office that made him ineligible, and also resigned his commission as presidential elector, and then the vacancy occasioned by this latter resignation was filled by the electors present, these facts taken together did make him eligible and that the vote cast is good. That I understand to be the decision of the tribunal, and I indorse it to the fullest extent.

Mr. President, a few days since a committee of this body authorized by a resolution of the Senate to investigate all the facts in relation to this electoral controversy in Oregon submitted a report to the Senate. It was my desire to have that report incorporated in the RECORD. Objection was made from the democratic side of the House, although on the very same day I find voluminous reports from investigating committees copied in the RECORD. I cannot state my indorsement of the findings of the commission in this case better than by reading, which I propose to do, the conclusions of that committee in that report, a committee of the Senate composed of sixteen members of this honorable body, and that report indorsed by a majority of that committee:

The committee summarize their conclusions of fact and law as follows:

1. John W. Watts was at the date of the election, November 7, 1876, a postmaster at La Fayette, Yam Hill County, Oregon, of the fourth class; the appointment of which is not presidential, but exclusively in the power of the Postmaster-General. That such office is one of trust and profit under the United States.

2. That the whole number of voters receiving and forwarding their mail through this post-office did not exceed one hundred.

3. That the fact that he was postmaster was not generally known in the State, or in any part of it outside of his own precinct, until several days after his election. Nor does it appear affirmatively that any voter who voted for Watts knew that the fact of his being postmaster disqualified him from being appointed an elector.

4. That his (Watts's) majority in the State over Cronin was 1,049 votes.

5. That Watts resigned his office as postmaster on the 13th November, 1876, and his successor was appointed on the 23d of the same month. Watts's resignation was accepted by the Postmaster-General on the 14th November, 1876, and on the same day J. B. Underwood, special agent of the Post-Office Department, took possession of the office under special directions from the Postmaster-General, at which day Watts ceased to discharge the duties of postmaster.

6. That on the 4th of December, 1876, the secretary of state, who under the laws of Oregon is the canvassing officer, canvassed the votes for presidential elector in the presence of the governor, as provided by law, and officially declared that Odell, Cartwright, and Watts, the republican candidates, had received the highest number of votes.

7. That Governor Grover issued his certificate to Odell, Cartwright, and Cronin, instead of to Odell, Cartwright, and Watts, the persons whom the secretary of state declared officially had received the highest number of votes.

8. That the governor placed such certificates in the hands of the secretary of state in triplicate, each copy containing the three names Odell, Cartwright, and Cronin, a short time before the meeting of the electoral college on the same day; and he, the secretary of state, delivered all three thereof to said Cronin, who refused, although repeatedly requested to do so by both Odell and Cartwright, to deliver such certificates, or any of them, to Odell and Cartwright, or either of them, or exhibit them for inspection or otherwise.

9. That upon failure and peremptory refusal upon the part of Cronin to either deliver or exhibit such certificates, or any of them, to either Odell or Cartwright before or after the organization of the college, or to the electoral college after the same had organized, although repeatedly requested to do so by the individual members of the college, both before and after the same had organized, and also by the president of the college in pursuance of a vote of the college, said Watts tendered his resignation as an elector, which resignation was accepted by the college, then constituted by Odell and Cartwright; whereupon, and upon the withdrawal of Cronin to another portion of the room to declare vacancies and organize a college of his own, the electors present, Odell and Cartwright, filled the vacancy in the office of elector, by a viva voce and plurality of votes, by appointing John W. Watts such elector. That the college thus organized voted by ballot for President and

Vice-President of the United States, resulting in three votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President, and three votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President.

10. That Cronin, after his refusal to deliver or exhibit the certificates of the governor, and before Odell and Cartwright had appointed Watts to fill the vacancy in the office of elector, withdrew to a further corner of the room occupied by the electors and declared or attempted to declare two vacancies in the office of elector, and immediately filled them, or attempted to fill them by the appointment of J. N. T. Miller and John Parker, two democrats, neither of whom had received any votes whatever for elector, at the election on the 7th November; after which these three, Cronin, Miller, and Parker, claiming to be an electoral college, cast two votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President, and two votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President, and one vote for Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, for President, and one vote for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice-President; said Cronin voting for Tilden and Hendricks, and Miller and Parker respectively for Hayes and Wheeler.

11. That a conspiracy was entered into among leading democratic managers in New York, California, and Oregon for the purpose of depriving the majority of the people of the State of Oregon of their choice for President and Vice-President, and securing one electoral vote for the democratic candidate for President by the refusal on the part of Governor Grover to issue a certificate to Watts and by issuing it to Cronin, regardless of law or the right of the case; which conspiracy was, so far as in their power, executed by the refusal of the governor to issue to Watts a certificate and by his issuing it to Cronin.

12. That in pursuance of this conspiracy large amounts of money were sent to Oregon by the democratic managers in New York, and at the request of the democratic managers in Oregon, which moneys were used improperly and corruptly in furthering such conspiracy, the sum of $3,000 in gold coin of such moneys having been paid to and received by said Cronin; $3,000 more of such moneys having been paid to Hill, Durham, and Thompson, of Portland, Oregon, ostensibly for their services as lawyers, but in fact to subsidize the daily and weekly Oregonian, the leading newspaper of the State claiming to be republican, and of which W. Lair Hill, one of said law firm, is editor, into a defense of the action sought to be accomplished through such conspiracy.

That this conspiracy to defraud the people of a State and nation out of their choice for President and Vice-President, marked as it was at every step by intrigue, corruption, and fraud, setting aside law and precedent, ignoring in its inception and execution the grandest idea upon which our Government rests—the will of the majority as expressed at the ballot-box—had its origin in the family of Samuel J. Tilden, the democratic candidate for President, and with a member of that family, W. T. Pelton, who was also, at the time, secretary of the national democratic committee. And if Samuel J. Tilden was not himself a party to and had no knowledge of the scheme, then it must be said that he was ignorant of what was transpiring in his own household in reference to a transaction which was intended to establish his title to the Chief Magistracy of the nation; as most, if not all, the dispatches addressed to and sent by W. T. Pelton in reference to this matter passed in and out of the door of Mr. Tilden's residence, No. 15 Gramercy Park, New York City, to and from his own nephew, member of his own family, sleeping under his roof, and dining at his table. Besides, it must also be said, if he was not a party, that he was ignorant of a dispatch sent to him from Portland, Oregon, on December 1, purporting to come from Governor Grover, but which was in the handwriting of J. H. N. Patrick, in the same cipher used by Patrick, Pelton, and others, informing him (Tilden) six days in advance, that the action of Governor Grover would be just what it proved to be when the six days had elapsed.

As conclusions of law, the committee find—

1. Conceding Watts to have been ineligible to be appointed an elector, it is clear this fact could not, under any possible state of circumstances, much less under the circumstances of this case, operate to elect Cronin, a minority candidate.

2. That Governor Grover, in assuming to determine this question of the ineligibility of Watts, acted without his jurisdiction, and his act was ultra vires and void.

3. That the certificate of the governor is no part of the appointment of an elector; that it is simply evidence of an appointment, but not a conclusive one, and may be inquired into by the counting tribunal and disregarded or set aside, either in whole or in part, for mistake or fraud.

4. That the college represented by Odell and Cartwright was the only and true electoral college in Oregon, and the votes cast by it for President and Vice-President should be counted.

5. That the action of the secretary of state in canvassing the vote for electors and declaring who had received the highest number of votes is in this case, under the laws of Oregon, conclusive as to the persons appointed electors, and cannot be questioned either by the governor in issuing a certificate or by any other tribunal.

6. That the record made to the President of the Senate through the certificate of the college of electors represented by Odell, Cartwright, and Watts, the persons declared by the secretary of state to have received the highest number of votes, is conclusive upon the point as to whether there was any vacancy in the college, and as to how and by whom and with whom such vacancy was filled, and cannot now be questioned by the President of the Senate, either House of Congress, or the electoral tribunal.

7. That admitting Watts to have been ineligible to appointment as an elector, having received the highest number of votes and having taken his seat in the electoral college, participating in its proceedings, and having voted for President and Vice-President, the question of his ineligibility never having been raised or passed upon by any competent tribunal prior to that time, his act was that of an officer de facto acting under color of title and being clothed with all the insignia of office, is therefore binding and effectual as to third persons and the public, binding upon the people whose votes he received at the polls, binding on the electors present whose votes he received in his appointment to fill a vacancy, binding and effective as to the candidates for President and Vice-President for whom he cast his vote as an elector, binding upon the State and the nation, the Legislature and Congress, and cannot now be questioned by any power on earth.

8. That the resignation of Watts as an elector created a vacancy in the office of elector, which could be legally filled under the statutes of Oregon by the electors present; and it was their duty under the statute to fill such vacancy, and it was so legally filled by them.

9. That conceding Cronin to have been an elector, (which we deny,) his refusal to exhibit or deliver to the college of electors his certificate from the governor, or to deliver or exhibit to Odell or Cartwright their certificates wrongfully retained and in his possession, and his withdrawing and organizing a college of his own, was upon his part such a "refusal to act," within the meaning of the statute of Oregon, as to occasion a vacancy in the office of elector, which Odell and Cartwright could, under the statutes of Oregon, legally fill, and which it was their duty to fill. And it is immaterial to inquire, in so far as the effect of the action of Odell and Cartwright is concerned, whether the vacancy filled by them by the appointment of Watts was occasioned in fact and in law by Watts's resignation or by Cronin's refusal to act. In either view of the case there was a vacancy, and it was the duty of Odell and Cartwright to fill it. And the fact that Cronin attempted to organize a college of his own, is conclusive against him on this point.

10. That the electors present, Odell and Cartwright, in determining as to whether a vacancy existed in the office of elector, and in filling such vacancy, were under no obligation in law to inquire as to whom the governor had issued his certificate as the third elector, whether to Watts or Cronin. It was enough for them to know that there was a vacancy, occasioned either by Cronin refusing to act or Watts's resignation, it is immaterial which; and there being such a vacancy, in any possible view of the case, whether Cronin or Watts was the one legally appointed, the electors present had the right, and it was their duty, to appoint such person as they saw proper to fill it; and the record of their action in that regard is conclusive and cannot be inquired into.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I am surprised that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] should avail himself of an occasion like this and under circumstances which restrain us in debate to attempt to insinuate fraud on the part of Samuel J. Tilden, of New York. I am the more surprised, sir, because Mr. Tilden and his friends and that party with which he acts have struggled from the beginning of this contest about the electoral vote to have a tribunal that would unearth fraud and condemn it, and let no candidate receive a vote by such means. The Senator from Oregon and his political friends have voted constantly to sustain the decision of a tribunal which says it will not look into allegations of fraud to affect this vote; and my political friends and I have voted against that decision. He has voted to close the door to any investigation of alleged frauds; he votes to sustain the decision of the commission that they cannot examine into frauds by which electoral votes were procured; and yet, doing that and having the benefit of that position, he can come here and read from a report that is not yet before us in print, with the purpose of throwing dirt at the candidate of the democratic party at the last election. The imputation is unjust; it is untrue; it is unfair. I have been from the beginning in favor of looking into fraud in Louisiana, Florida, Oregon, and wherever it was alleged to exist. I said, let us reject the vote that is obtained by fraud; such a vote should never be cast for a President, much less should it elect a President.

A few words on this subject of fraud. In November after the election President Grant said in a public document that there must be a fair and honest count of the votes. He said further to the public, that the man who would take the office of President stained with a well-grounded suspicion that he took the office by a title procured by fraud was unworthy of being the President of these United States. I agreed to that then; I agree to it now. His sentiments on this subject were received with approval by the mass of honest men of both parties throughout the United States. In January, when the suspicion as to illegality and fraud as to the electoral vote of Louisiana especially had strengthened instead of abated, we passed a law constituting a tribunal that could investigate allegations of fraud, that could throw out votes which were procured by fraud, that could say which were honest votes after investigating, that could bring a President in without tincture of fraud as to his title if they would examine into the facts. That law was received with great favor by the great mass of men of both parties of the country, because they believed that the execution of that law would throw out votes which were fraudulent and manufactured, and that the votes counted if they should elect the President would be honest votes, and the people would feel that their Government had not been dishonored and their country disgraced by well-grounded suspicion that manufactured and fraudulent votes elected a President rather than the real votes of the citizens. That was the reason, in my judgment, that this law was received with favor.

But, sir, has the decision of the commission relieved the country from this feeling which existed as to fraud? The votes of Louisiana elect a President, and do the honest mass of both parties feel that it is an election by the people of the United States, or by the majority of the votes cast in Louisiana? No, sir. All evidence to prove that the returning board in Louisiana on the action of which Mr. Kellogg's certificate was based had no jurisdiction to decide the question whether votes should be thrown out or not for certain reasons; all evidence to show that the returning board acted corruptly, illegally, and fraudulently in rejecting ten or twelve thousand votes cast and giving the certificates to the republican candidates, was shut out. We have no relief from this suspicion of fraud, and to-day your President comes in by the decision of this commission, resting his title on the votes as returned by J. Madison Wells and his three associates in Louisiana.

Early in the proceedings of that body I learn that they determined that the certificate of the governor based upon the return of the returning or canvassing board was conclusive; and although they found a State saying "We will prove to you that the governor and returning board conspired to give a false certificate to men who were not elected," they decided that they could not hear that evidence and could not reject the vote. That it must be counted. Sir, we have therefore not had what I trusted we would have, a decision that would relieve us all, no matter which candidate it brought in, from the fear, the uneasiness, the suspicion that false and manufactured votes in a downtrodden State, made up fraudulently by dishonest men, should turn the scale and elect the President.

Now, sir, I am one of those who believe in standing by the Constitution and the laws. I am one of those who have felt that the people of this country can take care of this Government in the long run through the ballot-box. I am against disorder; I am against revolutionary means. I say to the people of the country, this is your Government; elections will quickly come around again; be true to yourselves and your country, and in the elections in the States hereafter, and in the presidential election which is to occur hereafter at no distant day, you will be able to put the result beyond the power of dishonest, fraudulent returning boards in every State of this Union. In this is my faith and hope. I am against fraud. I am amazed that men will aid in shutting the doors against showing it where it exists. I hoped this law and the commission created by it would vindicate truth and justice and rebuke fraud if it existed; and that by its action the country would be relieved from the apprehension that bold, corrupt men could defeat the will of the people and elect a President by trickery and fraud. A President will come in being elected by the electoral votes of Louisiana, given by the electors certified by the returning board after an offer to show that the certificates of their election were false and fraudulent. This is an evil, but it is an evil which the mass of the people at the ballot-box can, and I believe will, remedy, and warn dishonest men of all parties against hereafter attempting to manufacture votes to elect a President of the United States against the will of the people.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, in the brief time allotted me under this law, while I might find some fault with the law as attempted to be enforced against the constitutional rights of the Senate, I shall not undertake to discuss this question. At another time, in this place and in another place, I will discuss this question.

But, sir, while I agree in part with what has been said by my distinguished friend from New York, [Mr. KERNAN,] I do not agree to all that he has said. He trusts to the people, to the ballot-box. Sir, the people trust to us here first. Here it is for us to do our duty. Let us do it.

Mr. President, I should not have risen upon this occasion except that my friend, my cherished friend from Kentucky, now out of his seat by illness, [Mr. STEVENSON,] said the other day that he thanked God there was such unanimity in the vote of the democracy of the Senate upon the bill creating the electoral commission. I regret that my friends around me—many of whom like my friend from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] and others felt as I felt on that occasion, I know—did not see fit to vote with me, but I thank God that He endued me with the strength necessary to stand by my own constitutional convictions.

Sir, the manifest will of the people of the United States has been defeated by the action of this unwarranted, unconstitutional commission. I say unwarranted by the Constitution of the United States. Sir, there was a duty devolving upon the Senate and the House of Representatives, and that duty Congress abandoned. Thirty years of political life, thirty years of political thought have convinced me that it is always safest to stand by the Constitution. Talk was made and reports came up here that doubtless influenced many members of this and the other House of Congress that the people demanded a commission, that the people demanded something new. Sir, I deny it now, as I denied it by my vote. What the people demanded at our hands was to exercise the duty which the Constitution devolved upon us. And now, while I know I differ with my distinguished friend from New York, and may differ with every other man in this Chamber, I do not hesitate to say here that if I had in the hollow of my hand the power of the House of Representatives, I would say to this unconstitutional commission, "Thus far mayest thou go, but no farther." They have refused to do the only thing that permitted them to be constituted; they have refused to go behind fraudulent returning boards. It is not for me to tell the House of Representatives what their duty is. They would not listen to me if I were to attempt it, nor would I arrogate any such function; but I say on my honor before God that if I had the power of that House, I would stop the action of this returning board, for I call it a returning board. Think of it! Refuse to investigate frauds in Louisiana, refuse to investigate frauds in Florida; refuse to go behind the certificate of the governor in one State and go right behind it in another! I may not blame them for going behind this last certificate. I am not very clear what I would have done in that matter. It is a matter of no earthly consequence in regard to that. They saw fit to go behind that because it was necessary to elect their man, while they did not see proper to go behind the action of a returning board rotten to the heart, if it had a heart. They refused to go behind that and refused to look into the election returns in Florida, which they knew had just seated a democratic governor, all parties conceding his election, now in power, now performing the executive duties of that State. If they had gone behind that action, Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, would have been declared, as he has been elected, President of the United States.

Sir, at another time I propose to discuss this question fully. I simply rose to-day for the purpose of vindicating the vote which I gave here weeks ago. If it was to be taken over again, I do not think I should stand alone on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I do not deem that I should be doing justice either to myself or to the section which I represent if I did not raise my voice on this occasion in reprobation and disapproval of the decision which has been reached by the commission in the investigation of this presidential question. It is useless for me to give expression to the deep sentiment of disappointment which pervades my heart when I contrast the consequences which have resulted from the action of the commission with the hopes, the aspirations, and the expectations of the people of this great country when the commission was appointed.

The people of this country had then the right to expect that this high judicial tribunal would bring to the investigation of the case before them an absolute judicial fairness, so far at least as the persons who composed that commission were drawn from the highest judicial tribunal of the land. They had a right to expect that they would establish some principle of law by which every question should be adjudicated and upon which each decision would be predicated. But what do we find? Did any such rule prevail? Was any such principle established? On the contrary, their rulings are on one side or the other, just as the necessities of party may prompt; and to sustain this assertion I quote from their official proceedings the rulings in two or three instances. In the Florida case we find that this order was made:

Ordered, That no evidence will be received or considered by the commission which was not submitted to the joint convention of the two Houses by the President of the Senate with the different certificates, except such as relates to the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys, one of the electors.

This was decided in the affirmative—yeas 8, nays 7. Then, on motion of Mr. Commissioner ABBOTT, it was Ordered, That in the case of Florida the commission will receive evidence relating to the eligibility of Frederick C. Humphreys, one of the persons named in certificate No. 1, as elector.

Very good. Here is a decision of the commission that they had the constitutional right and authority to go behind the returns and receive evidence as to eligibility of an elector. When it came to Louisiana the same question arose, and what was the order of the commission? Mr. Commissioner BAYARD offered the following as a substitute for a resolution previously offered:

Resolved, That no person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States is eligible to be appointed an elector, and that this commission will receive evidence tending to prove such ineligibility as offered by counsel for objectors to certificates 1 and 3.

The question being on the adoption of the substitute, it was decided in the negative.

Precisely antagonistic and directly contrary to the previous decision, and by a similar vote, with the exception of one, Mr. Justice Bradley voting to receive evidence in the case of Florida and voting against receiving any evidence in the case of Louisiana.

Now, sir, I will not allege that the action of the commission was controlled by the fact that in the Florida case the ineligibility could not be sustained, because proof had been published to the world that at the time Humphreys was appointed an elector he had resigned the office which he previously held and that therefore the objection to him would be untenable, and that the contrary condition existed in the case of Louisiana; but the fact remains, that the same commission ruled diametrically opposite in the one case to what they ruled in the other. Again, in the case of Florida they ruled:

That it is not competent under the Constitution and the law, as it existed at the date of the passage of said act, to go into evidence aliunde on the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the governor of the State of Florida, in and according to the determination and declaration of their appointment by the board of State canvassers of said State prior to the time required for the performance of their duties, had been appointed electors, or by counter-proof to show that they had not, and that all proceedings of the courts or acts of the Legislature, or of the executive of Florida, subsequent to the casting of the votes of the electors on the prescribed day are inadmissible for any such purpose.

Such was the ruling in the case of Florida; that ruling was reiterated in the case of Louisiana; and yet when we come to Oregon we find that the broad seal of the State (which possessed so much sanctity in the case of Louisiana and Florida that it could not be questioned, and that no issue could be raised upon any paper covered thereby) afforded no protection and possessed no sanctity whatever.

Again it is argued, and with great force, and I admit the cogency of the argument, and subscribe to it, that in this case of Oregon the great paramount duty was to see that the voice of the people as expressed at the polls had found its utterance in the electoral college and that the electors who had been selected by the people as the exponents of their political faith should exercise the power with which they were therein invested. The popular voice, in other words, is permitted to control the case in Oregon; but in Louisiana the popular voice is ignored, and by the fraudulent action of a returning board, a board of such character that I shall not now attempt to describe it. Here then the popular voice which it is not denied was uttered at the polls, giving at least eight thousand majority to the electors of their choice, is utterly ignored and destroyed by the action of the returning board.

Now, sir, I am not unaware of the fact that attempts have been made to draw a distinction and to show that in the case of Florida the question of the eligibility of the elector was considered as to the time he cast his electoral vote and not at the time of the election by the people, which was not the case in the other State. Well, sir, I have read you the ruling in the one case and in the other, and you find that no such distinction is expressed upon the official records of this commission at all, but they stand precisely and identically upon the same footing.

I subscribe fully to the doctrine uttered by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] and the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] and other Senators upon this floor, that in questions of doubt we should always give the preference to that man or that candidate who the facts satisfy us represents the choice of the people and the voice of the people. All I ask is that the application of the principle should be uniform, and the same rule should be applied in the one State as in the other.

The effect of this decision upon the people will be most unhappy. Dissatisfaction is already spreading throughout the length and breadth of the land such alarm, such consternation, such dissatisfaction as has never before been witnessed in this country; and the most dexterous hair-splitting, the most ingenious sophistry can never deceive the people. No, sir, they cannot recognize, and will refuse, I undertake here to say, forever to recognize any of the fine-spun legal subtleties with which this great wrong and outrage is sought to be covered up, and "all that sage or sophist ever writ" will fail to satisfy them that the decisions of this commission have not been partisan in the extreme, and controlled by considerations of party fealty and party policy alone, and in violation of every principle of justice, of equity, and of fair dealing.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I am unwilling to cast a silent vote upon this great question. After listening with much interest to what has been said by distinguished Senators here, I am not satisfied to sit quietly and let this question pass by without giving my views in regard to it. The Senator from New York who sits farthest from me [Mr. CONKLING] said a while ago that this was a case which had a great equity in it, a case in which the voice of the people should be permitted to control; and I agree with him to a certain extent; but, sir, on the very same principle that the voice of the people of Oregon should be permitted to control, so the voice of the people of Florida should have been permitted to control. Has it been the case? We know it was otherwise from the records of this Senate, which present the most indisputable evidence to the contrary that the voice of the people of my State has not been heard in this great contest; or, if heard, has not been respected. I say it, sir, with all due deference to the commission which has rendered the judgment which we are now called upon to review and the judgment in the case of Florida which practically disfranchised the majority of the voters of that State.

What is the law of that State as announced by her highest tribunal? It was, as I had occasion to say in a previous discussion, that the vote actually cast under all the restrictions of law prescribed by her legislative authority should determine the popular choice. Has that been the case? No, sir. The Supreme Court, our highest tribunal, to which we look for protection and security and safety, held—and, as I said also when I spoke here before, through a majority of judges who are republican—that the law of that State was that the vote actually cast at the polls should be held to determine the election. The vote of Florida as cast at the polls indicated that the people had selected the Tilden electors, and I say here that, if they had decided otherwise and had indicated their choice to be Rutherford B. Hayes, and an attempt was made by my party to deprive him of his just rights, I would have repudiated it, if it were the last act of my life.

Now, sir, what is the question here? We have been told by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] that Mr. Watts resigned his office as elector. I have heard no Senator intimate to whom such a resignation, under the laws of Oregon or under the laws of the United States, could be tendered. To whom can an elector resign his position? Will gentlemen answer me? Is there any provision in the Statutes of the United States, in the Constitution of the United States, in the laws of Oregon which provides for a resignation of that description?

Mr. SARGENT. He resigns to the power that can fill the vacancy.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is a new principle of law. I never heard it announced before.

Mr. SARGENT. It is a universal principle of law.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I disagree with the Senator from California on that subject. My understanding of the law on that subject is that the power which appoints is the only power that can receive a resignation. That is the universal doctrine, and it was the doctrine laid down in the case of General Shields, to which allusion has been repeatedly made on this floor, that the power which appoints is the power that accepts a resignation. I know then of no authority to receive the resignation of an elector.

But it is clearly my opinion that there were but two electors elected in the case of Oregon. I want it distinctly understood that I place my vote upon that ground, without the least disposition to do injustice to the people of that State. The Constitution of the United States says that—

> Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

What is the meaning of this clear language? It says to the people of the several States: "You may elect electors equal in number to your congressional delegation on one condition"—because it is all here in the same sentence—"provided you will not select any man who occupies an office of trust or profit under the United States." That is the condition which the Constitution has coupled with this power, and the States to-day possess no authority to elect electors but what they derive from article 2, section 1, of the Constitution, which I have just read.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me? I heard him ask the Senator from California the question about whom the electors resigned to. I should like to put this question to him: whether if a member of Congress in the House of Representatives should send his resignation to the Speaker, the Senator would not consider that a good resignation?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I would not.

Mr. LOGAN. It has been so decided by the House of Representatives, however.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have the opinion of high authority to the contrary, right in my hand.

Mr. LOGAN. I was not talking about any individual, but I can give the Senator an instance where the House received the resignation of a member and it was considered a good resignation. I can give the name of the member and the circumstance. It has been done frequently.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. In the case of General Shields, which has been referred to so often, and that too by the Senator from Illinois who has just interrupted me, it was held that a resignation of the office of Senator tendered to the occupant of the chair which you now hold was not good and could not be tendered to him. They said to him when Mr. Douglas advocated his right to resign here that he must go back to Illinois and resign, and that the Senate had no right to act upon his letter of resignation on the principle which I stated a while ago that inasmuch as the Legislature of Illinois had given him his authority as Senator, no other authority on earth could withdraw it and accept the resignation, and that when he sent up his letter of resignation to the Chair here, in order to create a vacancy somewhat similar to that which is said to have been created by Mr. Watts, it is well known as a matter of public history that that letter of resignation was considered insufficient to vacate the office of Senator by the best constitutional lawyers who held seats at that day in this body. Mr. Webster took the ground that there was nothing to resign, but other Senators held that the State which conferred the office could alone accept the resignation.

What did Mr. Webster say when General Shields sent in his resignation after it was evident that it would be determined that he could not hold his seat because he had not been nine years a citizen of the United States? When the time for entering upon the duties of the office arrived he had not been nine years a citizen of the United States, and inquiry was had into his qualifications, and the committee found that he was disqualified, and that he was not entitled to the office. Then, in order to avoid the difficulty, he attempted to resign; and what said Mr. Webster? I will read his language:

> Mr. WEBSTER. I have but very few words, sir, to address to the Senate, and I shall not trouble them again. I desire to say to the Senator from Illinois that he does his friend no service by opposing the immediate decision of this question. Is it not obvious that if the executive appointment occur in the recess a question must arise as to whether there was a vacancy and what sort of a vacancy? If a man has no seat, how can he resign his seat? If the election was void a vacancy cannot be created by resignation—there is a vacancy already. Then I suggest to Senators—those who say that the question is so clear—that, however it may now be decided by the Senate, the question must hereafter be whether there was a vacancy when the resignation, so called, was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.]

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer a substitute for the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a substitute pending.

Mr. WALLACE. I withdraw my substitute so that the Senator from Missouri may offer his.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move as a substitute to strike out all after the word "resolved" in the resolution and insert:

> That inasmuch as J. W. Watts was on November 7, 1876, a deputy United States postmaster and held an office of trust and profit under the United States, he was ineligible by the terms of the Constitution to the office of elector for the State of Oregon, and W. H. Odell and J. C. Cartwright were the only electors duly appointed by the State of Oregon and their votes only should be counted, and the decision of the electoral commission should stand as the judgment of the Senate only so far as their decision sustains the votes cast by said Odell and Cartwright.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) My friend from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is confined to his house by illness. I am sure that he would vote in favor of this amendment, and out of respect to him, although I have not made a formal pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTERSON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. STEVENSON.] If he were present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. WINDOM. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] If present I have no doubt he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 24, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Paddock, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, and Wright—39.

ABSENT—Messrs. Davis, Edmunds, Hamilton, Hamlin, Kelly, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Sharon, Stevenson, Thurman, and Windom—12.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution of the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.]

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) I withhold my vote for the reason I stated before.

Mr. BLAINE, (when Mr. HAMLIN'S name was called.) My colleague was called from the Senate by sudden illness this morning. He said nothing about his vote; but I feel authorized to state that if he were here he would vote with me on this question, as he was authorized to state on Monday last that had I been present I would have voted with him on the Louisiana question.

Mr. PATTERSON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. STEVENSON.] If he were present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS] on this question. I have no doubt he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 40, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, and Wright—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Conover, Davis, Edmunds, Hamilton, Hamlin, McDonald, Patterson, Randolph, Stevenson, Thurman, and Windom—11.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be notified that the Senate has determined the objection to the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of Oregon, and is prepared to meet the House to proceed with the count of the electoral votes.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will execute the order of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McDONALD. On account of my absence from the Senate in the earlier part of the session, a delay has occurred in the announcement of the death of the late Speaker of the House of Representatives. Early this week I gave notice to the Senate that I should to-day ask that the House resolution relating to this subject be taken up for consideration by the Senate. I will state that it is not my purpose to ask an adjournment of the Senate at the close of the eulogies unless there should be no longer any occasion for remaining in session. If there should be a call from the House of Representatives or if the House of Representatives should be still in session so that we might possibly be called upon, I shall ask that the resolution in regard to the adjournment out of respect to the memory of the deceased be not put at this time. My purpose in calling up the resolution is that proper notice may be taken of the death of the late Speaker of the House of Representatives, and that the record on this subject may be complete.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the resolutions of the House in respect to the memory of the late Speaker be taken from the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That cannot be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not legislative business. Obituary addresses are not legislative in character.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to stand in anybody's way on a matter of this kind; the subject commends itself to my hearty approval; but the law under which we are acting does not, in my opinion, allow us to do anything except that which is necessary for the preservation of our existence, (as electing a Secretary, if we should happen to be without one, or anything of that kind,) until the count is completed, except when the commission is sitting, and the law provides that we may then do our other business; because you can see the effect of it. If this be in order, then any other question of a similar character would be, and by endless debates we might be never able to do the duty that the law imposes.

I am very sorry to interpose this objection, because I feel as strongly as my friend does the sympathy and respect that we ought to show to the memory of this deceased gentleman, whom I had the pleasure to know personally and to respect highly; but I cannot allow for one, without a protest on my part, any subject of this kind to be taken up until the matter that we have in hand shall be concluded.

Mr. McDONALD. I fear if this is not done now there will be no other appropriate time during the session; and it is certainly not legislative business.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me, an objection occurs to me that I am afraid would interfere with the purpose he has in view. When we receive a message from the House, having sent word to the House that we will attend at their pleasure, we must go, and that might interrupt the consideration of the resolutions.

Mr. McDONALD. In that case this matter might be suspended at once.

Mr. SHERMAN. But that would interrupt the proceedings under the resolutions.

Mr. LOGAN. If after we commence with the obituary addresses a message should come from the House, it would break the proceedings of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposed that this was, as it is, a matter relating to obituary addresses, and that it could not be construed as legislative business. As objection has been raised by the Senator from Vermont, the Chair will submit the question to the Senate whether the Senate will allow the consideration of these obituary resolutions.

Mr. McDONALD. I would rather not press the motion at this time unless it is entirely satisfactory to the Senate.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senator from Indiana had better withdraw it.

Mr. McDONALD. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn, objection being raised by the Senator from Vermont.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF OREGON.

At three o'clock and fifty minutes p. m., Mr. G. M. ADAMS, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, the House of Representatives have passed the following:

Ordered, That the vote purporting to be an electoral vote for President and Vice-President and which was given by one J. W. Watts, claiming to be an elector for the State of Oregon, be not counted.

I am also directed to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives is now ready to meet the Senate in joint convention in the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m., and the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having withdrawn from the joint meeting upon an objection submitted to the certificate from the State of Pennsylvania, the Secretary will now read that objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

The undersigned Senators and Representatives object to the counting of the vote of Henry A. Boggs as an elector for the State of Pennsylvania, on the grounds following, namely:

That a certain Daniel J. Morrell was a candidate for the post of elector for the State of Pennsylvania at the election for electors of President and Vice-President on the 7th day of November, 1876, and was declared by the governor of the State of Pennsylvania to have been duly elected an elector at said election.

And the undersigned aver that the said Daniel J. Morrell was not duly elected an elector for the State of Pennsylvania because for a long period before and on the said 7th day of November, 1876, and for a long period subsequent thereto the said Morrell held an office of trust and profit under the United States; that is to say, the office of commissioner under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine, in the city of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania, in the year 1876," to which he was appointed by the President of the United States under the provisions of said act.

Wherefore the undersigned aver that the said Morrell could not be constitutionally appointed an elector for the State of Pennsylvania on the said 7th day of November, 1876, under the Constitution of the United States.

And the undersigned further state that on the 6th day of December, 1876, the said Morrell did not attend the meeting of the electors of the State of Pennsylvania, and that he was not according to the laws of Pennsylvania and under the Constitution of the United States duly elected an elector of said State and could not be constitutionally and legally declared duly elected as such elector, and had no legal right to attend the said meeting of electors.

And the undersigned further state that the college of electors had power under the law of Pennsylvania to fill vacancies in the office of elector under and by virtue of the law of Pennsylvania, which is in the words following and by none other whatsoever, namely:

"If any such elector shall die, or from any cause fail to attend at the seat of government at the time appointed by law, the electors present shall proceed to choose viva voce a person to fill the vacancy occasioned thereby, and immediately after such choice the name of the person so chosen shall be transmitted by the presiding officer of the college to the governor, whose duty it shall be forthwith to cause notice in writing to be given to such person of his election, and the person so elected [and not the person in whose place he shall have been chosen] shall be an elector, and shall with the other electors perform the duties enjoined on them as aforesaid."

And the undersigned further state that under said law the electors present had no authority to appoint the said Henry A. Boggs to fill the vacancy of the said Daniel J. Morrell or on any other grounds whatever, and that said supposed appointment of said Henry A. Boggs was wholly without authority of law and was and is null and void.

Wherefore the undersigned aver that the said Henry A. Boggs was not duly appointed by the State of Pennsylvania in the manner that its Legislature directed, and that he was not entitled to cast his vote as elector for said State, and that his vote as such should not be, because it cannot be constitutionally, counted.

And the undersigned hereto annex the evidence to sustain the above objections which has been taken before the committee of the House of Representatives on the powers, privileges, and duties of the House.

WILLIAM A. WALLACE, Pennsylvania.
M. W. RANSOM.
WM. PINKNEY WHYTE.
W. S. STENGER.
J. R. TUCKER, Virginia.
CHARLES B. ROBERTS, Maryland.
JAC. TURNEY, Pennsylvania.
W. F. SLEMONS, Arkansas.
F. D. COLLINS, Pennsylvania.
WM. MUTCHLER, Pennsylvania.
ALEX. G. COCHRANE, Pennsylvania.
JOHN L. VANCE, Ohio.
G. A. JENKS, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

Mr. WALLACE. Let the testimony be read.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask leave to offer a resolution.

Mr. CONKLING. Has the reading been finished?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been finished.

Mr. WALLACE. The testimony has not been read.

Mr. SARGENT. I object to the reading of the testimony. It is very voluminous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Is not my resolution in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order. The Secretary will report it.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry A. Boggs be counted with the other votes of the electors of Pennsylvania, notwithstanding the objections made thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] asks that the testimony be read, to which the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] objects. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. WALLACE. Is it not our right to have any part of the document read here?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable.

Mr. WALLACE. The question is not debatable, but I simply desire to know if a part of the document, the testimony, cannot be read. It is the only evidence that we have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate, Shall this testimony be read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for a division.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALLACE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to know in regard to this testimony what is the character of it. How does it appear?

Mr. SARGENT. I suppose the facts are fairly stated in the objection. The testimony is extremely voluminous and that is the reason why I make objection to its being read.

Mr. WITHERS. As I understand it, here is an objection with facts accompanying it. I think it is important to us in voting to have the testimony read in order to know whether the objection is sustained.

Mr. SARGENT. I suppose the facts are admitted. Does anybody contest them? The testimony is extremely voluminous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The testimony, questions and answers, covers so much paper. [Exhibiting the document.]

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think that any member of the Senate desires that in voting upon the question the testimony should be shut out from the Senate. First, the subject is a very grave one, and if members of the House and Senate upon their volition and personal responsibility have signed objections, in my own opinion, whatever may be the views of the majority, it is the duty of the Senate and it is the right of every member that the facts should be made known.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask whether this question is debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable. The Chair so stated, and debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. INGALLS. I am convinced that the testimony could all be read in the course of twenty minntes. It is not very voluminous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to having the testimony read?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the reading, the question is submitted to the Senate, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg to ask a question. Is it true or not that in other cases the testimony annexed to objections has been read in joint convention?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been one case where there was no objection raised where the reading was asked for and there was no objection. The Chair submitted it to the joint meeting. This is not the only case where testimony has been read in the Senate where it was not read in joint meeting.

Mr. CONKLING. The testimony was not read in the joint meeting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not.

Mr. CONKLING. May I make a further inquiry? How many pages are there of the testimony,—I do not mean what has been read, or the certificates.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the number of pages.

The SECRETARY. There are sixteen pages.

Mr. CONKLING. Are those sixteen pages full of testimony or are they broken pages, some of them containing a little and some containing more?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As near as possible sixteen full pages.

The SECRETARY. I have made some allowance for broken pages.

Mr. CONKLING. It would not take ten minutes to read it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. If the Senator from New York will allow me, if my colleague desires that this testimony shall be read, I shall make no objection. It is so ridiculous that I cannot believe any man on the soil of Pennsylvania would believe that anybody but Mr. Hayes was entitled to the full vote of that State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind the Senator that debate is not in order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I know it is not; I have no right to debate it, but I am only expressing my surprise that a man so learned as my colleague should have raised a point on this case.

I am willing to allow the testimony to be read for the purpose of letting him have the excuse to his foolish constituents, if he has any that are so foolish, and giving him the benefit of all the testimony. I therefore withdraw my objection and will let the testimony be read, repeating at the same time that I will not allow what I have admitted for Pennsylvania to be taken as a precedent in regard to other States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania withdraws his objection, and the reading will proceed, if there be no objection.

Mr. WALLACE. Let the certificate of appointment which is annexed also be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The certificate will be read.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not want to object and will agree that this paper shall be read, but it is not to be made a precedent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the reading will proceed by common consent. In case of any objection the Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

The Secretary read the certificate, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I certify that the document hereunto annexed is a true copy from the records in this Department.

In testimony whereof I, Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State of the United States, have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the seal of the Department of State to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 23d day of February, A. D. 1877, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and first.

[SEAL] HAMILTON FISH.

Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States of America, to all who shall see these presents, greeting:

Know ye that, reposing special trust and confidence in the integrity and ability of Daniel J. Morrell, and on his nomination by the governor of the State of Pennsylvania as delegate from said State, I do appoint the said Daniel J. Morrell a commissioner on the commission authorized to be constituted under and by virtue of the act of Congress to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine in the city of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania in the year 1876, approved March 3, 1871.

In testimony whereof I have caused these letters to be made patent and the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed, Done at the city of Washington this 29th day of April, A. D. 1871, and of the Independence of the United States of America the ninety-fifth.

[SEAL.] U. S. GRANT.

By the President:

HAMILTON FISH, Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The testimony will now be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the testimony, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 22, 1877.

JOHN REILLY, a member of the House from the State of Pennsylvania, sworn and examined.

By Mr. FIELD:

Question. Do you know Daniel J. Morrell, of Pennsylvania?
Answer. I do.
Q. How long have you known him?
A. I suppose fifteen or eighteen years.
Q. Where does he reside?
A. In Johnstown, Cambria County, Pennsylvania.
Q. Was he one of the centennial commissioners appointed by the President?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is he still such?
A. I believe he is; he was at the close of the exhibition; I have not heard of him in connection with it since.
Q. How near to him do you live?
A. I live within thirty-eight miles of him.
Q. Do you know him very well?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is he the same gentleman who was appointed one of the presidential electors in the State of Pennsylvania?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. On the republican ticket?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Did you serve with him on the centennial commission?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you vote for him?
A. I did not.
Q. You have no personal knowledge as to what you have testified to, have you?
A. I have seen Mr. Morrell at the centennial exhibition in the discharge of his duties.
Q. What duties did you see him perform at the exhibition?
A. I saw him around there. I do not know that I can state specifically that I saw him perform any particular act.
Q. Did you not see 20,000 other individuals about there at the same time?
A. I saw a great many more than that.
Q. One hundred thousand?
A. Perhaps 200,000.
Q. Walking about the grounds?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Can you mention any particular thing you saw Mr. Morrell do at that time?
A. No, sir; but it is a well-known fact that he was a centennial commissioner.
Q. It is rumor and general information that you have on the subject?

A. I may state that I had from Mr. Morrell himself, directly, a statement that he had paired with a man on the day of the election, for the purpose of attending to his duties as centennial commissioner.

By Mr. FIELD:

Q. You saw him at the centennial exhibition in the apparent discharge of his duties?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you heard him speak of his duties as centennial commissioner?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is he universally reputed to be a centennial commisioner?
A. Yes, sir; he was formerly a member of Congress.
Q. Do you know that he was the candidate for presidential elector?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know that it was the same person?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Do you know that from him?
A. I do not know that I ever heard him speak of it himself directly.

By Mr. FIELD:

Q. But it was well understood among the people in Pennsylvania that Daniel J. Morrell, who was centennial commissioner, was also a candidate for presidential elector on the republican ticket?
A. It was generally understood in that district. I cannot speak as to the whole State.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1877.

JOHN WELSH sworn and examined.

By Mr. TUCKER:

Question. Where do you reside?
Answer. I reside in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
Q. Were you a candidate for the position of presidential elector at the late presidential election, and were you certified as one of the electors for the State of Pennsylvania?
A. I was, from the first district.
Q. Did you attend the college of electors?
A. I did.
Q. And cast your vote?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States?
A. No, sir.
Q. What is your connection with the centennial exhibition?
A. I am a director and also president of the Centennial Board of Finance, which was chartered by the United States on the 1st of June, 1872. It is a stock company. I was elected a director in April, 1873, and every year since then by the stockholders, and have been chosen president every year by the directors.
Q. Were you president of that corporation on the 7th of November, 1876?
A. I was.
Q. And on the 6th of December, 1876?
A. Yes, sir, and am still.
Q. You are a stockholder in the corporation?
A. I am a stockholder in the corporation.
Q. And have been since 1873?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You held no position as centennial commissioner?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know Mr. Daniel J. Morrell?
A. I do.
Q. Was he a centennial commissioner under appointment of the President?
A. He was and is.
Q. He was acting as such on the 7th of November, 1876, and on the 6th of December, 1876?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is he the same gentleman who was elected one of the presidential electors for the State of Pennsylvania?
A. He is.
Q. Did he appear at the meeting of the electors?
A. He did not.
Q. Did he assign any reason for not appearing?
A. He was not present. I cannot say that he ever assigned any reason for his absence.
Q. Did he send a letter?
A. No. I think he was absent and that his place was supplied.
Q. Who was appointed in his place?
A. If I recollect right, it was Mr. Boggs, of Cambria County, the same county that Mr. Morrell lives in.
Q. Who appointed Mr. Boggs?
A. He was appointed by the electoral college.
Q. Did he hold any Federal office?
A. I think not.
Q. His title as an elector for the State of Pennsylvania was due to an appointment by the college of electors?
A. Entirely.
Q. To fill the place of Mr. Morrell?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. The corporation was a mere private stock corporation?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You had no appointment from the President of the United States?
A. No, sir.
Q. There is no salary fixed by law to the office of director or president?
A. The law allows a salary to be paid to the president and the treasurer, but I have never received any salary. I declined to receive it.
Q. The law does not fix any salary?
A. No, sir.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. The salary would have been paid by the corporation?
A. Yes, it would have been paid by the corporation.
Q. And your relation to the centennial exhibition was simply that of stockholder in this corporation and of an officer elected by the stockholders?
A. I was elected a director by the stockholders and president by the board of directors.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You are no more an officer of the Government of the United States than would be a director of a railroad company incorporated by Congress?
A. No, sir. I have never held any office under the United States.

By Mr. TUCKER:

Q. Did you give any bond as president of the Board of Finance to the United States?
A. Yes, sir; not as president of the Board of Finance. Congress appropriated $1,500,000, and there was a provision in the appropriation bill that the president and treasurer should give a bond in $500,000. That bond was given by us, signed by one hundred citizens of Philadelphia.
Q. You executed that bond?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. To whom was the bond given?
A. I suppose the Secretary of the Treasury. The bond was conditioned on our applying the money to the purpose stated, namely, having the building open on the 10th of May, free of debt. The bond was filed and vouchers to the amount of $1,727,000 were sent voluntarily by us.
Q. Is this the provision of law on the subject, [reading?]
A. Yes, sir; that is it.
Q. You say that you presented vouchers?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When?
A. In the course of the season we sent to the Treasury Department vouchers for $1,727,000. They were sent at various periods during the summer.
Q. Did you send them all to the Treasury before the presidential election?
A. Long before.
Q. Did you get an acquittance or discharge of the bond?
A. No, sir; we got no acquittance or discharge.
Q. The bond, therefore, is still outstanding as an obligation?
A. Yes, sir; I do not know whether the Government ever gives up a bond.
Q. It gave you no acquittance?
A. No, sir.
Q. Was there any provision for returning this money to the Government?
A. I have no opinion to offer on that subject. There is a difference of opinio on the subject between gentlemen skilled in the law. My own reading of it is that there is no provision for the return of the money to the Government until after the stockholders shall be paid unless there be a profit, but I pretend to express no opinion on the subject. It was submitted to the court and the circuit court has determined that there is no such provision in the law, in other words, that the money which we have on hand belongs to the stockholders; but an appeal has been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and it will be argued there.
Q. Then the question was whether there was any money to be paid to the Government in any event?
A. The question was whether any money was to be paid to the Government out of the capital or out of the profits. The construction of the court is that it was to come out of the profits.
Q. Then the court has decided that there is an obligation to refund the money to the Government if there shall be a profit sufficient for that purpose?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you hold any fund in your hands now awaiting the decision of that case?
A. We do. We placed before the court a statement that we have about $2,000,000 on hand for which there are two claimants.
Q. Who are the two claimants?
A. The stockholders and the Government. We asked the court to instruct us what to do with the money.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. You were the president of a board of directors, elected by the stockholders under sections 4 and 5 of the act of 1872?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. There has been no change in the law, to your knowledge, in reference to the duration of your term of office or your duties in regard to the Government?
A. No, sir; no change.
Q. That law provides that the president, two vice-presidents, treasurer, and secretary, and such other officers as may be required to carry out the purpose of the corporation, shall hold their respective offices during the pleasure of the board, and the board adopts by-laws for its own government?
A. Yes.
Q. And you are in no way represented as an officer of the United States?
A. No, sir.
Q. You had no power to incur any liability to be charged to the United States?
A. No, sir. Each of the acts of Congress has had specific provisions in that respect—that no debt or responsibility should be incurred on behalf of the United States.
Q. And your relation to this money which was appropriated by Congress was simply that of applying it as the law required?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. But it was appropriated to the corporation?
A. Entirely.
Q. For the purpose of the exposition?
A. Yes.
Q. And the act required the president of the board and the treasurer to give bond to the United States?
A. Yes.
Q. You had no special custody of the funds?
A. The treasurer had custody of the funds, but a bond was required from the president as well as the treasurer.
Q. Your only relation to it was simply that of giving a bond?
A. Yes. The fund was under the control of the board of directors to be disposed of by them. I was their servant. The funds were all applied in exact accordance with the memorial sent to Congress and signed by me, and it is a very curious fact that the $1,500,000 asked for was precisely the amount that was required.
Q. You hold no office of profit or trust under the United States unless the giving of a bond created you an officer?
A. No, sir. If so, I am an officer of the United States in a great many instances, for I am on a good many custom-house bonds for the last fifty years.

By Mr. TUCKER:

Q. You say that $1,500,000 was just enough?
A. Just enough to enable us to open the exhibition.
Q. How much money have you on hand now interpleaded between the Government of the United States and the stockholders?
A. Something rising $2,000,000. We cannot yet determine the amount, because there are certain large claims which may or may not be allowed. If the Government is to be refunded the $1,500,000, then we shall pay 25 per cent. to the stockholders, and in the other case we shall have probably 85 per cent. to pay to the stockholders.

WASHINGTON, D. C. February 24, 1877.

DANIEL J. MORRELL sworn and examined.

By Mr. TUCKER:

Question. Where do you reside?
Answer. Johnstown, Pennsylvania.
Q. Are you or have you been a centennial commissioner by appointment of the President of the United States?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was the date of your appointment, and up to what time did you hold the office?
A. I don't remember the exact date, but I think it was in 1871 or 1872.
Q. You were appointed by commission by the President?

A. I was nominated by the governor of Pennsylvania and commissioned by the President of the United States.
Q. Are you still a centennial commissioner?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you have continued to be such from the time of your appointment until the present time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you a candidate for the position of elector at the late presidential election held on November 7, 1876?
A. I was nominated and voted for as an elector.
Q. Was your election certified to you by the governor of the State?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you attend the meeting of the college of electors?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you resign the position?
A. No, sir; I did not. I was advised that it was not necessary that I should resign, but that I should not attend; that I was not eligible.
Q. Not eligible by reason of your being a centennial commissioner?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You absented yourself on that account?
A. I did.
Q. Who was appointed in your place?
A. Henry A. Boggs.
Q. Henry, not Harry?
A. I have always understood that Henry was his name; he is called Harry generally, however.
Q. He was appointed in your place?
A. That was my understanding. I was not present at the meeting of the electors.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Are you paid any compensation out of the Treasury of the United States as centennial commissioner?
A. No compensation whatever from any source.
Q. The position you hold is under the act creating the centennial commissioners?
A. Yes, sir.

Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. WALLACE. These facts are not denied, I understand my colleague to say, and I am satisfied the reading need not proceed further in order to make up the case in the form of a demurrer on the facts stated in the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be suspended. The resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry A. Boggs be counted with the other votes of electors of Pennsylvania, notwithstanding the objections made thereto.

Mr. WALLACE. The only point I have to make in this case is that I believe this to be a plain, distinct violation of that provision of the Federal Constitution which prohibits any person holding an office of trust or profit under the Federal Government being chosen an elector, and there is no provision in the Pennsylvania statutes for filling such a vacancy. It is plainly proved here that Mr. Morrell was a United States commissioner on the 7th day of November when he was voted for as an elector. The mode of appointment of Federal electors in Pennsylvania is through the people at the ballot-box. Evidence shows that Morrell is an officer—nay, it is admitted; Morrell recognizes the fact himself, and he did not attend the meeting of electors but was absent therefrom, and another man was chosen by the remainder of the board to fill his place. There was no election by the people by reason of his ineligibility. That is the substantial ground of the objection to his vote in this case. There was no choice by the people of Mr. Morrell on that day. He was ineligible under the Federal Constitution, and being ineligible, there was no election. That being the case, a reference to the Pennsylvania statutes will satisfy Senators that there was no power in the remainder of the electoral college to fill any such place. The provision of the statutes is as follows:

It shall be the duty of the secretary of the Commonwealth, on receiving the returns of the election of electors, as hereinafter directed, to lay them before the governor, who shall enumerate and ascertain the number of votes given for each person so voted for, and shall thereupon declare, by proclamation, the names of the persons duly elected.

Those are the words "duly elected." Section 140 provides:

If any such elector—

That is an elector "duly elected"— shall die, or from any cause fail to attend at the seat of government, at the time appointed by law, the electors present shall proceed to choose viva voce a person to fill the vacancy occasioned thereby, and immediately after such choice the names of the persons so chosen shall be transmitted by the presiding officer of the college to the governor, whose duty it shall be forthwith to cause notice in writing to be given to such person of his election, and the person so elected [and not the person in whose place he shall have been chosen] shall be an elector.

Here plainly is demonstrated the proposition that the man who is to be chosen by the board of electors is one who is to fill the place of an elector duly elected. If Mr. Morrel was not eligible he could not be elected by the people and he was not elected on the 7th of November, and it necessarily follows that the vacancy, if it be called a vacancy, but which is really a failure to elect, could not be filled by the college of electors, there being no provision for such a case. He did not attend and his place was filled without any lawful authority so to do. Mr. President, this is all there is in this case.

Now, it is argued that the college of electors had the right to fill the vacancy if on the day on which they came to cast the vote Mr. Morrell was not there, or, in other words, that that is the time at which the question of eligibility is to be ascertained and determined. Although the high authority of the electoral commission is interposed in order to sustain that proposition, it seems to me that it cannot be sustained for a moment. Can it be that my colleague, with his influence in the State of Pennsylvania, might have been placed at the head of the electoral ticket in that State in November, 1876, and with the power and patronage of the Federal Government at his command, as it is, succeed thereby, in being elected an elector, in carrying through the electoral ticket of which he is the head, and then on the 5th of December, before the college meets, shall resign his place, and after he shall have resigned another man be put in his stead to fill the college which his position, power, and influence have created and through which the Federal patronage at his command has given the control of the vote of the State to the party that he represents? And yet that is their doctrine, contended for by Senators and announced by the commission; for if a Federal officer of any grade can be selected in this way, then a Senator of the United States may be chosen in the same way and the inhibition of the Federal Constitution is made of no value whatever; but on the contrary the power and patronage of the Federal Government are used to carry through an electoral ticket, and to nullify its plain letter as well as its spirit, and when the college comes to cast its vote, he has resigned his place, and, as in the Oregon case, he may be re-appointed.

If such a Senator-elector is thus chosen and has resigned his place as an elector and the place is filled by somebody else who votes, and the Federal Constitution may thus be construed, it is in effect nullified. It seems to me that this is a plain case of a failure to elect. There is no provision in the statutes of Pennsylvania for filling such a vacancy. There was no vacancy Mr. Morrell was not legally appointed and the vote ought not to be counted.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I would not have attempted to say another word except for the parallel which my colleague drew between Mr. Morrell and myself. He talked about my being elected an elector, which was very complimentary on his part, I have no doubt; but I do not think there is anything in the suggestion. Mr. Morrell had no particular popularity above anybody else on the ticket. Mr. Morrell, I venture to say, though I do not remember anything about the details of the vote, did not get 100 votes more than any other elector on the ticket. I doubt whether he got as many as some. He is a very respectable gentleman, living in Cambria County, where he could have had no particular influence except that which any other member of the party would have.

I am sorry that my colleague, who is so good a lawyer and so excellent a gentleman, for whom I have such high personal regard, should have talked to-day much as if he had been a lawyer living up in Clearfield County, as he does, engaged in a suit between two gentlemen who had a contest about a trade in horses. Then he might have made such an argument as that for the purpose of affecting an ignorant jury, though the juries in his county are very intelligent; but his argument was one not fitted for this place. I mean that in no disrespect to him. He does not doubt that the people of Pennsylvania voted for Mr. Hayes. He does not believe that under any circumstances last year the people of Pennsylvania would have voted for Mr. Tilden. The intention of the law is that the opinions and wishes of the people shall be represented by the electors, and they did it in giving their votes for Mr. Hayes and Mr. Wheeler.

Mr. Morrell accepted the place of centennial commissioner when he thought he was going to render a service to the State and to the country by giving his services gratuitously in that capacity. He never dreamed that the position was an office. No other man believed it was an office. There was no profit in it; and if the exhibition had failed there would have been no honor in it. But it did succeed and every man who served there has derived great honor for having given his services to the country. You all remember the contest we had in the Senate and how difficult it was to get anybody to recognize that the place of the centennial commissioner would even be considered respectable. Mr. Morrell devoted himself to the enterprise and he gave his services freely and arduously. After a while when the country began to see that Mr. Tilden was going to force his election by all sorts of tricks, all sorts of machinery, then he was told that there might be a doubt about the legality of his appointment as an elector although he served without expecting honor and without any profit at all. Lest he might endanger the expression of the opinion of Pennsylvania he failed to go to the meeting of the electors, or rather intentionally refused to go, and the college of electors, finding that there was a vacancy, filled it according to the law; and they gave their votes, all the votes to which that great State is entitled, for Hayes and Wheeler. My colleague from the western part of the State is just as proud of that State as I am; and I am sure if he could be here without the party shackles upon him, he would be just as unwilling as I am to see one iota of the credit due to that great State taken from her. I am sure that when he goes to bed to-night he will be sorry that he has made the attempt.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I simply want to read a part of the Constitution of the United States:

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in Congress; but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

Now, if I understand this case, it rests here: A B was apparently chosen by a large popular majority one of the electors of the State of Pennsylvania. He was at the time an officer under the United States Government. Now, let me illustrate by supposing that my good friend, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, had been chosen in the same way one of the electors of that State. It would have been void; the action of the people of that State would not have been legal; he could not have been appointed an elector. If he could not have been appointed an elector he had no position or office to resign. That is the only point here. That was the point decided in the Oregon case, and we are called upon again to decide it; and I presume it will be decided in this case as it was in the other—wrongly, in my judgment.

Let me illustrate again; and I should like any Senator on this floor to answer the argument. I will suppose that I had been placed in nomination in Connecticut as one of the electors of that State, holding as I do a seat on the floor of the Senate. By the terms of the Constitution of the United States I could not be appointed an elector for the State of Connecticut. Therefore the action of the people of the State in choosing me would have been void; it would have been as though they had voted for a dead man or an alien. I could not resign that position; I should have nothing to resign. Before a man can resign an office he must be by law elected or appointed to that office. I can resign the position of Senator of the United States, because by law I am a Senator of the United States; I could not resign the office of elector, had I been apparently elected to it by the people of Connecticut, because the organic law of the land says I cannot be elected to that office; and therefore the action of the people of the State of Connecticut would have been void.

I submit, Mr. President, that if the Constitution, the organic law of the land, is not to be waived, then we ought to take this case into deliberate consideration. This man had no office to resign. He was never elected an elector. He could not be. The Constitution says he could not be appointed to that office, and therefore if he received every vote in the State of Pennsylvania, large and important though it may be, he could not be an elector in that State. I submit, therefore, that this man ought not to be regarded as having been chosen as an elector.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question.

Mr. EATON. I shall be happy to answer, if I can.

Mr. LOGAN. I believe under an act of Congress we appoint trustees for the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. EATON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. Would the Senator consider a trustee appointed for the Smithsonian an officer under the law as contemplated by the Constitution, an officer holding an office of trust and profit, making a man ineligible to be an elector?

Mr. EATON. The answer that I shall give my friend is this: I am bound to say that I do not regard this as a very strong case after the action of the Senate in the Oregon case. [Laughter.] I am bound to say that; but what I desire to say to my distinguished friend from Illinois is this—and he will not deny it—that no man who was the possessor of an office of honor and trust under the United States could be elected to the position of elector so that he could resign that position.

Mr. LOGAN. That was not the question I put. I put the question whether the position of a trustee of the Smithsonian Institute was an office of profit under the Constitution.

Mr. EATON. I do not know that I am any more bound to answer that than I should be if my friend asked me whether a constable knew the law.

Mr. LOGAN. I will ask the Senator a direct question. I believe that this centennial exposition was incorporated and stock issued, like a railroad company?

Mr. EATON. And bad stock too. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOGAN. It does not make any difference about that. It being a corporation, I ask the Senator if a man appointed as commissioner in connection with that corporation is an office contemplated by the Constitution of the United States. I ask if as a lawyer he believes that?

Mr. EATON. I am bound to say just what I said before, that in my judgment this case is not as strong a case as the one that the Senate has already disposed of. But this man is not the officer of a corporation at all. He is an officer appointed not by a corporation, unless the United States is a corporation. I think he received his appointment from the President of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly; without any fee or emolument.

Mr. EATON. Is the President of the United States the head of a corporation?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; but this is an incorporated company, having its trustees, and by an act of Congress it received a donation of so much money, and in that act it was provided that certain persons should be appointed for the purpose of seeing it carried out. I ask the Senator if he believes that the position of such a trustee is an office as contemplated by the Constitution? The duty is entirely in connection with a corporation.

Mr. EATON. I am bound of course to give a respectful answer to my distinguished friend from Illinois. I thought I had already done so when I said that in my judgment this case was not as important a one as that which has already been decided; but I say this, (and I desire to hear some argument from some one against it,) that if a man by the Constitution of the United States cannot be appointed to an office there is nothing for him to resign. He cannot resign an office unless he can hold that office according to law. That is my objection here.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the objection as I understand in this case is that there was not such a vacancy in the electoral college in Pennsylvania as the college could fill; that Morrell was a centennial commissioner on the 7th day of November, and, therefore, that his election as elector was void and not merely voidable; that it being void there was no election, and there being no election, the college of electors could not appoint his successor or one to fill the vacancy. I dissent from that doctrine entirely. In the first place, I insist that if he was a centennial commissioner on the 7th of November his election was not void, but simply voidable, to put the worst legal aspect upon it; and if it was voidable only, his absence caused a vacancy that could be filled by the college of electors.

In the second place, if I were to admit that the election was void on the 7th of November, still if the college of electors did assume to fill the vacancy, and the person whom they appointed acted as elector, and cast the vote, he voted as an officer de facto, and his vote is just as good as that of any other elector.

If a person is chosen a Senator before he is thirty years old, the election is not void, but is simply voidable. If when the time comes to take his place he is qualified, he then can be sworn in as a Senator. That principle will not be controverted. And if the college of electors, assuming that they had the power to fill the vacancy, did fill it, Mr. Morrell not attending, the person whom they appointed was an officer de facto. I insist that the appointment was legal; but if it was not legal—I am putting it now upon the ground that the person appointed had no right to be appointed, or the electoral college had no power to appoint him, but putting it upon either ground—if he exercised the office and cast the vote, it cannot thereafter be questioned.

There is a case precisely like it in the State of Virginia. Colonel Holliday was chosen an elector of that State on the 7th of November; he was a centennial commissioner, and he is now. He failed to attend the meeting of the college of electors; they appointed another in his place, and that person cast the vote of an elector for Virginia. If you strike out one vote in Pennsylvania, you are bound on every principle of law and honor to strike out one in the State of Virginia. The facts are precisely the same. The Senator from Virginia understands the case, and he will recognize the truth of what I say.

But, Mr. President, I want for one to say that I regard this whole thing as standing upon technicalities, and if it were to succeed it would inflict a fraud upon the people of Pennsylvania. The college of electors was designed by the fathers of the Constitution to be a deliberative body, and for that reason Federal officers were forbidden to be members. But it has come around that so far from being a deliberative body they are pledged in advance in every instance to vote for a particular person, to carry out the wishes of a particular party. The purpose of the framers has been entirely defeated; and it makes no difference whether a man is a Federal office-holder, a member of Congress, or what position he holds, he is to carry out the pledge he gives to the party that nominates him, and the fact of his being an office-holder has become wholly unimportant. It is an old maxim of the law that when the reason of the law ceases the law itself ought to cease, and we now know as well as we know anything that it is a matter of utter indifference whether an elector is an office-holder or not.

All of these statutes in the different States are substantially the same in regard to filling vacancies by the college of electors. They should be liberally construed, not to defeat the wishes of the people, but to carry out the wishes of the people; and the idea of disfranchising a State, silencing her voice in the election of President, because an elector holds a little, contemptible office, one not known to anybody at the time he was voted for, that the man did not think of himself as amounting to an office, the idea of disfranchising a State is to commit a fraud! Talking about fraud, I appeal to my friend from Pennsylvania what could be a greater fraud than to silence the voice of Pennsylvania because one elector was a centennial commissioner, a thing the people knew nothing about or, if they did, never dreamed of it amounting to a disfranchisement? I say that a thing like that is a fraud. Talk about the imputations upon Louisiana and upon Florida; I should like to know, when you come down to practical results, what can be a greater fraud upon the people of a State than to deprive them of their vote because the holding of a petty, contemptible office is trumped up at the last moment.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. MORTON. Not out of my time, I beg my friend. Yes, I will yield. I never refuse to do that.

Mr. WALLACE. I have only to say that possibly, if the Senator will permit us to investigate the condition of the actual vote in the State of Pennsylvania, he may discover that there are wrongs and frauds there; he may discover that the majority that appears to be cast there for these electors does not belong of right and of truth to his side of the issue.

Mr. MORTON. I cannot yield to my friend all the time. I only yielded to let him ask a question. If I have any time left, I only want to say that, so far as the law is concerned, these objections are utterly futile; there is nothing in them. Even according to the letter of the law, there is nothing in them. But, coming down to the substance, if you were to give force and effect to these objections, you would recognize a fraud upon the three millions of people in the State of Pennsylvania. After insisting upon an objection of that kind, it is too late to talk about fraud.

Mr. MERRIMON. I want to ask the Senator from Indiana in all candor, notwithstanding his declamation on the subject, how if an ineligible person shall be appointed by a State to be an elector, if his view is correct, the United States Government could take advantage of the act of the State at all?

Mr. MORTON. I do not think the Government can take advantage of it. I have always said the Government could not do it.

Mr. MERRIMON. Then, sir, if he is correct in that view, the State of Pennsylvania, as the Senator from Pennsylvania on my left [Mr. WALLACE] said awhile ago, might have elected the venerable Senator his colleague [Mr. CAMERON] an elector while he was a United States Senator; he might have gone into the electoral college and voted; and Congress would be bound to accept it.

Mr. MORTON. Will my friend answer me a question?

Mr. MERRIMON. I will if I can.

Mr. MORTON. Take now the strong case that the Senator from Pennsylvania himself had been chosen; I ask under the present system of government and the election of electors, what difference that could make? The theory upon which this system was first started has utterly failed. Now the electors are pledged in advance to carry out the wishes of their party and if they fail to do it they are infamous. Therefore it makes no difference in point of fact whether the elector is an office-holder or not. The reason has passed away entirely.

Mr. MERRIMON. Then, if the Senator is correct, the Constitution is a dead failure, which I do not believe. It is not pertinent that we shall now inquire into the policy and the considerations that entered into the formation of the Constitution. It was framed by our fathers, and it has come down to us. We are bound to live under it until we change it, unless we repudiate it, which I am not willing to do. I insist that the position taken by the Senator from Indiana is an erroneous one, and that the Federal Government has ample and complete power to protect itself against the act of a State in this way. If the State government will venture to select a person who is ineligible under the Constitution, and allow him to undertake to act in behalf of the State, and to go into the electoral college and cast the vote of the State for President and Vice-President, the remedy is in the hands of the United States; that is, when it shall come to count the vote of the State as cast by that ineligible person, the Congress sitting to count the electoral vote must reject it, and the Congress would be false to the United States and its Constitution if it failed to do it.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question at that point?

Mr. MERRIMON. I will.

Mr. LOGAN. Under the Constitution a Senator or member of Congress has to be a resident of the State from which he is elected. Suppose a person should be elected to the United States Senate who had not resided in the State the number of years required by the Constitution and the fact was not made known to the Senate. He comes in and takes the oath and has a seat as a Senator here. Suppose a trial of impeachment should take place and a two-thirds vote should be cast and his vote should make the two-thirds necessary. The record is made up, and I ask the Senator if that impeachment would fail if it was discovered afterward that the person had no right to a seat in the Senate?

Mr. MERRIMON. I am very frank to say to the Senator that a proper proceeding might be instituted in the Senate to set aside that judgment before the court adjourned.

Mr. LOGAN. I am speaking of the effect after the record is made up and the act has been accomplished. I ask the Senator if there is any way to reach it? Would not that be a good vote?

Mr. MERRIMON. After the act was done.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; that is the point I am making.

Mr. MERRIMON. I trust the Senator will not take my time.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all; I was merely asking a question.

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir; and I am ready to answer in all candor and frankness. In the case I put awhile ago of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, if he had cast the vote in the electoral college of Pennsylvania, he being a Senator, and the vote had been accepted by the United States and counted, then it would be good. It would be a decision; that would be the end of the controversy; but if pending the count, pending the controversy, a question should be presented in an orderly and regular way as to whether his vote should be counted, it would not only be competent for the two branches of Congress sitting together to reject it in the count, but it would be the duty of Congress to reject it under the circumstances. I admit very frankly that if the vote shall go unquestioned and is counted, there is a determination, there is a judgment, there is the award of the election, the proclamation of the election, and that is the end of controversy; but if the inquiry is instituted pending the count, as is the case here, it is the duty of Congress to see that this provision of the Constitution is enforced; and unless this is the way to enforce the provision of the Constitution when it shall be violated, I confess we can have no remedy on the face of the earth. Therefore it was that I put what I thought was a pertinent question to the Senator from Indiana, how if the position claimed is correct, advantage can be taken of the case and States are under no check to appoint as an elector one who is ineligible under the Constitution. That is the case before the Senate now. I understand that it is conceded that the person elected was such an officer; he held such an office as to render him ineligible. Is that so? If so, he was not elected, and there was no vacancy. As has been insisted ably by the Senator from Pennsylvania on my left, [Mr. WALLACE,] there was no vacancy contemplated by the Constitution of the United States; and there was no vacancy, it seems to me, which might be filled by virtue of the provision of the statute of Pennsylvania. Therefore this vote ought not to be counted.

A great deal of declamation is indulged here about depriving a State of the right to vote. That is all outside of the case. This is a pure, dry question of law. If he is not entitled to vote, if they have made a misadventure, they must do like other people who have made a misadventure, they must abide by it; they lose that much of their voice in the count for President and Vice-President because they did not do their work thoroughly and properly, according to the Constitution and laws of the country. They are no worse off than other people and they ought not to be any better off than other people. If there has been a misadventure it is not only the right under the Constitution, but it is just and proper in every sense that the American people should have their Constitution and laws duly administered.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, we are dealing here with the acts of electors. We are not to decide upon the validity of their election. The case is exactly parallel to the one stated by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] of a person being a member of the Senate and yet constitutionally ineligible, that ineligibility not being known, and he, sitting in impeachment proceedings and his vote being necessary to make a two-thirds majority. If by his vote that two-thirds majority is obtained and a person is condemned thereby and perpetually disfranchised, the act is past and the person is disfranchised; and any court or any body which shall thereafter pass upon the question of that disfranchisement must hold that it was valid notwithstanding the person who cast the decisive vote was ineligible. So the act of the elector in Pennsylvania entered on the journals of that college is conclusive in its result and we must give effect to the action of that person. You cannot inquire into the constitution of the body by which his vote was cast. Otherwise we assume a power certainly not granted to us by the Constitution. We have no power to try the title of these persons. The principle of law is broad and plainly stated in all the authorities, that where a person acts under color of election his acts in the office are valid as to the public and third parties, even if there is a constitutional disability as is contended in this case. I will call attention to the single case which I cited the other day, reported in 1 Gilman, Illinois Reports, page 529, where it was held:

> It is a general principle of the law that ministerial acts of an officer de facto are valid and effectual when they concern the public and the rights of third persons; although it may appear that he has no legal or constitutional right to the office. The interests of the community imperatively require the adoption of such a rule.

Mr. MERRIMON. But here the State is the actor. The State is not a third person.

Mr. SARGENT. The State is interested in having the act of that person stand. The interest of the community, as the law is laid down so well in Illinois, requires that the action of the elector shall stand. If that is not so, if it does not stand, then the State is disfranchised, and when we call attention to the consequences which would follow the disfranchisement of a State, we are told, "O, that is declamation." On the contrary, it is a consequence arising from our acts that by all means ought to be avoided, if it can be done in equity. If it can be done by any reasonable construction, every benefit should be given to the State.

A strong argument was suggested in favor of that position by the Senator from Indiana, who said that where the reason of the rule ceases the rule itself ceases. If applying that principle to a constitutional provision is a strong application of it, at any rate we should go far toward applying such a principle, if it were possible, to save the rights of a State and prevent it from being disfranchised. As the Senator has stated, it is very well known that the original construction of the electoral college was to make a deliberative body, and in the fear of Federal influence and favor swaying men's minds, leading them not to cast their votes dispassionately, but rather for private gain, and under the influence of power, this restriction was placed upon them. All that has been swept away. Were the Constitution remodeled, unquestionably it would be changed in view of the existing order of things, and there would be no necessity for a provision of this kind; but here we are to search away down into an insignificant office where there is no profit attached to it, where it can scarcely be called an office of honor at all, except to cast more honor upon his State, and a little might be reflected upon him; but by no reasonable definition of the words "an office of profit or trust" could it be contended that a centennial commissioner of the exhibition held such an office.

Mr. HARVEY. I wish to suggest to the Senator——

Mr. MERRIMON. What remedy has the United States?

Mr. SARGENT. I cannot answer both questions at once.

Mr. HARVEY. I suggest to the Senator that the office of centennial commissioner comes really from the State, the governor of the State appointing or designating who shall be the centennial commissioners, and in this case Governor Hartranft appointed Mr. Morrell.

Mr. SARGENT. That statement is undoubtedly correct. Now I will hear the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. MERRIMON. What remedy has the United States?

Mr. SARGENT. I do not say that the United States needs a remedy. If the State needs a remedy there is power to institute proceedings by quo warranto or by any other legal means. If necessary you could simply by a greater interval of time between the election and the meeting of the electoral college give time for summary proceedings in order to determine the right of the elector; there may be some machinery provided where there can be evidence taken according to the processes of the common law; but where a man has acted for the people in good faith as Mr. Morrell did, under color of election, his act is valid. If he had gone into the college and cast his vote there, I would still contend that under the principle of law which I have stated and which is so well sustained in all the books, we should give full faith to his acts as concerned the public of his own State, the public of the United States, and third parties, aside from himself. If he were to gain by his acts, if there were a question whether certain compensation should come to him or not, or if he were to get other advantage, it might be that his act might not be valid to bring that benefit to himself; but where he has acted in a public capacity and in good faith, and where the people who elected him acted in good faith, the act should be beneficial to the State and prevent the disfranchisment of the State.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I ask for the reading of the Pennsylvania law attached to these papers. I have not the statutes before me.

Mr. MORTON. I have the statute of Pennsylvania, if that is what the Senator wants.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Then will the Senator do me the kindness to read the law?

Mr. MORTON. I will send it to the Senator.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I will not take the time to read the whole statute, because I find it would take more time than I have to spare; but I will simply say that the statute of Pennsylvania, as I read it, clearly enough, when it speaks of the person elected as an elector failing to attend, refers to the person who has had the greatest number of votes and who has by a mere ministerial body been declared elected. Now, neither that canvassing board nor the governor has any judicial power to determine any question of qualification or disqualification. Hence, as I read the statute, it would apply to this case and cover just such a contingency as this. But there is still another ground. If Mr. Morrell was not disqualified, then he certainly comes clearly within the statutes.

How are we to determine this question and what kind of question is it? Whether this elector was qualified or disqualified. It is a question of law and fact. In other words, it is a judicial question which, when it depends upon evidence aliunde, and not upon facts of which we are bound to take notice as we are bound to know who are members of each House, can only be determined by the judicial power of the United States or by the judicial power of the State. The Constitution of the United States has placed the judicial power in the Supreme Court of the United States and in such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time establish; and there rests all the judicial power of this Government except what the Constitution has on its face invested in some other body. It has vested in the two Houses respectively the full judicial power, if you may choose so to call it, of determining the election and qualifications of its own members; and, because it has done so and because we have been in the habit of going into evidence to establish any fact in connection with an election of members of the Senate or House, it has been inferred that we have a right to go further, and determine the election and qualification of other officers. I deny that there is any such power. I say that it is a judicial question only, and can only be decided by the judicial power of the State where the question arises and under some law existing in that State, or by the judicial power of the United States under some act of Congress; and this must be done before the time when the elector is to perform his official action. We have no such act of Congress. The case might be tried upon quo warranto in the States; I will not undertake to say definitely or to intimate my opinion whether a quo warranto in a Federal court might or might not determine it without a statute.

Now it lies upon those who object to the qualification of this elector to sustain that objection by legal proof, and that legal proof is the judicial determination of some court. The Senate is not a court; the House of Representatives is not a court; and they have no more right to determine a question of that kind than they have to try an indictment for treason. Where is the authority? Will some one be kind enough to point out the provision of the Constitution which gives to Congress or either House this power to determine the question?

Besides that, the testimony taken as it has been here, not taken before us and in our presence, is not evidence in this case; it is not judicial evidence, not evidence upon which we could act if we were a court.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand it has not been reported from a committee of the Senate.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If it had been it would never make it judicial evidence to determine a judicial question.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly not.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Now, until it has been judicially determined and that judicial evidence is brought before us, I am authorized to say that there is no evidence whatever that this elector was disqualified; and, if not disqualified and he staid away from the electoral college, another man might have been elected in his place under the statute of Pennsylvania. I am authorized to say, therefore, that the elector was not disqualified. That is all I wish to say, and it is, in my view, sufficient.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President, the language of the Constitution is that "no person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector." It has been contended here that, notwithstanding these plain words, an incompetent and unqualified person may be appointed. My colleague has discovered a new mode of amending the Constitution. He says that when this provision was placed there it was the expectation that the electors thus appointed would cast such votes as should correspond with their own judgment; but that in practice they stand pledged to cast the vote in accordance with the will of those who have elected them; and, therefore, he insists that because this has become the practice, therefore, the provisions of the Constitution in regard to qualification are no longer to be regarded.

Mr. MORTON. Will my colleague allow me to say that I do not insist upon that, but I insist that that is an excellent reason for construing the statutes liberally, so as not to defeat the will of the people by a technicality.

Mr. McDONALD. My colleague refers to the ancient maxim of the law that where the reason for the law ceases the law may be termed obsolete; but I never understood that that could be applied to constitutional provisions, provisions in the nature of organic law, by which government was organized and its powers defined. I apprehend it would be a strange rule to apply to such laws, and it is seldom ever found to have application except where after a long series of years the whole subject to which the law was originally addressed has fallen into entire disuse.

Again, it is claimed that, because the Constitution of the United States prescribes certain qualifications for Senators, the same rule applies in reference to the selection or appointment of electors; but the language of the Constitution in regard to the eligibility of Senators is very different. It is as follows:

> No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years.

Not that he may not be appointed, but that he shall not be a Senator until he has attained that age. The language is entirely different, and the construction that has been given to these two different clauses of the Constitution on that question has been entirely different.

But, Mr. President, I shall not sustain the objection made in this case; not because I do not believe that we have a right to reject an unqualified elector and one incapable of being appointed under the Constitution, but because I am not able to satisfy my mind that one holding a commission in the centennial exhibition, in a quasi-corporation created by an act of Congress, is holding an office of trust or profit under the United States. If I felt satisfied on that point I should be compelled to hold that he was incapable of being appointed an elector, and therefore he had no office to resign, and no absenteeism on his part could confer on those who had assembled there, and who had been duly elected, the authority to fill his place. But I do not think that one holding an office or position in the centennial exhibition is holding an office of trust or profit under the United States; and therefore I shall not vote to sustain the objection in this case.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] has assisted me in indicating a ground on which may rest my vote on this resolution. The Constitution of the United States, conferring on the States the power and right to appoint electors, ordains:

> But no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

I cannot dismiss these words as if they had been canceled or superseded by the custom or practice of political parties. I cannot read them as if they were equivalent or analogous to these preceding words of the Constitution:

> No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years.

No inference to be drawn from this provision, no case or instance under it, informs me in respect of the force and effect of a provision essentially different.

The language first read is an inhibition addressed to two parties, addressed to the State, and also addressed to the person whose right to be appointed an elector may be drawn in question. It is a prohibition which speaks and operates at the threshold of the proceeding it touches. It forbids the appointment. It forbids it from the beginning, and forbids it throughout. It does not, as in the case of membership of the House or of the Senate, merely require that a certain age shall be reached before the person who has been appointed or elected may be qualified to enter an office. Its meaning is different and greater. Its legal effect is so distinguishable, that no resemblance exists perceptible to me and useful now.

The pending resolution must be acted on in the presence of the applicable words, forbidding as they do, at every stage, the appointment as elector of a person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States.

The question is not the same we should have if the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania before me [Mr. CAMERON] was one of those appearing as electors in this certificate. Without expressing an opinion upon the question as it would then be, it may well be doubted whether we could close our eyes to the fact that he sits here, and is a Senator, and therefore one whom the Constitution says shall not be appointed an elector.

Of his official existence and character and identity, duty might compel each Senator to take judicial notice, or notice in law and in fact.

So, too, if in the text of the Constitution the name of Daniel J. Morrell appeared, if the words were "Daniel J. Morrell shall not be appointed an elector," I should see difficulties which I do not find now—difficulties like those in the case supposed of one of the Senators from Pennsylvania having been voted for as a presidential elector. The provision is that one holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall not be appointed an elector. There must be a time, there must be a place, there must be a proceeding, there must be a mode appropriate to enforcing such a command of the Constitution. The fact involved must be ascertained, and made effective. The law holds that to be certain which can be rendered certain. It can undoubtedly be rendered certain that Daniel J. Morrell held, if he did hold, an office of profit or trust. The question here is whether the Senate, engaged in the proceeding now pending, is bound to take notice, whether it has been informed by evidence which it is bound to regard, that the person in question was disqualified by the Constitution; the question is whether this is the forum, this the time, this the place, in which by the proof proposed, this provision of the Constitution is to be executed.

This command of the Constitution does not execute itself. It must be executed by a proceeding adapted to it, appropriate to it, and competent to the end. Whether this is such a proceeding, whether the evidence before us is evidence adequate to inform and satisfy the Senate, and whether therefore we are bound, by the exclusion of this vote, to attempt now to execute the Constitution in this respect, is an inquiry which, I imagine, few Senators are prepared to say is wholly free from doubt. I cannot say so. It is somewhat beclouded by doubt. The allegation that Mr. Morrell held such an office as the Constitution denotes is involved in doubt, so far as the Senate may be found to inquire, there is doubt. That doubt I prefer to resolve in favor of the right of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to make her voice fully heard in the choice of a Chief Magistrate. I prefer to say that, so far as my vote can aid it, the presidential count should proceed and all the votes shall be counted; and further that by no doubtful construction shall be stifled or disparaged the voice of any State honestly uttered, and expressing the intention of a majority of her electors, be that expression what it may.

Therefore, without being able to avail myself of all the positions which have been stated in the debate, I conclude that this is not a case the facts of which we are bound judicially or otherwise to notice without evidence, nor a case the facts of which are so brought before us and so established by evidence that we must ascertain them, and must then declare that this is the proceeding, and this the forum in which a decision adverse to the State of Pennsylvania may properly be demanded. I resolve the doubt in favor of the honest truth, the undenied truth, and I shall vote for the resolution declaring that the vote of this elector as well as of the twenty-six other electors chosen by the intention of the voters of Pennsylvania shall be counted.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the doctrine enunciated by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] seems to me novel and startling. It is in effect that although the Constitution of the United States declares that a person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, and Senators and Representatives in Congress, shall not be appointed to the office of elector and such a party is appointed, his appointment is voidable and not void, and that unless proceedings are legally taken to avoid the appointment the election or appointment thereby becomes valid. That is the substance and essence of his position. To my mind it is novel and startling. The Constitution of the United States declares that—

> Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress.

But that is a power secured to the State by the Constitution and springs out of the Constitution, with an onerous condition attached thereto. What is that?

> But no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

The State in accepting the right to select her own electors accepts it with the condition annexed that the parties appointed shall not be Senators, shall not be Representatives, shall not be persons holding offices of trust or profit under the United States, and any appointment in violation of this is a breach of the Constitution. Very well. Now what is necessary to constitute a valid election? There must, first, be competent persons lawfully qualified to confer the office; second, there must be a person lawfully competent to receive the office thus conferred. These two must conjoin to produce a valid election.

A man cannot be elected to an office unless it be by persons competent in law to confer that office; neither can those competent voters or persons elect a man who is forbidden by the Constitution or law to receive that office. The two must conjoin to a common point before you have a valid election. If therefore either of these is wanting, either a person lawfully competent to receive the office or voters lawfully competent to confer the office, the election is a nullity, it is void. If then the election was void at its date, there was a failure to comply with the law, and there being no vacancy but a failure to elect, which is essentially different, it is not in the power of any one to fill the place. Why? Because the act of Congress in pursuance of the right conferred by the Constitution requires that the electors shall be appointed on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November. If they are not appointed on that day they cannot be appointed afterward. If this man was not competent to receive the appointment on that day he was not appointed on that day. If he was not appointed on that day, then no substitute for him after that date can be appointed. It is a logical absurdity to say that you can confer the appointment by substitution when the party for whom another is attempted to be substituted himself was forbidden by the Constitution to be appointed to or hold the office. It is an absolute, a logical absurdity to take such a position as that.

Again, the Senator says, in reply to a question, that if the office were attempted to be conferred upon the Senator from Pennsylvania or upon a Representative, under our present system of electing Presidents, it would practically make no difference, because all that has passed away; and the practice in effect looks to the candidates for President and Vice-President, without the voters knowing or caring who are the electors. Sir, I have yet to learn that the custom of any party can override the Constitution of our common country.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement?

Mr. MAXEY. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. In the case of Cæsar Griffin, in Virginia, Chief-Justice Chase decided that the fourteenth amendment, which prohibited certain classes of persons from holding office under the State or the United States, does not execute itself, and cannot be executed without an act of Congress. Now, I ask my friend how this provision could, in any point of view, be executed without an act of Congress providing a method of ascertaining the fact.

Mr. MAXEY. The case put and the case before the Senate are essentially variant. The Constitution of the United States in the case under consideration contains the only command (which is a prohibition) that can be given and absolutely executes itself upon that question. It requires no assistant or aiding law to execute it; it is an absolute prohibition of the Constitution which in terms says that certain parties shall not be appointed. While the fourteenth amendment provides for the removal of disabilities, it is impossible for Congress by act to change or modify the clause under consideration. Now it is conceded, and that reduces it to a practical absurdity, that if a Senator or Representative in Congress, known to be so, is appointed, his appointment is a nullity. It is no more a nullity in that case than it is a nullity if the humblest officer who holds an office of trust or profit under the United States is appointed. Ex uno disce omnes. By taking the more striking case of prohibition, a Senator, and showing that he is disqualified, all the rest follows, because all stand on the same grade and the same level.

But again the doctrine of ab inconvenienti is brought to bear by the Senator from Indiana in assistance of his doctrine in this, that because there may be in Virginia a man who is disqualified, hence this man in Pennsylvania ought to be counted; in other words two wrongs make a right. If the man in Virginia is disqualified, let him go down. It is no technical objection to the right of a State. It is the duty of the State to comply with the Constitution, and if the State attempts to appoint men that the Constitution of our common country says shall not be appointed, it is the State's misfortune. Sir, I am as far as any living man from attempting to deprive a State of its right; but the State must comply with the Constitution as we are all sworn to do.

The policy of the Constitution forbids Senators and Representatives in Congress from appointment as electors, although not Federal officers, but serving the States and people in Congress; and then by one sweeping clause forbids from appointment as electors all persons, without exception, holding offices of trust or profit under the United States; thus designing the election to be absolutely free from Federal influence.

But the other day in the case of Louisiana a doctrine that I hold dear, as dear as I do my life, the doctrine of State rights was flung in our teeth with the charge that we in that case were depriving the State of her rights and denying the doctrine of State rights. Talk to one when a State is bound hand and foot with an alien to the soil and laws of Louisiana never elected governor, but called governor and placed over that people by Federal power against her will, with a Legislature never elected by the people, but put in office and kept there by the Federal bayonet, and a judiciary put in power by this so-called governor and bastard legislature and itself the result of unlawful connection—tell me not that this triplet of fraud and illegality can speak the voice of a sovereign State! Sir, my effort was to save the State and let the true voice of its people be heard and not the voice of these pretended authorities who in no sense represent the State. I am a State rights man and I was in favor of seeing that the rights of that State should be heard, but not heard through voices not representing the State of Louisiana. As well mistake the hootings of the owl for the soft, sweet notes of the southern mocking-bird.

In this particular case from Pennsylvania I am not prepared to say, for I am not sufficiently conversant with this position of commissioner to say whether, strictissimi juris, this man is an officer or not, and unless in the strictest sense of the term he was an officer, equity and good morals demand that his vote should be counted. I am not speaking to this point but to the doctrine which the very able Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] has presented and which doctrine in my opinion is startling and subversive of the Constitution. Whenever you permit the doctrine to come in that the habits, the usages, the customs of this party or that party or of anybody can override the Constitution of the United States, you admit a dangerous doctrine; it is startling to this country. It is the Grecian horse within the gates of Troy. And, Mr. President, it seems to me that something of this sort must have been permeating the minds of the electoral commission, something of this kind was at the bottom of every judgment we have had here. If a man was not duly appointed on the 7th day of November it was impossible, absolutely impossible to appoint him after that day, and no reasoning can shake this impregnable position.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I shall vote to count the vote of this elector with the other votes of the State of Pennsylvania. I may be mistaken in my conception of the law, but I cannot conclude that this is an officer of the United States in the contemplation of the Constitution.

But no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

The President * * * shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint embassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law, but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

These commissioners, as I understand, were not nominated and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appointed, and I hold that they are not officers of the United States in the strict sense of the word. I desire to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to the act of the 3d March, 1871, in regard to the appointment of these commissioners, to be found on page 470 of volume 16 of the Statutes:

That an exhibition of American and foreign arts, products, and manufactures shall be held under the auspices of the Government of the United States.

* * * * * * *

That a commission to consist of not more than one delegate from each State and from each Territory of the United States, whose functions shall continue until the close of the exhibition, shall be constituted, whose duty it shall be to prepare and superintend the execution of a plan for holding the exhibition, and, after conference with the authorities of the city of Philadelphia, to fix upon a suitable site.

* * * * * * *

That said commissioners shall be appointed within one year from the passage of this act by the President of the United States, on the nomination of the governors of the States and Territories respectively.

Now, I hold that without the nomination of the governors of the States and Territories, these officers could not be constituted by the President, and they are not, therefore, officers of the United States in the sense of the Constitution. They may be officers of the State and officers holding some color of authority from the United States, but they are not in the sense of the Constitution officers of the United States. In the case of the United States vs. Hartley, Mr. Justice Swayne defined an office thus:

An office is a public station or employment conferred by the appointment of government. The term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties.

Under this act, section 7:

That no compensation for services shall be paid to the commissioners or other officers provided by this act from the Treasury of the United States; and the United States shall not be liable for any expenses attending such exhibition, or by reason of the same.

In the case of Sheboygan County vs. Parker, 3 Wallace, 93:

A county officer is one by whom the county performs its usual political functions or offices of government; and a special board of commissioners appointed to perform a duty, which shall, though relating immediately to the county the ordinary county officers have not the power to transact without special legislation, are not county officers.

The functions here did not belong exclusively to the United States, and although they were constituted by this act of Congress they do not belong exclusively to the United States. The governors of the States nominate these commissioners and the President commissions them as a mere matter of form to represent their States at the centennial exhibition. I know it has been held by high judicial authority that they are officers of the United States, but I cannot concede the soundness of that view of the case. Believing that Mr. Morrell was not a person holding an office of profit or trust under the United States, I think he was eligible. It may have been an office of honor, but that is not excluded by the terms of the Constitution:

No Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

He must hold an office of trust or of profit, and that office must be one under the United States. Under the Constitution the President has the power of appointment; he has the power of appointing every constitutional officer of this Government without any authority or nomination from the governors of the States, and those officers who must come to him under the nomination of a governor of a State are not the officers contemplated by the terms of this Constitution who shall not be appointed electors. These officers, as I assert, (and I have it from good authority,) were never nominated by the President and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appointed to these positions; they were nominated by the governors of the States to him. That was an optional act with them; they could do it or not, as they chose. If the governors refused to nominate, the President could not have appointed or constituted them officers. It may be said, however, that the heads of the departments could, and that the President is the head of the executive department. Now I hold that, under the language of this Constitution, it is a violation of the spirit of it to say that the President is the head of any department of the Government.

This is the language:

But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

That does not refer to the Chief Executive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the House be notified of the action of the Senate and that it is ready to meet the House to continue the further count of the votes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday at ten o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, February 26, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 24, 1877.

The Senate having withdrawn, the House (at twelve o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) was called to order by

The SPEAKER, who said: The Chair decides that a new legislative day has been reached, and the Chaplain will now offer prayer.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, by unanimous consent, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1231) for the relief of the Board of Trustees of the Antietam National Cemetery;

An act (H. R. No. 1947) granting to the city of Stevens Point, Wisconsin, a certain piece of land;

An act (H. R. No. 2197) for the relief of Henry B. Kelly, of Louisiana, from political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment;

An act (H. R. No. 3093) for the relief of the legal representatives of Zachariah B. Washburn, deceased; and

An act (H. R. No. 3566) to authorize the Board of Trustees of the city of Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, to enter and purchase for the use of said city certain public lands.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANE obtained the floor and yielded to

Mr. CLYMER, who submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That for the more careful consideration of the objections to the report of the electoral commission in the Oregon case, the House now take a recess until ten o'clock on Monday morning.

Mr. HANCOCK. I rise to a point of order on that resolution.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to say that my object——

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not debatable.

Mr. LANE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] may make a statement.

Mr. HUBBELL. I object.

Mr. HOSKINS. I call for the yeas and nays on the resolution.

Mr. CLYMER. Do gentlemen on the other side refuse to hear a statement as to the object of this resolution?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] rises to a point of order, and will state it.

Mr. HANCOCK. My point of order is this: That in accordance with the law under which we are now proceeding, which may be said to be a law somewhat enabling in its character, after the commission has come to a conclusion which has been presented to the two Houses and objections taken, it is not within the power of either House to take a recess until the electoral vote is passed upon, nor to take a recess at all except in the contingency contemplated and provided for in the fifth section of the electoral act; and that under the fourth section of that act, which must be construed as in harmony with the provision of the Constitution of the United States upon the same subject, it is the duty of each House, when acting separately upon any question connected with the determination of the electoral vote, to proceed to that determination without a recess.

The fourth section of the act provides—

That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission, or other question arising under this act, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes, and not oftener than once; but after such debate shall have lasted two hours, it shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without further debate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that this is a clear direction to the two Houses as to the manner in which they shall proceed when in separate session to consider objections raised to the decision of the commission upon electoral votes; that this act does not enlarge the power of either House beyond what they might have under the Constitution, to take a recess when they have separated from the joint session into separate session to consider objections to an electoral vote. In other words, the Constitution provides that the President of the Senate shall open the certificates containing the electoral votes, and the votes shall then be counted. No doubt objection might be taken to the counting of the votes; and this bill provides for objections being taken to the votes even where there are not two certificates. But it has never been the practice, nor does the Constitution contemplate, that when objections are taken and the Houses separate to consider those objections, the one or the other shall take a recess and postpone the determination of the question.

I say, then, that this law does not and could not enlarge the power of either House; nor can either House, when in separate session for this purpose, do otherwise than is contemplated that they shall do under the Constitution—proceed to the consideration of the electoral vote, or questions that may be raised upon it, without a recess.

I may feel as keenly as others the mortification and disappointment of defeat; but I hope I shall not so far lose my manhood as to be unable to go on and perform the duty that devolves upon me as a member of this House. Under the Constitution and laws I hold that there is no authority given to either House to procrastinate, to delay, to resort to any legislative or parliamentary expedients to postpone the action enjoined upon the two Houses under the Constitution. The law under which we are acting does not enlarge the power of either House in this respect; and they have no more authority to take a recess than if this law had not been passed.

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Speaker, this is a question of order and not of manhood, and it would seem to be a work of supererogation that a question which has already received four distinct positive determinations by this body is again to be decided. Therefore I do not propose to waste the time of this House or perhaps to insinuate that the Speaker of this body is not capable of discharging the simplest duty of his place; that is, to follow in a beaten path. I therefore submit the question of order to the Chair. I wish further to say that in making this motion I have done it for a reason——

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I object to debate.

Several MEMBERS. Let him go on.

Mr. CLYMER. In arguing this question of order I have a right, as the gentleman who made the point has apparently impugned my motive and that of the gentlemen who sustain the resolution——

Mr. HANCOCK. I hope I was not so understood.

Mr. CLYMER. I have the right to say that so far as I am concerned, and I believe so far as the large majority of those with whom I act on this floor are concerned, this motion is made and sustained in good faith. This Oregon question involves issues of the highest moment to all the people, and if those who wish to present their reasons for opposing the finding of the commission ask for time, ask for a day, ask that the quiet of a Sabbath may come over them and their outraged feelings before this vote is taken, it is not wonderful. I have made the motion in good faith.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] will confine himself to the question of order.

Mr. CLYMER. I have tried to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he did not confine the gentleman from Texas strictly to the point of order, and therefore he felt that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had a right to reply in some slight degree to the remarks of that gentleman.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Would it be in order to respond to some of the suggestions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. Not unless directly upon the point of order. Each side having now been heard once, the Chair thinks it his duty to confine the discussion strictly to the point of order.

The Chair has already decided this point. On the 10th of this month, when the electoral vote of the State of Florida was under consideration, the same question arose and was decided.

An appeal was then taken from the decision of the Chair, and that appeal was laid upon the table by a vote of 156 to 76. The yeas and nays were not attempted to be called on laying the appeal on the table, for what reason the Chair knows not. Since that decision the Chair has with great industry consulted various persons whose names, were he at liberty to give them, would be recognized as of gentlemen of well-known knowledge of and experience in parliamentary law, and he has yet to find any one who dissents from the opinion then expressed and the ruling then made, which was that a motion under the law and in the words of the law to take a recess until the next day at ten o'clock a. m. was in order.

The Chair desires to have read by the Clerk two clauses of the law upon which his ruling was based, first, a portion of section 5 and, in the next place, the whole of section 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

And no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon.

SEC. 4. That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission, or other question arising under this act, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes, and not oftener than once; but after such debate shall have lasted two hours, it shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without further debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] and decides the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in order.

The question recurred on Mr. CLYMER'S motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 133.

Mr. FRANKLIN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 112, nays 158, not voting 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Bass, Douglas, Durand, Gibson, Goode, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hopkins, Frank Jones, Lewis, Meade, Packer, Payne, Piper, James B. Reilly, Schumaker, Stephens, Thomas, and Wheeler—20.

So the House refused to take a recess.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I move the House take a recess until half past nine o'clock on Monday morning next. [Cries of "No!" "No!" on the republican side of the House.]

Mr. HALE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I should like to have the gentleman state his point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine will state his point of order.

Mr. HALE. My point of order is that the privilege of the House to take a recess has been exhausted on one motion; that this is a dilatory motion and should not be entertained; that the regular order is the consideration of the objections to the decision of the joint commission in the case of Oregon, and that the call for the regular order which is now made brings them up at once. While I do not wish to begin the debate, being upon the floor upon the point of order, I nevertheless claim that privilege.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state——

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I object.

Mr. LANE. I am on the floor on the point of order, and wish to direct the attention of the Chair to that section of the electoral law which provides that the House shall have the right to take a recess not beyond ten o'clock the next day, except where the next day shall be Sunday, and then it shall have the right to take a recess until ten o'clock on Monday morning following. Now, if they have the right to take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening surely we have a right to take a recess until half past nine o'clock Monday morning under the law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to recognize this in any other light than as a dilatory motion.

Mr. LANE. It was made in no such spirit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to classify it in any other way. Therefore he rules that when the Constitution of the United States directs anything to be done, or when the law under the Constitution of the United States enacted in obedience thereto directs any act by this House, it is not in order to make any motion to obstruct or impede the execution of that injunction of the Constitution and the laws. [Applause.]

The Chair is sorry to hear any manifestation of applause, as it is in direct contravention of the rules.

Mr. LANE. I desire to say in justice to myself, and I think I am entitled to that privilege, that the motion was not made in any such spirit. [Cries of "Order!" on the republican side.] I am claiming that as a matter of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Oregon——

Mr. LANE. I trust the Chair will not allow it to go upon the record that I made the motion in any such spirit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not attempted to characterize the gentleman's motives nor to indicate what they were. That belongs to a higher power. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LANE. That higher power I am willing to submit to. [Applause.]

Mr. WALLING. I rise to a question of order. It is that this demonstration in the galleries and on this floor is out of order and ought to be suppressed, unless it ceases.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and directs that the demonstration shall cease. Should it occur again the Chair will direct the galleries, if the noise should occur there, to be cleared; and he will call by name any gentleman on the floor who indulges in such disorderly manifestations.

Mr. COX. I hope the rules will be enforced on the floor and that it will be cleared first. The disturbance came from the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to see how business could proceed if the floor was cleared.

Mr. LANE. I desire to present the order which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] has been recognized. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] will be recognized to offer a substitute.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF OREGON.

Mr. HALE. I offer the following order:

Ordered, That the count of the electoral vote of the State of Oregon shall proceed in conformity with the decision of the electoral commission.

Mr. LANE. I offer the following as a substitute:

Ordered, That the vote purporting to be an electoral vote for President and Vice-President, and which was given by one J. W. Watts, claiming to be an elector for the State of Oregon, be not counted.

Mr. HALE. I do not propose to open the debate from this side of the House, but yield for that purpose to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, in the few remarks I shall submit on this question I will not impugn the motives or call in question the patriotism of any gentleman upon this floor. I think we will all agree that it is our duty to consider this question with perfect candor and fairness, without passion, without excitement, and with a purpose to ascertain what is our duty in strict accordance with the principles of law. I have always had an abiding faith that the "sober second thought" of the people and of Congress would demand that whatever result is worked out on this presidential question in the forms prescribed by law shall be accepted and acquiesced in as final and conclusive. This should be the guiding principle, the acknowledged duty of every American citizen. To cut loose from this is to embark on the shoreless ocean of doubt and danger and storm, if not of anarchy or revolution. Whenever the public judgment can tolerate this, the days of the Republic will be numbered. When that period shall arrive, then soon this grand experiment of ours, of freedom and free government, will only be known in the history of the dead and buried republics which strew the pathway of time. I have so much confidence in the people, so much in the good judgment of their Representatives in Congress, that I cannot believe we have commenced or will begin any such calamitous career as this. I trust and believe that God in His providence has in store for us a better fate than this.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the question before us? At the presidential election in Oregon on the 7th of November last the republican candidates for electors, Odell, Watts, and Cartwright, received a majority of the popular vote, a majority of the votes of the qualified electors of the State.

There are some facts, I take it, about which there can now be no controversy. The first prominent fact is this: that Odell and Cartwright, two of the republican electors, as it is conceded on all hands, were duly appointed; that they received a majority of the votes of qualified voters of the State of Oregon, and that they have all the evidence of title to the electoral office which is required either by the act of Congress or by the statute of Oregon. The second great fact to which I wish to call the attention of the House is, that it has been decided by a unanimous vote of the electoral commission that Cronin, who received the governor's certificate of election, was utterly without title, and that he had no authority whatever to act or vote as an elector. When this question has been determined by a unanimous vote of the electoral commission, I shall regard it as so completely settled as that it is unnecessary to discuss it before this House.

Here then are these two facts: first, that Odell and Cartwright, two of the republican electors, were beyond all question duly appointed, and that they were authorized to act as electors; and that there was no other candidate who was entitled to give any vote for President and Vice-President, unless it was Watts, who received also a majority of the popular vote.

I care not, Mr. Speaker, for any question now before us whether Watts was ineligible, and so was not elected and could not be elected, or whether he was a de facto officer by virtue of his election; for in either event, after he had resigned there was a vacancy in the electoral office which was properly filled by the appointment of Cartwright and Odell. When the electoral college composed of Cartwright and Odell met, Watts tendered his resignation, and it was accepted. If he was elected, and as such became an officer de facto, his resignation created a vacancy. If he was not elected, if there was a non-election, then I shall maintain that there was a vacancy in the office of elector, and whether the vacancy arose from the resignation of Watts as a de facto officer, or by reason of a non-election, in either event the vacancy was properly filled by the re-appointment of Watts by the two remaining electors, and that therefore the three votes for President and Vice-President cast by Odell, Cartwright, and Watts were the votes required by the Constitution, and that they ought to be counted.

I know it has been said that Watts was ineligible; that because of his ineligibility there was no election; that if there was no election there could be no vacancy, because there can be no vacancy unless there has been an incumbent. I shall endeavor to show that this is an entirely mistaken view of the subject; that there was a vacancy, as I have already remarked, and that it was properly filled. The act of Congress upon this subject contains two provisions. First, the act says:

That each State may by law provide for the filling of any vacancies which may occur in its college of electors when such college meets to give its electoral vote.

Now that applies to a vacancy which exists on the day when the college of electors meets, and in a case where there has been an election.

But it provides, second—

That when any State has held an election * * * and failed to make a choice, the electors may be appointed on a subsequent day, in such manner as the Legislature of such State may direct.

Now, that provision of the act of Congress was designed to meet a case of non-election. How has the statute of Oregon provided for such a case as that? By the statute of Oregon it is provided that—

The electors of President and Vice-President shall convene at the seat of government on the first Wednesday of December * * * and if there shall be any vacancy in the office of an elector occasioned by (1) death, (2) refusal to act, (3) neglect to attend, or (4) otherwise, the electors present shall immediately proceed to fill * * * such vacancy. .

Now, if there was a non-election, I insist that it created a vacancy, otherwise than by death, refusal to act, or neglect to attend; and that therefore, by virtue of that provision of the statute of Oregon, Odell and Cartwright had authority to fill the vacancy. Let us see whether that is not a fair construction of this statute of Oregon. In the first place, this statute is to be liberally construed. It is a statute in aid of public rights. It is a statute designed to give the people of Oregon that right which the Constitution of the United States intended they should exercise; nay, makes it imperative upon them that they shall exercise, to appoint three electors, so that the State may be fairly represented in the electoral college. If there is any doubt about the proper construction of the statute, that doubt should be construed in favor of the authority to fill the vacancy.

But the question has been decided by the courts. I have no time to discuss or read the decided cases, and I will only name some of them, as follows: State vs. Adams, 2 Stewart's Alabama Reports, 231; State vs. City of Newark, 3 Dutcher, 185; State vs. Irvin, 5 Nevada, III; and there are many other cases to which I might refer.

It is perfectly certain that in the ten minutes allotted to me I cannot fully present the entire argument on this question. I can only therefore refer to the argument I had the honor to make in the Oregon case before the electoral commission.

The same result would follow even if Cronin had been duly elected and had the proper evidence of title to the electoral office. The record of the proceedings of Cartwright, Odell, and Watts shows that Cronin was not present at the time and place when the electoral college met. His absence, by express statute, created a vacancy. His absence is proved by three distinct evidences of the fact:

First. It is shown by the proceedings of Cartwright, Odell, and Watts, and this is conclusive evidence.

Second. It is shown by the so-called record of the proceedings of Cronin, Parker, and Miller, which admits that Cronin did not meet with Cartwright and Odell.

Third. The same record shows by inference the same fact.

The statute of Oregon requires the electors to meet at twelve o'clock m. on the 6th day of December. The record of Odell, Cartwright, and Watts shows the meeting of their college at this time. The record of Cronin and his appointees does not pretend to show any meeting at this time. It only pretends that the meeting was on the 6th day of December, and non constat it was long after the appointed time—long after the college met, voted for President and Vice-President, and adjourned. It is by no means a case where Cronin was present insisting on a right to vote with the two acknowledged electors, Odell and Cartwright. The vacancy occasioned by the absence of Cronin, even if he were an elector, was therefore duly filled. In any event, the three votes of Oregon have been lawfully given to Hayes and Wheeler; they are the votes required by the Constitution, and in law, in morals, in all justice, they are to be counted.

Mr. LANE. I desire to say that I cannot compass the legal aspects of this case in ten minutes, and therefore I yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.]

Mr. CLYMER. In after times, Mr. Speaker, this place, these scenes, shall be memorable. It will be told that in this the home of thirty-eight sovereignties, dedicated to the exercise of all the powers necessary for the peace, welfare, prosperity, and progress of more than forty millions of freemen, and consecrated by the name of him whose character is the embodiment of all that is great and pure, a crime against justice and the popular will was consummated, the iniquity of which has no parallel, as its perfidy has no limit.

For weary years the people had striven to rid themselves by the peaceful methods of law from the clutch of those who had seized power amid the agony and convulsions of civil war. The unlawful and partisan use of military power, the seductions of place and patronage, the violent appeal to the passions and prejudices of the people, the unchristian efforts to array sections and races in bitter hate, and the systematic and unblushing resort to corruption and fraud made the final struggle desperate and doubtful. The right triumphed. And in November last a solemn verdict was rendered, by which the wrongs and outrages, the infamy and disgrace, the nepotism and debauchery, the venality and imbecility of existing administration, was to be ended. Honest men rejoiced and were content, thieves trembled and plotted. That verdict must be reversed, or the vengeance of a long-suffering and outraged people would find its victims. How in order to accomplish this end the electoral votes of Florida and Louisiana were corrupted and stolen in solemn mockery of justice and right, I will not detail. The sickening and disgraceful story is familiar to every one. The people stood aghast at the bold, bad, damnable conspiracy. Their Representatives assembled here in December last intent upon defeating the consummation of the crime. Committees of this House were sent to the several States to inquire into and demonstrate it. As the testimony was gathered it became so transparent that no one, unless blinded by partisan prejudice or actuated by corrupt motives, attempted to excuse or justify it. Dreading the horrors of civil war, which were threatened and imminent, willing to exhaust all peaceful methods, relying with unshaken faith in the justice of our cause, a great majority of the democrats in Congress, abandoning what I believed to be their constitutional prerogative, agreed to submit the question to a commission chosen from the two Houses of Congress, adding to it ministers of the law, who, by reason of their exalted position, their generally received reputation for learning and their supposed impartiality, it was hoped would do equity and execute justice. How reluctantly I gave my assent to and vote for the measure I desire to place on record; how honestly I intended to abide by it I have hitherto attempted to illustrate by my every act and vote during the dreary progress of the consummation of the foul crime.

No one will be so dishonest as to assert or claim that the electoral bill could have become a law had it not been understood and believed that under it all the facts, all the frauds, all the villainies of the returning boards would be inquired into. Who would have been so unscrupulous as to assert that ministers of law and justice, no matter what their political faith, would be so recreant to the principles of their great profession, so lost to its highest obligations, so unmindful of its uniform and unbroken creed, that fraud vitiates and destroys all it taints—that by it the most solemn deeds of men are dissolved, the compacts of nations are broken up, and that under its withering breath even the great seal of a State is scorched and crumbles into dust? From the days of Moses, the first lawgiver, until this transaction, it was held impossible to vivify or sanctify it. Yet here, now, in this the very temple of liberty and home of justice and law, in the high presence of forty millions of people, and for their enslavement and debasement, we are confronted by admitted and unquestioned fraud, into which the breath of life has been breathed by those whose sworn duty it is to exterminate and destroy it. By it, and it alone, the highest elective dignity on earth is to be conferred upon one who was rejected by a vast majority of his countrymen; by it, and it alone, a usurper and political bastard is to occupy the seat of Washington; by it, and it alone, all our miseries in the past are to be perpetuated, and our hopes of reform in the immediate future are to be blasted; by it, and it alone, the spirit of the people is to be broken, their faith in human justice undermined, and their belief in the efficacy and value of popular government is to be shaken, if not utterly destroyed.

These are some few of the natural and logical results flowing from the unholy and iniquitous decisions made by a majority of the electoral commission. When faith, trust, hope, respect, and reverence are exterminated by one cruel blow of perfidy and injustice, who may justly estimate the effects upon existing civilization, who may predict the occurrences of the future? If the very frame-work of government is undermined and shaken, if unrest and distrust pervade the land, if men should long for that sense of personal security which flows from absolutism, if they should abstain from and spurn the use of the ballot because it may be steeped in fraud with impunity, if they should lose all respect for rulers and laws, if they should scoff at holy things and deride the sanctity of oaths, if they should cease to regard all obligations imposed by law and morals, if these and their attendant evils should come to us and our near posterity, he who shall write our history will, if he be guided by philosophic generalization, recur to and narrate the transactions and events, the nefarious methods and legalized villainies of this stupendous presidential crime and in them discover the germs of national demoralization and decay.

It might be difficult to determine who shall be held chiefly responsible for the despondency, disquiet, and illy-suppressed rage which pervade the minds of a large majority of the people. With them, I had, until quite recently, thought that the president of the Louisiana returning board combined more of the qualities of an abandoned political desperado than any man in the land. It was he who by perjury and fraud made it possible that the electoral vote of Louisiana might be stolen and counted, if there should be found some one who by his position and voice could determine finally that the villainies of the returning board should not be inquired into. It seemed impossible that his bad eminence could be eclipsed, but in this, in common with a large majority of my countrymen, I was mistaken, and for them and on my own account I beg the pardon of J. Madison Wells for the unintentional injustice. We in this House assisted in developing one the latchets of whose shoes even Wells, in all his moral deformity, is unworthy to unloose. Their precious names will go to posterity linked together, as those between whom, here in this Capitol, in the very temple of justice, the rights and liberties of the people were betrayed and crucified!

Sir, my great and indeed chief hope is that the enormity of the crime will bring its sure punishment. I thank the good people of the States that we in this Hall will have the power to curb, restrain, and keep in due subjection to their will, as expressed through us, him who I would fain believe will be an unwilling usurper. That no act of his shall pass unquestioned, that no wish of his detrimental to the true interests of the people can be made effectual, that the revenues cannot be squandered, that the Army and Navy may not be used to intimidate the people and overthrow Commonwealths, that the public burdens may be lightened, and that the rights and liberties of all the people of all sections may be guarded and protected—these are some of the great blessings which the majority on this floor will have it in their power to preserve for the people despite presidential returning boards in Florida and Louisiana and their confederates in this Capitol. Over our seats they at least will have no control. We hold them from a power in which fraud is not a recognized and cherished factor, and to that power, the sovereign people, we will appeal not only to sustain us, but to avenge the appalling crime against law and justice and the rights and liberties of the people of all the States, about to be consummated. Seize the glittering bauble of the Presidency if you will. It shall be.

"A barren sceptre in your gripe
Thence to be wrenched by an unlineal hand,
No friend of yours succeeding."

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. If the governor's certificate were conclusive evidence of title to the office of elector in Oregon, the papers submitted to the joint meeting of the two Houses would establish the existence of two electoral colleges or two bodies claiming to be electoral colleges, that met and cast their votes as electors of the State. The simple question would then be presented, which of these two colleges is to be considered the proper college and decided to have cast the vote for the State of Oregon? One of these bodies claiming to be an electoral college consisted in the first instance of but one person named in the governor's certificate, a minority candidate who had received a certificate from the governor of his election and who met by himself, so far as appears upon these papers, at a different time from that prescribed by the statute of Oregon and proceeded to organize an electoral college by himself. The only evidence forwarded to the President of the Senate to show the right of J. N. T. Miller and John Parker to act as electors is in the certificate signed by them jointly with E. A. Cronin, which is as follows:

This is to certify that on the 6th day of December, A. D. 1876, E. A. Cronin, one of the undersigned, and John C. Cartwright and William H. Odell, electors, duly appointed on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, as appears by the annexed certificate, to cast the vote of the State of Oregon for President and Vice-President of the United States, convened at the seat of government of said State, and for the purpose of discharging their duties as such electors; that thereupon said John C. Cartwright and William H. Odell refused to act as such electors; that upon such refusal the undersigned, J. N. T. Miller and John Parker, were duly appointed electors, as by the laws of Oregon in such cases made and provided, to fill the vacancies caused by the said refusal; that thereupon the said electors, E. A. Cronin, J. N. T. Miller, and John Parker, proceeded to vote by ballot, as by law provided, for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Done at the city of Salem, county of Marion, and State of Oregon, this 6th day of December, A. D. 1876.

E. A. CRONIN,
J. N. T. MILLER,
JOHN PARKER,
Electors for the State of Oregon, to cast the vote of said State for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The other body claiming to be a college, consisting of W. H. Odell and J. C. Cartwright, certified to us by the governor as duly elected, met at the hour of twelve o'clock m. upon the day prescribed by the statute of the State of Oregon, and proceeded at that hour, under the law of Oregon which authorizes the filling of vacancies, to fill a vacancy which existed in their electoral college. The record of their proceedings is as follows:

SALEM, OREGON, December 6, 1876—12 o'clock m.

This being the day and hour fixed by the statutes of the United States and of the State of Oregon for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President of the United States for the State of Oregon, the electors for President and Vice President of the United States for the State of Oregon met at Salem, the seat of government of said State of Oregon, at twelve o'clock noon of the 6th day of December, A. D. 1876, said day being the first Wednesday in December.

Present, W. H. Odell and J. C. Cartwright.

The meeting was duly organized by electing W. H. Odell chairman and J. C. Cartwright secretary.

The resignation of J. W. Watts, who was on November 7, A. D. 1876, duly elected an elector of President and Vice-President of the United States for the State of Oregon, was presented by W. H. Odell, and after being duly read, was unanimously accepted.

There being but two electors present, to wit, W. H. Odell and J. C. Cartwright, and the State of Oregon being entitled to three electors, the electors present proceeded to and did declare that a vacancy existed in the electoral college, and then and there, under and by virtue of the provisions of section fifty-nine, (59,) title nine, (9,) chapter fourteen, (14,) of the General Laws of Oregon, (Deady and Lane's Compilation,) the said electors, W. H. Odell and J. C. Cartwright, immediately, by viva voce vote, proceeded to fill said vacancy in the electoral college.

J. W. Watts received the unanimous vote of all the electors present, and was thereupon declared duly elected to the office of elector of President and Vice-President of the United States for the State of Oregon.

The certificate signed by Cronin, Miller, and Parker simply certifies that the three electors, Odell, Cartwright, and Cronin, met upon the 6th day of December, at no hour named; that Odell and Cartwright refused to act, and Miller and Parker were appointed to fill the vacancies.

The Revised Statutes of the United States which authorizes the filling of vacancies provides that—

Whenever a State has held an election for the purpose of choosing electors and has failed to make a choice on the day prescribed by law, the electors may be appointed on a subsequent day in such manner as the Legislature of the State may direct.

The Legislature of Oregon had by law provided that—

The electors of President and Vice-President shall convene at the seat of government on the first Wednesday of December next after their election, at the hour of twelve of the clock at noon of that day; and if there shall be any vacancy in the office of an elector occasioned by death, refusal to act, neglect to attend, or otherwise, the electors present shall immediately proceed to fill by viva voce and plurality of votes such vacancy in the electoral college; and when all the electors shall appear or the vacancies, if any, shall have been filled as above provided, such electors shall perform the duties required of them by the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] in the few remarks which he made the other day, gave a definition of the word "otherwise," which, I believe, is correct, namely: in any other manner or any other form or for any other cause. Then, if the office of an elector was vacant, the State of Oregon authorizes the two other electors to meet at twelve o'clock on that day to proceed to fill the vacancy, and they are not authorized to do it at any other time. The Cronin certificate neither shows that he attended nor that Odell and Cartwright refused to act at the hour named, while the latter show that their college met, organized, they being the only electors present, and proceeded regularly to fill the vacancy in strict conformity with the law of the State.

But because Cronin bungled in the management of his part of the scheme, planned in New York and telegraphed in cipher to Oregon, the action of the governor of the State in certifying to the election of the minority candidate is repudiated and disowned. It is admitted that Cronin was not elected, but claimed that Watts's ineligibility created a vacancy that the college had no power under the statute to fill.

The decision of the supreme court of Rhode Island has been referred to here and elsewhere. But the language of the statutes of Rhode Island in relation to the filling electoral vacancies is very different from that in the Oregon statutes. The Rhode Island statute expressly requires the Legislature to be called together to fill a vacancy in case of a failure to elect, and in another section it provides for filling vacancies by the other electors, in case, after an election by the people, "any electors, chosen as aforesaid, shall after their said election decline or be prevented from any cause from serving therein." The supreme court of Rhode Island substantially held that the vacancy must be filled by the Legislature, and arose from a failure to elect, and could not therefore be filled by the other electors upon the ineligible elector declining to act.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I have not time.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman answer me this question, if the courts did not hold in that case that Corliss was not elected?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I have given you the language of the statute and the decision of the court.

The language of the Oregon statute is "that the electors shall convene," &c., if there shall be any vacancy in the office of an elector—"if there shall be any vacancy." It does not specify whether the man shall have been elected or not, but if the office is vacant. Surely the office is vacant if it has never been filled. A house is vacant just as much before it is occupied by a tenant as it is when the occupants have been turned out or voluntarily left it. Under that statute the electors who met at twelve o'clock on the 6th of December were authorized to fill that vacancy and they did fill it.

I desire more particularly to argue and present this point. Of course this great subject embraces other questions upon which we could claim the vote of Oregon, and which I have not time to discuss at length. I would be glad to follow the objections that I have heard urged here many times.

I stated the other day that I thought there was no power at this presidential count to go into the question of eligibility. I repeat that statement. I believe we stand here as inspectors of an election, or as judges after the votes have been cast, and we are merely to enumerate those votes; we are not to go into a judicial investigation to ascertain whether those who voted in the various colleges were eligible or not.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, we have nearly reached the end of the swelling scene; part farcical, part tragical. Farcical in that it has been a burlesque upon truth and justice; tragical in that it has been murderous to every principle of law, fair dealing, and honor that should govern among men.

I was in favor of the bill creating this electoral commission; I indulge now in no childish repinings over the result. I thought we could trust the selected men of the highest court of the foremost government in the world.

Human laws cannot put limitations upon fraud; they may punish, but they cannot prevent. We trusted these men and they have betrayed our trust. All laws must be administered by human agencies; if you have the corrupt judge, no matter what your laws may be, you hear a false judgment. Jeffreys was a just judge save where the interests of the Crown were concerned. Bacon, "the wisest and the meanest of mankind," took bribes, yet rendered, with one or two exceptions, just judgments. Hale, although refusing to take the civic oaths of Cromwell, yet was made one of his judges.

Our judges of the Supreme Court hold their offices for life, with liberal salaries; are independent of the mutations of politics, each having his personal and official honor to maintain, and I thought that surely there—if the depravity of radicalism was not universal—we could find integrity. My confidence was generous, patriotic, undoubting in these men and in our case submitted. But in this electoral commission supposed incorruptible sages, in their exalted positions, have played the part of banded jockies, and have done in the face of the world that which hungry mountebanks should scorn. They have done

> Such an act,
> That blurs the grace and blush of modesty;
> Calls virtue, hypocrite; takes off the rose
> From the fair forehead
> And sets a blister there.

And these successors of John Marshall! To-day how must each feel "his title, like a giant's robe, hang loose about him." Suspicion is whispered that certain judicial commissions bear the dark and damning stain of intrigue and ring jobbery; and that the first judgment of their holders was the price paid for their promotion. These indeed are days of degeneracy and shame. Read and consider the record of the decisions of the majortity of these men; note their shuffling tricks, their inconsistencies, their evasions; and they are such as would bring the blush to neophytes in learning; such as pigmies in self-respect and honor would abhor.

In the fable we read that the cat was changed by the fairy into the fine lady; yet at the banquet, upon the appearance of a rat, this fine lady chased it. Apply the story and you need no suggestion to draw a conclusion from its moral.

You have but a "barren scepter in your gripe." Your fresh garlands entwine around your hatchment. Your party stands to-day surrounded and saturated with such turpitude that the judgment of the hour and of mankind hereafter must be against it.

Your jugglers have proclaimed your victory, but it is tarnished with shame and accompanied by perjury and every species of fraud. The republican party is in the attitude of—

> A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,
> That from a shelf the precious diadem stole
> And put it in his pocket.

What of the South? The conduct of her Representatives during the last few months has refuted the slanders of years. Their votes and utterances here have been for peace, law, order.

The South has been familiar with misfortune; sorrow and defeat have mingled in her experience. She has drunk the cup of bitterness to the dregs, but thank God is a stranger to dishonor, and most of us from that section stand for the faithful and inflexible execution of the electoral bill. Honor says it, policy says it; without we drift into confusion. Our escutcheon is unstained. We can better afford to accept disappointment and defeat than by parliamentary shifts and tricks to avoid the orderly execution of the law against which only eighteen democrats of this House and only one in the Senate voted.

Something has been said of bargaining with the South. You cannot win them over by bribes; they want nothing but justice. I see before me a distinguished and cherished friend from that section, [Mr. LAMAR,] a gentleman of the highest ability and unspotted integrity; honored by his people and worthy of their trust. I speak not by his authority, but as his name has been mentioned in this connection, I say that I am sure he would shrink from such a coalition as his soul would recoil from a cruel wound of dishonor.

The men you could bribe in the South are not worth having. You would loathe them when you got them; they would have no following or influence at home. And if they were to join with your party to sustain it in its past and present policy, they would find themselves political pariahs in the land of their birth. Nothing will conciliate the South but justice, and you will so find it. They want rest, order, home rule. Your largess there will be thrown away if given to corrupt. These people are your peers, equals, before the law; and neither by bribery nor force can you change them from serfdom to villainy. In the precious name of their manhood and womanhood I repudiate the intimation with scorn unutterable.

There will be no division in the democracy. Lay not that flattering unction to your souls. It is a difference to-day only among them as to the policy of the hour. And now I ask you, my countrymen of the republican party, in the name of justice, of peace, of truth, of liberty, of civilization, in the name of all these, I ask you to halt. Forbearance has its limits; I say it not in menace but in sorrow and solemn earnestness.

The manacles must fall from the limbs of our sister Southern States. You must call off your dogs. These unfortunate people have been baited and badgered until the just sentiments of the world in indignation condemn your cruel policy.

Is yours to be an imitation of the celebration of a Roman victory with these long-suffering States chained to your triumphal car? Are the clanking of their chains to be heard mingling with your hosannahs to liberty and free government? If the fraudulent action of a villainous returning board of a State is so sacred in your eyes that by reason of State rights you will not go behind the certificate of a governor whom you have adjudged a usurper, how dare you longer keep your soldiers there to sustain the thieves who have been necessary to your disgrace, unless it is by a bargain with successors in villainy?

While you stand up for the inviolability of State rights, while you cannot go behind the corrupt return of a board in Louisiana that huckstered the vote of their State from one end of the country to the other for a price, you organize the Legislature of that State with your bayonets. While the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] says that "the flag shall float only over States and not provinces, over freemen and not slaves," your President forbids in South Carolina a peaceful celebration of the anniversary of the birth of Washington! While the gentleman from Ohio says this, your Senate on the same day, twelve years after the close of the war, is refusing amnesty and your President has a pardon for every bribe-taker and every whisky thief!

"States and provinces—freemen and slaves!" What means this language, but a confession on the part of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] who represents the district of Mr. Hayes that sovereign Commonwealths have been degraded and their citizens denied their rights? Ah! well do you know the crimes you have committed upon these States. But I must hurry on as my ten minutes are nearly gone.

Inconsistency and contradiction mark the whole course of your policy. You have seemed to try to achieve for yourselves the lament of Junius concerning a party of whom he wrote, you have given "immortality to the perishable parts of your infamy." What a hollow mockery will be the pageant of your inauguration of your President. With this record, with the sun of truth blazing upon the iniquities by which your power was obtained, this instead of being the day of your victory will be the day of your death. The vials of the people's indignation will be emptied upon you; you will hear the hisses of scorn for what you have done. The page of history will record the eternal verdict against you. Just so surely as a God of justice rules the affairs of men, just so surely will the victories of truth and justice in time prevail.

Democrats, peace, courage, prudence, moderation! I implore you now to remember the millions whom we represent.

As I have stood here for moderation and peace throughout this Congress, I accept to-day defeat, bitter as it is, rather than dishonor. I "bear the ills I have rather than fly to those I know not of." When I am asked to give my vote to resist the execution of this law, my answer is, no objective point is given to which we would move that would not bring upon us confusion, anarchy, and chaos.

The strength of our position is in its moral grandeur. Let us not impair this and throw away our great opportunities. Let us not take counsel of our passions. Principle, statesmanship, policy—all these command us to stand by the execution of the law we have made. We agreed to trust certain men, and they have betrayed us. To rush into revolution would be suicidal; it is madness. Be patient; the people will rebuke the iniquities of which we complain. The day of deliverance will soon come. The authors of misrule will call upon the mountains to fall upon them to hide them and their crimes from the sight of men. There will be no divided democratic party. Those who so prophesy only proclaim what they wish.

Unshaken, unseduced, let us stand for our honor, like Clan Alpine's oak, "the firmer it roots him, the ruder it blows." [Loud applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, we have had many searching investigations since the commencement of this session in relation to transactions connected with the late presidential election. Gentlemen on the other side of the House have been crying "fraud, bribery, and corruption" from the time they first set their feet upon this floor at the commencement of the session. Yet in this very case, in connection with the Oregon election, we find the first positive evidence of bribery; we find the first evidence of a bribe taken to influence a man in relation to casting an electoral vote, that bribe being taken by a democrat and paid by a democrat. The evidence in the Oregon case, when you examine it, demonstrates these facts. It is not rumor; it is sworn evidence taken before a committee of the Senate.

I wish to call attention to a few of the leading facts in connection with the Cronin vote. About the 13th of November it came to light that Mr. Watts, one of the republican electors, was a postmaster. From that time telegrams and letters and politicians were pouring into the State of Oregon in order to see if a democratic vote could not be secured. Mr. Cronin had many letters directed to him. He had many conferences with his party friends, who urged upon him the necessity of casting that vote; but he repeatedly declared, and declared to the chairman of the democratic committee of that State, Mr. Bellinger, that he would not cast that vote, even if Governor Grover should issue a certificate to him. But that man was "seen," between the 28th of November and the 2d of December, by Mr. Patrick, who went from Omaha at the instance of some one in New York City. That man was "seen" in the city of Portland. He was met on the streets by Mr. Bellinger. He was invited to go up and see Mr. Patrick. He then declared he would have nothing whatever to do with this transaction. But he was prevailed upon to go. He went into Judge Strong's office and there found Mr. Patrick. He came down with a pledge upon his lips to cast that vote. He went to Salem and received the certificate from Governor Grover on the morning of the election. He went into the electoral college; he retained that certificate in the face of decency and against all right; and he cast that vote. On the next Friday he was taken to the bank of Ladd & Tilton, in the city of Portland, by Mr. Bellinger, and there were delivered to him drafts for $3,000 in gold.

These are the facts. Mr. Patrick was breathed on from Gramercy Park, New York City; Mr. Patrick breathed on Mr. Cronin; Mr. Cronin cast that vote and received the $3,000, after having repeatedly declared that he would not be a party to depriving the people of Oregon of their voice in this election.

Let me refer to another striking feature in this Oregon matter. I have not time to consider the law; but I wish to call attention to another fact. I notice that Governor Grover states in his evidence that he never announced what his decision would be in relation to the issuing of that certificate until the morning of the election, until he filed that written opinion which had been prepared days before, and until he whispered in the ear of his private secretary to issue that certificate to Cronin. What do we find? We find that on the 1st day of December there was sent from the city of Portland a telegram, which translated is as follows:

DECEMBER 11, 1876.

To Hon. SAMUEL J. TILDEN,
No. 15 Gramercy Park, New York:

I shall decide every point in the case of post-office elector in favor of the highest democratic elector and grant the certificate accordingly. Rule morning of 6th instant. Confidential.

That purported to come from Governor Grover himself or under his direction.

They say he never directed that telegram to be sent and that it was not sent by him or under his direction. I say there is positive internal and conclusive evidence that Governor Grover did dictate that telegram. Mr. Patrick saw him between the 28th and the 1st. He was there in the city of Portland. That telegram is in Mr. Patrick's handwriting. That telegram states that he would rule on the morning of the 6th, and what his decision would be. He did rule on the morning of the 6th, and did decide precisely as the telegram stated. He had a written opinion which he had been preparing some time before that, which he actually filed on that day, which bore date of that day.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but there were gathered there the democratic candidates for electors, one living between two hundred and three hundred miles from that point, and another living over three hundred miles from there; they gathered there on that day prepared to act as the body-guard of Mr. Cronin, in order that he should retain that certificate and cast that vote.

Not only that, but Mr. Cronin selected the very men who were to act with him before Governor Grover announced that decision. There is positive evidence he had done that before the opinion was pronounced. He selected Mr. Parker and Mr. Miller to act with him in the electoral college. Before the certificate was issued preparations were made, and a crowd of the leading democrats gathered there to see that performance.

Notwithstanding this, notwithstanding the decision had been made a week before, notwithstanding it had been communicated to the highest democratic authority in the United States, the chief at Gramercy Park, what the decision would be, we find Governor Grover donning the judicial robes of the State of Oregon, marching in and taking his seat in the room of the supreme court, and there hearing argument from ten in the morning until ten o'clock at night on that very proposition.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, we are now nearing a completion of the electoral count. We are able to see the end, and know that it means the inauguration of a minority candidate into the presidential office. No man denies that the people of this Republic have by more than a quarter of a million majority at the ballot-box expressed a preference for another candidate; but the public will is to be set aside and stand for nought and the will of faction be executed.

Sir, it is useless and would be distasteful to review the steps by which we have been brought to this result. The most obvious, the most dangerous, the most criminal of all the influences that have conspired to produce it has been the wanton and wicked perversion of governmental powers by those in whose hands they were lodged. When a Cabinet minister, an executive counsellor became comptroller-general of the republican forces, subjecting himself to the necessity of abusing his high functions in the abject service of party, the design was deliberately formed, in my judgment, to thwart by all the power and patronage of Government that adverse judgment which the people stood ready to pronounce upon the general official delinquency that existed in all the Departments. They have pronounced that judgment, and although you may annul it through the machinery of servile and corrupt returning boards, and prevent its execution, there it stands and will forever stand, a perpetual record against you and an imperishable reminder of the transcendent villainies that have defeated its execution.

Mr. Speaker, I desire here, sir, briefly to state that I yielded such support to the electoral bill as a man always gives who has to choose between disagreeable alternatives, and I have as yet no occasion to regret the choice I did make. It did not seem to me that the Houses would ever agree upon so just a thing as the counting in of Governor Tilden. It did seem to me that in the event of that disagreement that seemed inevitable the republican party would force its candidate into the presidential office and force upon the outraged majority in this country the dire alternatives of submission to outrage or resistance by force. Resistance meant war, "the sum of all evils;" submission might have been construed into dishonor. I could not feel certain, sir, that the American people would restrain their righteous indignation in the presence of such a provocation and look for relief to the peaceful ballot or the tardy methods of the law. My vote, therefore, was in the interest of peace—to prevent the rule of force by providing a right of law.

Mr. Speaker, a few words now in reference to the principles by which the commission seems to be guided in the exercise of its great jurisdiction. It is painfully evident, sir, that the spirit of party has crept into and corrupted its deliberations. It seems but too manifest that a majority of the tribunal have been embarrassed by the almost insurmountable difficulty of laying down general principles that would leave in their applications every controverted vote to Hayes. Before the governor of Oregon certified to the election of Cronin, the doctrine, as I could collect it from the press and debates in the other end of the Capitol, was that the governor's certificate was conclusive, and behind it you could not go. Governor Grover's action made it necessary that this position should be abandoned, and the discomfited leaders are driven back to the returning boards. "You may look," said they, "to see if the governor's certificate is founded upon the decision of a returning board, but when you reach a returning board, then indeed do you approach an insurmountable barrier. To go behind that is to invade State rights—a sacred domain." To deny the solemn certification of the highest officer of a State and inquire into its truth is all right, a governor being supposed to be a cipher in a State government; but when you get to a returning board by overriding the governor you must stop, for there you reach the domain of State jurisdiction. There is no sanctity, according to this doctrine, about the solemn certificate of a mere governor, though he be a man like Grover, of high culture and repute among his people and worthy of a seat in the first deliberative assembly of the world. Though he be all this, and the highest executive officer of a prosperous and intelligent people, there is nothing sacred about his certificate, as there is about the certificate of the sweet-scented quartette we are now entertaining so royally in the basement of this building—the virtuous Wells, the meek Anderson, and their pious confederates in the business of peddling State franchises.

To be brief, Mr. Speaker, on this point, if you impute conclusiveness to either certificate, to concede it to the subordinate tribunal—the returning board—and deny it to the highest executive authority, the governor, is a gross absurdity that only the most frightful exingency of party could prompt fair-minded men to embrace.

Mr. Speaker, one other point. My idea has been that upon the various doubtful and disputed questions it would be right and just and patriotic to give the people the benefit of all the doubts. I had hoped the commission would take that view. It has seen proper to take a different view and has given to party, to a minority party, the benefit of every doubt. In Florida it decides to hear proof when a case of ineligibility cannot be made out against Humphreys. In Louisiana it refuses when a case of ineligibility can be made out against Levissee and Brewster. In Oregon it hears proof because the necessities of the one side require that proof shall be heard upon other points.

From Florida a protest came up from every department of her government against the counting of her vote for Hayes; still the commission count it. From Louisiana came an appeal from 10,000 voters, disfranchised by the returning board, and to that appeal the commission turn a deaf ear; but no technicality stands in the way of the commission when a small majority in Oregon plead for a recognition. Sir, I proceed no further with the review because the subject is sickening. This commission will pass into history and its judgments will meet the solemn and deliberate inquest of posterity.

I could wish for the honor of my country that its action had been such as to free it from all suspicion of that bias and prejudice that do so often pervert human judgment and defeat the ends of justice. As it is I have this to say, that if through its action, partisan, unfair, and dishonest as I believe it to be, Hayes should become President, I will and the people I represent will recognize him as the head of the Government, but they can never regard him as rightfully there. They will feel that justice, that fair play, that common honesty have been shamefully violated to place him there; and whatever consideration they accord him will be given to him as a President de facto and not one of right. They will submit because they will think it better to bear the evils they have than fly to others they know not of. They will trust to peaceful remedies, confident that sooner or later a righteous retribution will return upon the heads of the tormenters the unspeakable wickedness with which they have afflicted a nation.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I did not know until I came into the Hall this morning that this opportunity was to be accorded to me. I cannot, of course, under the circumstances, and in a ten-minute speech, express myself as I desire upon the subjects involved in this debate.

The questions before the House, touching the electoral vote of Oregon, were learnedly argued in the presence of the commission, and have been deliberated upon here and throughout the country until nothing new remains to be said.

I have no disposition, sir, rising as I do late in this discussion, to repeat the now familiar arguments which support the finding of the commission. Upon those questions that may be denominated legal and constitutional questions, I shall content myself by saying that in my judgment the commission, acting in its high capacity of arbiter upon the dispute submitted, could have returned no other finding than the one it did return without violence to the Constitution of the United States and to the laws of Oregon, and without assault upon the rights of the people, not only of that State, but of the whole Union.

But, sir, aside from these questions there are other considerations clustering about the history of the electoral vote of Oregon, and of the crisis from which we shall soon emerge, which ought to be potent in shaping the judgment of the House upon the question soon to be called.

It is meet, it seems to me, that the attention of the House and of the country should be directed to these considerations, as has been done to some extent by others; and I only regret now that my poor ten minutes will be too short to enable me to speak in detail.

Sir, we have heard to-day from the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] and again from the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BROWN,] as we have heard upon the occasions of each debate that has followed the preceding reports of the commission, charges of fraud hurled with whatever force of voice and of rhetoric these gentlemen were able to command against the party that was triumphant at last November's election, commingled with which were denunciations, bitter denunciations of the commission for finding upon the oaths and consciences of its members the fact of that triumph. I volunteer no defense of the commission. From such puerile and pusillanimous attacks it needs no defense.

I did not, sir, aid in the creation of this commission, but I am to-day proud as an American citizen in the knowledge that it occupies a position so exalted that even the swiftest arrow from the quivers of the little men who assail cannot reach it, and that its members walk among their calumniators like giants among pigmies; and so, sir, they shall take their place upon the page with which the historian is now busy. Neither the tearful words of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania nor the ambitious philippic of the no less distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, to both of whom I have already alluded, will serve to quite destroy the commission or its members in the esteem of mankind, nor can anything that may be said upon this side of the Chamber add to the brightness of their already established good fame.

Partisanship is the crime of the commission. Is it not curious that while the supposed partisanship of the eight who concur is denounced there is a silence profound as the hush of death as to the at least equal partisanship of the seven who dissent? No one upon this side has uttered a word of censure of these seven, for no doubt they acted, as did their associates, upon an honest conviction, and were guided by a high sense of duty as they comprehended its dictations to them.

Sir, we have to-day been regaled not only with these expressions of impotent anger, but filibuster has been called in to aid those who cannot accept defeat. I am not surprised at this, nor at the chagrin and natural wrath of our democratic friends, for with everything to gain and nothing to lose they cunningly set a trap and were themselves caught; caught by the act of God, who disposes of all human events, and by the act of the Illinois Legislature, which disposed of Judge Davis. [Laughter.]

> They digged a pit, they digged it deep,
> They digged it for their brother;
> But through their sin they did fall in
> The pit they digged for 'tother.

[Renewed laughter.]

The quotation may be neither exact nor elegant, but its aptness will not be questioned.

Mr. Speaker, upon this whole subject I think we would do well to act upon the suggestion that was made the other day in the course of the Louisiana debate, and leave the reckoning for all these things to the dies iræ, dies illa, to which the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WATTERSON,] who gathers the lambs, so pathetically pointed as "the sweet by and by" of his party that loomed up before his enraptured vision somewhere in the eons of the shadowy future.

Seriously, sir, I have no inclination to exult in the discomfiture of the men who were their own victims.

No doubt many gentlemen upon that side, as I know there were some upon this, consented to the commission believing that it would prove a wise and constitutional means of settling an otherwise irreconcilable difference. For such all honor. But let them now abide by the results like men, as some of their number are inclined to do, and have done with the spume, the impotent raging of words, the Mexican symptom that we have been compelled to witness to-day and heretofore. From such exhibitions I am glad to note that the men here from the Southern States who were of the late confederacy are generally exempt, and that they are disposed to keep faith and to stand by the results of the law. I have noted it, and it has been noted I know by the people of the Northern States who accept it as a good omen for the future. I hope and believe that the incoming administration of President Hayes will be so considerate and just toward the section and the interests which they represent that their manly and dignified acquiescence now may turn to gratification hereafter—the gratification that springs from the consciousness that the best has been done for their interests and for the interests of the whole country.

It is, sir, a consideration second in importance to no other that the finding of the commission, upon which we are soon to pass, pronounces against the success of bribery and chicane in politics. Let gentlemen gather up for a moment in their memories the substance of the cipher telegrams, which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SAMPSON] so fully exposed, and the full history of the attempt to steal the electoral vote of Oregon, and my meaning will be apprehended.

Sir, since the first day of the present session charges of corruption and fraud against the republican party have been rung in this Chamber until its four walls seem never to have been silent with their echoes. Of whatever wrongs the republican party may be guilty (and I do not claim it to be perfect by any means) I have no words of palliation or excuse, nor have any been uttered upon this side. While we have been compelled to listen to these charges, uttered with the usual vehemence of falsehood, it was reserved until this closing act in the drama of the presidential count to reveal the white-souled purity of the source from which these charges emanate.

Look at it for a moment, gentlemen. Certain managers of a great national political party; a party which believes in its divine right to rule this country more solemnly than it believes in the right of God to rule the universe; a party which is frantic for power, with a half million of expectant henchmen, many of whom are now swarming the streets and avenues of this capital, blear-eyed with watching, lank with waiting, with an incurable itch for the loaves and fishes of public office—certain managers I say of such a party coolly and boldly attempt to utilize the genius that was able to steal a railroad to steal the franchise of the entire people of a State.

It is not, sir, alone the people who dwell upon the banks of the stream that erst heard that were to have been the victims. The victims were to have been the whole American people. When the day dawns that shall witness the first success of such an attempted crime the people will do well to look carefully to the title-deeds of their democracy and to prepare for all that has been imagined or feared from the downfall of their liberties.

No sound save its own dashings

A bastard republicanism, the beginning of some unknown end, and the most terrible of despotisms will then usurp the place of a free and just government. Whoever attempts to corrupt the ballot-box or seeks to stifle its decrees stands proclaimed by the act an enemy to free institutions, and every hand in America should hold a whip to lash the scoundrel through the land. The crime of Oregon will go upon the page of history involving the names of men in high places and deep in the confidence and schemes of a great political party as the equal in perfidy, although wanting the attribute of manliness, of the crime of Aaron Burr and of the men who plotted against the Republic in 1861.

Sir, when the flag which the watchful statesman and sleepless attorney [Mr. FIELD, of New York] saw by the dim light of the midnight stars when the Senate was in the last agony of parturition for the law under which we are now acting shall be next lowered upon its staff, a heartfelt thank God will go up from all the length and breadth of the land that the man whose genius inspired this crime is not to be foisted upon the American people as their Chief Magistrate. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, when this Congress assembled in December last it witnessed the great American people from one end of the country to the other divided upon the question as to which candidate had been lawfully elected to the high office of President of the United States. The business industries of the country were paralyzed, public confidence destroyed, and the danger of civil war was imminent. That Mr. Tilden had received a majority of more than two hundred thousand of the popular vote was not disputed. That he had secured a majority of the presidential electors in the several States and was lawfully entitled to be inducted into this great office was the firm belief of more than one-half of the people of this great country. The hour was one of great peril to our institutions, and many were apprehensive that we were but entering into the dark night of anarchy and confusion. After many weeks of angry discussion, which resulted in still further arousing the passions of the people, a measure of adjustment was proposed. It was believed that there was still patriotism enough left in the American Congress to vouchsafe an honorable and fair settlement of this most dangerous question. You remember, sir, we all recall at this moment how our hopes revived and how gladly we hailed the introduction of the bill recommended by a joint committee of conference of the Senate and House of Representatives. It was welcomed as the harbinger of peace by the people of this great country.

Mr. Speaker, I gave that bill my earnest support. It had upon this floor no friend more ardent in its advocacy than myself. I believed it to be a measure in the interest of peace. I believed that those who framed it, as well as those who gave it their support upon this floor, were honest in their statements, that no man could afford to take the Presidency with a clouded title, and that the object of this bill was to ascertain which of the candidates was lawfully entitled to the electoral votes of Florida and Louisiana. I never mistrusted for a moment that statesmen of high repute could in so perilous an hour, upon so grave a question "palter with words in a double sense."

Mr. Speaker, we who are the actors in this drama know, and history will record the fact, that the conference bill became a law, and the electoral commission was organized, not for the purpose of ascertaining which candidate had prima facie a majority of the electoral votes; not for the purpose of ascertaining that the governor of Florida and the de facto governor of Louisiana had given certificates to the Hayes electors. It was never dreamed that a tribunal consisting in part of five judges of the highest court upon earth was to be constituted whose sole duty was to report a fact known to everyman in the land: that the returning board of Louisiana had given the votes of that State for the Hayes electors. I state, sir, now, in the presence of this House and of the country, that the avowed object of that bill was to ascertain which candidate had received a majority of the legal votes of those States. The avowed object of the bill was to secure the ends of justice; to see that the will of the people was executed; that the Republic suffered no harm; to see, sir, that the title to this great office was not tainted with fraud. How well this tribunal has discharged the sacred trust committed to them, let them answer to history.

The record will stand, Mr. Speaker, that this tribunal shut its eyes to the light of truth; refused to hear the undisputed proof that a majority of 7,000 legal votes in the State of Louisiana for Tilden was by a fradulent returning board changed to 8,000 majority for Hayes. The republican Representative from Florida [Mr. PURMAN] has solemnly declared upon this floor that Florida had given its vote to Tilden. I am not surprised that two distinguished republican Representatives from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE and Mr. PIERCE] have in such thrilling tones expressed their dissent from the judgment of this tribunal. By this decision fraud has become one of the legalized modes of securing the vote of a State. Can it be possible that the American people are prepared to accept the doctrine that fraud, which vitiates all contracts and agreements, which taints the judgments and decrees of courts, which will even annul the solemn covenant of marriage, fraud which poisons wherever it enters, can be inquired into in all of the relations of human life, save only where a returning board is its instrument and the dearest rights of a sovereign people are at stake.

But we are told that we created this tribunal and must abide its arbitrament. I propose to do so in good faith. I have from the beginning opposed every movement that looked to delay. I have voted against all dilatory motions. But, sir, the decision of this tribunal is too startling and too far-reaching in its consequences to pass unchallenged. That the returning board of Louisiana will find no imitators in our future history is more than I dare hope. The pernicious doctrine that fraud and perjury are to be recognized auxiliaries in popular elections is one that may yet return to plague its inventors. The worst effect of this decision, Mr. Speaker, will be its lesson to the young men of our country. Hereafter old-fashioned honesty is at a discount and villainy and fraud the legalized instruments of success. The fact may be conceded, the proof overwhelming, that the honest voice of a State has been overthrown by outrage and fraud, and yet the chosen tribunal of the people has entered of solemn record that there is no remedy.

Oh judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts.

Mr. Speaker, my criticism of the decision of this tribunal rests upon its finding in the cases of Louisiana and Florida; upon the Oregon case I have no criticism to offer. It is true that but two votes of this State could have been given to Hayes, had the decision first adopted by the commission been followed in the case of Oregon. However inconsistent it may be with other rulings of the commission, standing alone it is in the main correct. The sanctity of seal of State and certificate of governor applied only to Louisiana and Florida; the governor of Oregon was not "of the household of the faithful."

The people of Oregon cast their votes for Hayes, and no vote or act of mine shall stand in the way of its being so recorded. Such have been my convictions from the beginning, and the great wrong done to Louisiana and Florida cannot warp my convictions at this hour.

Mr. Speaker, we have now reached the final act in this great drama, and the record here made will pass into history. Time, the great healer, will bring a balm to those who feel sick at heart because of this grievous wrong. But who can estimate, what seer can foretell the evils that may result to us and our children from this judgment? Fortunate indeed will it be for this country if our people lose not faith in popular institutions; fortunate, indeed, if they abate not their confidence in the integrity of that high tribunal for a century the bulwark of our liberties. In all times of popular commotion and peril the Supreme Court of the United States has been looked to as the final arbiter, its decrees heeded as the voice of God. How disastrous may be the result of decisions so manifestly partisan I will not attempt to forecast.

Sir, let this vote be now taken and the curtain fall upon these scenes forever. To those who believe, as I do, that a grievous wrong has been suffered, let me entreat that this arbitrament be abided in good faith, that no hinderance or delay be interposed to the execution of the law, but that by faithful adherence to its mandates, by honest efforts to revive the prostrate industries of the country and restore public confidence by obedience to the constituted authorities, we will show ourselves patriots rather than partisans in this hour of our country's misfortune.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, each successive decision of the majority of the members of the electoral commission has but added, if anything could add, to the dishonor and infamy of that tribunal, which, conceived in patriotism and organized in the interest of truth, justice, and peace, has, violating all law and annulling the Constitution itself, become the avowed champion and defender of perjury and fraud. But unless we upon this side of the House propose to forfeit our own self-respect and share with them their shame and dishonor, we must adhere strictly to the letter and spirit of the law under which they are empowered to act. To do otherwise will be to transfer from them to ourselves, in part at least, the opprobrium which they have so justly merited, and to lose all the advantages to be gained by a continuance in the straightforward, manly course that has characterized our action as a party thus far; and this in my judgment we cannot afford to do. I have endeavored on all occasions as a representative of the people to apply to my public acts the same rule of action that has guided me in the private walks of life, and applying this test here, it is perfectly clear to my mind that the paths of duty and honor alike lead in the direction I have indicated. There, and there alone, lies whatever hope we may dare to entertain for the perpetuity of the Republic. In no other way can there be even a possibility of preserving civil liberty and a free government. Both may survive the wrongful, unjust, and corrupt decisions of a partisan tribunal, with all their lamentable consequences, including that of the installation of a President counted in by fraud, until we can again appeal to the people for their reversal. But neither can exist where anarchy reigns supreme, and anarchy will prevail whenever an attempt to delay the declaration of the final result of the late presidential election, until after the 4th day of March, shall succeed. The popular idea that the President of the Senate will, in such a contingency, become the acting President of the United States until a new election can be held is entirely erroneous. The Government will in such a case be without an Executive head or officer, and there is no law under which the vacancy can be supplied by another election. It will be worse than folly, therefore, it will be suicidal, for us, one of the fundamental principles of whose party has ever been obedience to law, to refuse now to permit the enforcement of a law which we ourselves have enacted. I was about to say that it would be revolution itself. But whether that would be true or not, nothing can be more certain than that when the only law-abiding party in a country breaks from its mooring and drifts into the whirlpool of popular passion that is the beginning of the end.

Sir, the eyes of the nation are upon us. Our action is awaited with breathless anxiety. If we can rise above the level of the mere partisan politician and establish some claims to statesmanship, by subordinating passion to reason, and adopting the only policy that can save the Government, all will yet be well. But if we cannot do this, if driven to madness by a bitter sense of the outrageous and iniquitous wrong that has been perpetrated upon us we shall find ourselves unequal to the situation in which we are placed, then farewell, a long farewell to civil liberty and free government.

> A thousand years scarce serve to form a state;
> An hour may lay it in the dust; and when
> Can man its shattered splendor renovate,
> Recall its virtues back, and vanquish time and fate?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr LE MOYNE. In disposing of the questions now before us much allowance is to be made for the bitterness of the disappointment which the defeated party must naturally feel, and although participating fully in the bitterness of that disappointment, yet it seems to me the only duty of to-day is the duty of submission. But he who has considered the controversy as merely a contest between two parties has greatly underestimated its importance. The result is not only a triumph of the republican party, for one of the issues was whether a popular majority could peaceably change the administration of this Government in opposition to the minority while that minority had the control of the Federal offices. Any politician of ordinary intelligence can see that if the republican party had not controlled the office-holders it could not have came near enough to a majority to have continued the contest. The result shows how completely the people can be controlled by the office-holders. But the contest has brought us face to face with another great danger which threatens our national existence; that is, that we have such an army of office-holders appointed or to be appointed by the President, and our people are so infected with the greed for office that many men in both parties are willing to cheat for the control of the offices and many of them also willing to fight for them. Will this element be encouraged or repressed by the result; which has been demonstrated to be the stronger: the will of the majority of the people or the control of the machinery of the Government, including the power of appointment to the supreme bench?

The whole democratic party felt assured that they had secured the victory, and honestly believed that in all fairness they should be allowed honest returns and to inaugurate the President, but we found this was to be denied; we were called turbulent and ready for rebellion, and were threatened with the Army in spite of all this. Confident in the justice of our cause, we submitted it to an unfriendly tribunal, believing it impossible that party animosity could deny us justice. Here was a great tribunal organized, bound by no precedent, and had for its only cause the rights of 40,000,000 to an honest election. The criminal is arraigned, one party charging that a great people has been robbed of its most sacred rights and offering the proof, the other denying and pleading not guilty; and this whole people looked anxiously to know what is the very truth, and this great tribunal refuses to hear the case, and instead of trying the criminal on a technicality quashes the indictment. In the repetitions of history when a similar condition is reached, will the party having the popular majority repeat our experiment? No, sir; never. That majority will take its right, and those who have taught us this lesson can take the whole responsibility.

I do not complain so much of the result of this experiment as of the method by which it has been reached. To say that our proof shall not be heard is to acknowledge that the foreordained result could not otherwise have been secured.

What right had we to expect any better from judges? When did popular freedom ever get its support from the bench as against an organized existing tyranny in power? Never! On which side was the judiciary in the revolutionary war? It was with the existing government. Where was it in the struggle here with slavery? It was always in support of the present power. And what could you expect from a bench organized to decide a particular question in a particular way; and that, too, in deciding upon the rights of a President who would have the appointment of some of their associates? Was it feared that Mr. Tilden would strengthen the element unfriendly to the majority?

But we had no freedom of choice. This House had to abdicate and submit absolutely to some such tribunal. There was an influence which seemed to have its fountain-head in New York and the money centers of the country which was born of fear; and it was by that most despicable passion, the fear of loss of money, we were repressed and the bold disposition to stand up for our rights was smothered. We could not afford to be free. We had to choose between shame and danger, and like cowards we chose the shame; not our own shame, but it was the shame of constitutional liberty. Will the bondholder be made secure by this sacrifice? No. If in this Government we cannot be protected in life, liberty, and property, but to save our property we relinquish any share of liberty, will we give up that property to discharge old obligations? No, sir. The nation which through fear of loss relinquishes liberty is ripe for repudiation.

But, sir, this result has one consolation—we of the West are done in politics with the domination of New York. Under her leadership we have not only lost the victory after it had been fairly won, but, what is still worse, we have been disgraced.

If Mr. Tilden could only be made President by getting the vote from Oregon in opposition to the vote of a majority of the people he had better remain a private citizen. I have never believed in this Oregon road, and it does not satisfy me to say that it is only using the same means employed by the republicans. Such means are unworthy of any party or any cause, and no allegiance to party will ever make me acquiesce in dishonesty or trickery. And if Mr. Tilden either directly or indirectly consented to the purchase of a republican elector, he deserves double condemnation from every man who supported him. Sir, sooner than see the party which I have supported succeed in gaining the administration by such means, I would a thousand times prefer to see the republican party take it, loaded down with the frauds and outrages of Louisiana and Florida, and the military usurpation of South Carolina, believing that these outrages and this usurpation will be remembered and avenged by an intelligent people.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Oregon stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Secretary of the Senate further announced that he had been directed to notify the House that the Senate was now ready to meet the House to proceed with the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF OREGON.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it is to be regretted that the democratic majority of this House, during the whole of this controversy on the electoral count, has indicated by a turbulent and factious course and dilatory motions that it was their purpose to defeat the will of the people. It is also to be regretted that the partisanship and bitterness it has shown is not relieved by originality or wit. Has the democratic party lost all its versatility? Shall we never hear the last of military despotism, scalawags, and carpet-baggers? Shall "bull-dozer" and "returning board" be imbedded in our dictionaries—the latter as gross an outrage on the English language as the thing itself is on all good government and morals? They tell the same stale old story; the story with which they maligned the republican party in the canvass of last year; the same story with which in their wrath they impeached the result of the election last November; the very same with which they now calumniously seek to indict the electoral commission. The result in all its stages has rebuked them all.

Under these stale misrepresentations and calumnies, it is a relief to find the defeated democrat in the rôle of Jeremiah, the weeping prophet. How he doth moralize on the decadence of republics, and in this unexpected calamity like another Marius on the ruins of Carthage. Surely it must have been a desperate emergency that drove the reformer of Tammany to the Oregon telegrams and the Oregon negotiations, or the witty gentleman from New York to the Bible.

It was enough to abuse the politics of Florida and Louisiana. Failing in that region of alligators and parishes, an unhappy democracy might have found vent for its mortification and spleen in assailing the sins, real or imaginary, of the republican party. Why assail the commission? It is their own baby. They fished it out of the vasty deeps unfathomed by a political precedent, yet subject to the genius of parliamentary invention. I wish to remind them that there is a peculiar heinousness in the crime of child murder. Is it possible that they begin to discover it is unconstitutional? Are they in the habit of palming off unconstitutional measures on the country in the hope of reaping political advantage, and failing to do so do they contemplate going before the country to denounce their bantling as a wicked innovation on our fundamental law?

I am not here as the assailant or apologist of the measure. The day is past for either. It is a fact, and a notable one. It was a necessity, or sprang from the conviction that it was a necessity. I think existing forms were adequate. Had they been applied the result would have been precisely the same. Partisan bitterness had clouded the election with a doubt, and the dominant party, victory in its grasp, accepted your proposition that it might not be said that an American President had been unfairly chosen. Whatever posterity may say of it, the electoral commission was one of Uncle Sam's things—a tribute to his traditional love of fair play—voluntary, deliberate, unprecedented. Both parties were appealed to for their ablest and purest representatives. The Supreme Court, the highest representative of the national sense of justice and honor, held the scales. If we must appeal at all could we offer to the contemplation of the world a higher or better tribunal, or a fairer representative of all that was good in our Government and people?

Shall disappointed and imbittered partisanship belittle its capacity or impeach its fame? Can the patriotic American denounce its verdict as a crime, and "detestable?" Who shall dare to say that the mantle of Marshall has unworthily fallen? I do not hesitate to say, sir, that whether we weigh its proceedings by the standard of a just legal measure, whether we estimate it by its conception of the Constitution and the principles of the American Government, whether we consider the accomplished lawyers who presented each side of the case, its laborious and complicated investigations, or the verdicts it rendered, the electoral commission was not unworthy of the occasion, of our civilization, of our country.

"The stars in their courses fought against Sisera." Let no democrat flatter himself that he can fish the elements of the next presidential campaign from the result of this commission. The republicans said that Hayes was properly elected, and this judicial inquiry proves it. Campaigns based on calumny shall never again possess so much power. Let the traducer of the republican party stand face to face with Cronin's electoral college and the Oregon telegrams. Let him abuse the republicans of Louisiana. Let him abuse the republican portion of this commission and say that eight were partisans and seven judicial patriots, but let him remember that whatever may have been the price of a democratic governor, thank God not even the "bar'l" of money could buy a republican elector.

Alackaday! Our disconsolate democrat is the Cassandra of all politics, yet is his repentance imbued with religion and the spirit of prophecy. He is "a angel." An angel with which our literature is not altogether unfamiliar, for Sam Slick pointed to the gilded figures on his five-dollar clock and said, "Them with the bowie-knives is angels." Did these angels expect that the Presidency of the United States would be the reward of anarchy and murder? All humanity cries out against a conspiracy called an election which would compass its ends by such means. Low appeals have been made to the guilty traditions of the past and the jealousies of race, and in order to trample a helpless people under foot a cotton conscience has pandered to the meanest and lowest and basest passions of the human heart. Political rights to the negro have proved too often a fatal gift. Intimidation took the place of electioneering, and violence and murder took the field when an awakened spirit of independence would not be stifled. The reign of white law was a reign of terror. Vainly shall those who countenanced such proceedings hope to profit by them. The blood of the slain cries up from the ground against them. Could there be no redress for wrongs so grievous, no remedy for calamities so great? The gentleman from Kentucky spoke of a day of reckoning. That day of reckoning is here. The ghosts of a thousand murdered victims come up from the forests and swamps of the South to see it. I can almost fancy I hear the rustle of their garments in these Chambers, "Dies iræ—dies calla!"

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Although I am physically in no condition to address the House, I feel nevertheless that I have a duty, a painful duty to perform which can no longer be deferred. The decision rendered this day is the completion of the fraudulent scheme for counting in a President who was not elected and for counting out a President who was elected by the votes of the people of this country. The consummation of this scheme was a foregone conclusion from the hour when the decision in the Florida case was rendered. It is not to be disguised that there is in this country a deep-seated feeling of injury, a keen sense of wrong. It comes up from the heart of the people, from every class; from the lawyer, the doctor, the clergyman, as well as from the farmer, the mechanic, and the laborer. I have been overwhelmed by letters from every part of the country appealing to me to do something that would make this outrage a nullity. These people feel, not that they have lost the fruits of victory; that is not what stirs their indignation—they feel that they were willing to confide their case to a just tribunal; that they did confide their case to a tribunal whose judgment is not a just one; that they and the members of this House who voted for that tribunal, and the members of the committee who framed the bill creating it, have been deceived. They ask me where the responsibility lies. They ask me whether this feeling is well founded; and I am compelled to say that it is. It is my purpose in the few minutes that I now have to try to fix that responsibility.

In the record which gives the decision in the Florida case appears this entry:

> Mr. Commissioner HOAR submitted the following order:
> Ordered, That evidence be not received.

This order was adopted by a vote of 8 to 7, the eight commissioners voting in the affirmative being Messrs. EDMUNDS, FRELINGHUYSEN, GARFIELD, HOAR, and MORTON, together with the three judges, Mr. Bradley, Mr. Miller, and Mr. Strong.

Now, as to the three judges, I propose to say only this: they took no part in the formation of this measure; they made no request to sit upon this tribunal; they were put there, so far as we know, without their consent, and probably against their will. Their action, therefore, is to be judged not by us, but by a higher tribunal, to whom they must render their account at the last. In regard to the other members of that tribunal, they are to be judged by the record which they have made in committee and in the discussions of the two Houses. Of Judge EDMUNDS I desire to bear witness that at no time to my knowledge did he express an opinion as to the power of this commission to go behind the returns. It might possibly have been inferred from his action on previous occasions that he entertained the view that the two Houses of Congress could go behind the returns; but neither in his speech on the bill nor elsewhere do I know that he ever expressed that view. Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN undoubtedly expressed the opinion that there was no such power. Mr. GARFIELD, in the discussion in this House, unquestionably expressed the opinion that there was such power. Mr. MORTON, in the discussion in the Senate, undoubtedly expressed the opinion that it was the bounden duty of the tribunal to go behind the returns. In replying to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] he stated in unmistakable language that the Senator from Ohio had declared that it was the judgment of every democratic member of the House and of the Senate that there was power to go behind the returns, and without this power the bill could not have received a single democratic vote in either House; and it was the judgment of every democrat who sat upon the committee that there was such power.

In regard to the remaining member of that commission, Mr. HOAR, in his speech in this House on the 25th of January he used the following language:

> Some gentlemen have spoken of this as a compromise bill. There is not a drop of compromise in it. How can that man be said to compromise who, having a just and righteous claim, asserts it, maintains it, enforces it by argument and proof, yielding no jot or tittle of it, to a tribunal so constituted as to insure its decision in accordance with justice and righteousness, so far as the lot of humanity will admit?

What does the word "proof" mean? There can be no "proof" without the right to take it and unless it is received. When, therefore, that commissioner brought in an order before the tribunal that evidence be not received, I hold it was in direct contradiction of his declaration made upon this floor that proof was admissible.

But I go further, Mr. Speaker. I will violate none of the confidence which belongs to the deliberations of that committee. At the close of those deliberations, it was generally conceded that the injunction of secrecy was removed; but as some question has been raised about that, I wish to adhere strictly to the rule.

Mr. HOAR. No question is raised on my part.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The gentleman then relieves me from any embarrassment which I might have in referring to what passed in the committee.

Several MEMBERS. Let us have it.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then I am allowed in speaking of the proceedings of the committee to say that the original draught submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] contained this provision:

And the said Chief-Justice, together with the justices of said Supreme Court senior in office, shall constitute a tribunal to whom shall be referred the certificates objected to, together with the objections and all papers and evidence in the possession of the Houses of Congress relating thereto. * * *

In addition to the papers and proofs which may have been referred to said tribunal as aforesaid, they shall have power, if they deem it necessary, to send for persons and papers and to compel the attendance of witnesses; also, to cause testimony to be taken before one or more commissioners to be appointed by them for that purpose.

That bill proposed practically to submit the decision of this question to the Supreme Court of the United States; but, being objected to, a second draught was made which submitted it to a tribunal composed of five justices, and this clause was retained in the second draught of that bill. I heard not only no dissent, sir, to the proposition that a tribunal so constituted should be empowered to take testimony, but I heard from every member of that committee, including the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the tribunal had and would have such power under this bill. There was no protest against it.

Now then if Congress had the power to confer upon a tribunal so constituted the right to send for persons and papers and take testimony, how did they lose that power when they added five members of the House and five members of the Senate to such tribunal? If they had the power and conferred the power upon that tribunal, how could the commissioner who assented to the right of Congress, and therefore the right of these commissioners sitting as a tribunal, to take evidence, consistently bring in an order that no testimony should be received?

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from New York to turn to section 5 of MCCRARY'S bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am afraid I have no time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has but one minute left.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. If I have but one minute left I can only use it in this wise: I think that we have been deceived as to the position of certain gentlemen who sit upon that tribunal. I think their declarations in this House are at variance with their decisions on that tribunal. I can say that the feeling of injury is thus justified in this people; but I want to close what I have to say with this final remark: No matter how great the grievance, how deep the wrong, let us on our side of the House, representing this great democratic party who have been waging a war of principle, stand up like men to principle, and not allow ourselves to be driven from the firm ground of truth and justice by any violation of it upon the other side of the House. [Cries of "Good!" "Good!" and loud applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to debate whether the question of the right of Congress to pass upon the election, qualification, and return of presidential electors, a right expressly conferred in regard to its members and expressly withheld in regard to them, be a technicality, or whether it be one of the gravest questions of constitutional power. I do not propose to debate the question whether the alleged usurpations of power by the returning board of Louisiana counteracting what they claim were great crimes, should properly be encountered by a greater usurpation upon the part of Congress. I do not mean to debate whether the opinion be sound of one of the most distinguished leaders of the democracy, [Mr. BAYARD,] a member of this commission, uttered within two years in his place elsewhere:

Nowhere is the power given to either House of Congress to pass upon the election, either the manner or the fact, of electors for President and Vice-President; and if Congress or either House shall assume under the guise or pretext of telling or counting the vote to decide the fact of the election of the electors, then they will have taken upon themselves an authority for which I for one can find no warrant in the charter of our liberties.

Nor do I mean to discuss the question whether that gentleman and his colleague, who changed that opinion honestly I have no doubt, are more liable to the charge of partisanship than we are who adhere to it.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. HOAR. No, sir. I now propose to address myself directly to the charge made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.] I spent three days in that gentleman's presence in putting into a bill the declaration that this question of going behind these returns should be submitted to the tribunal as a question about which he and I differed. We provoked the derision almost of the members of the committee by our care to avoid committing the tribunal to either view of this great fundamental question with our "if anys" constantly repeated. One of the very last acts of the committee of conference was this: One of its members said: "I am afraid you leave it open to some one to claim this bill requires us to go behind the action of the returning boards, instead of submitting it to this tribunal whether such right exists in the two Houses." Every member of that committee assured that gentleman that it was not so; that they perfectly understood it did not decide it, and when they got through, the gentleman from New York sitting within four feet of me, I rose and said: "Now, here is a question upon which we are all agreed. We agree that one side is to contend one way and the other side is to contend the other way, and the commission is to decide on that question. If any gentleman, however, can suggest clearer language than we have got in this bill let him rise and make the suggestion and we will all adopt it," and no man did it.

Further, Mr. Speaker, this bill went to another place and there the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] a distinguished and honored and honorable man, rose in his place to persuade a republican Senate to accept the bill and to differ with their republican associates in this House, and he said, "Here are certain questions concerning which the two parties differ," and he enumerated them. After stating three, he said:

Let us proceed to the fourth; that touches the amendments. It is that it is competent to go behind the certificate of the governor, and the directly opposite opinion that it is not competent to go behind the certificate of the governor.

Then, sir, comes another question:

The fifth is that it is competent to go behind the decision of a canvassing or returning board, and in opposition that it is not competent to do so * * * It is held by some that the decision of a returning board can be impeached for want of jurisdiction, and by another set that it cannot be. Then, sir, comes another question. Supposing them not to have gone beyond their jurisdiction but to have acted fraudulently, some say that their decision may be impeached for the fraud, because fraud vitiates everything, even the decisions of a court, and others say that no such inquiry is admissible at all.

Sir, we took the only course that was open to us. We provided a tribunal. * * * This bill leaves every question to this tribunal. * * * It decides not one of them; it does not intend to decide one of them.

No, not one. Now, when I turned to my republican associates in this House, that bill being passed by a republican Senate on the assurance of the man who framed the section, and said "there is not a drop of compromise in it; you are to go before that tribunal to assert, to maintain, to defend your claim, that they cannot go behind the decision of this canvassing board," am I to be charged with bad faith in the face of the House and of the country by a gentleman who shuts his eyes to those facts and undertakes to lead his party; he acting as he says, under a different understanding?

Mr. Speaker, a distinguished Senator from Massachusetts being charged, as I have been, with dishonor in the performance of a public duty, said, "We have a maxim in New England: when certain men make exhibitions of themselves, that in the mind of such a man there is a screw loose somewhere. In this man's mind all screws are loose. [Laughter and applause.] I am quoting Mr. Webster about Mr. Ingersoll, you understand. "The whole machine," said Mr. Webster, "is rickety, shaky, crazy, out of joint," and I have sometimes thought I have seen instances of gentlemen whom great responsibilities have brought into like condition of mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRANE. Mr. Speaker, we have again heard from the eight partisan members of the joint commission, and of course they have given Oregon to Hayes. Nothing else was expected. Men who could violate every principle of law and equity in the cases of Florida and Louisiana could scarcely be expected to do justice in the case of Oregon. The question involved in the Oregon case was a very simple one. The Constitution of the United States provides that "no person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector." It was admitted that one of the republican electors, named Watts, was at the time of his election a postmaster. Being ineligible, his appointment as an elector was void, and under the law of Oregon, as announced by the chief-justice of the supreme court of that State, the elector upon the democratic ticket having the highest number of votes was duly elected. It made no difference, however, to the eight partisan commissioners what the law was. They proposed to declare Hayes elected, and they had one of a majority. By their decision they have won the plaudits of the leaders of their party. A cry of joy has gone up from the army of office-holders throughout the land; but the people whose rights have been disregarded and whose liberties have been threatened bow their heads in shame and grief. Some gentlemen have spoken about an attempt to bribe a republican elector. If such an attempt was made, I do here stamp it with my unqualified condemnation. The democratic party, unlike the republican, would never consent to ratify and indorse a fraud even if by so doing they could inaugurate a President. It is not pretended here, however, that any such bribery was consummated. Even although Cronin's vote be not counted, the fact yet remains that there were but two republican electors chosen and Mr. Hayes is not elected.

Mr. Speaker, I had thought it my duty, if under the Constitution and laws it could be done, to prevent the consummation of this fraud; not because of party, not for the sake of party, but in the name and for the sake of the American people. If under the Constitution and laws it cannot fairly be prevented, it is the duty of every Representative to cease opposing even so great an outrage as this. Let no democrat in this trying hour consent to an act unlawful or revolutionary. I say to gentlemen upon the other side of the House, that if they had honestly desired that this whole presidential matter should have been decided by a fair and unbiased tribunal they should not have nominated as one of their members upon that tribunal a man who had prejudged the whole case, a man who had been bitterly hostile to the bill, and had declared in his place upon this floor that he believed the act to be unconstitutional.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] in the defense which he has just made of the course he has adopted as a member of the commission, has said that he turned to his friends when the electoral bill was under discussion and assured them—I quote his language, which I took down at the time—that "there was not a drop of compromise in this bill." Well, the gentlemen surrounding the honorable member from Massachusetts could not have had much confidence in what he said because they voted against this compromise. There was not a member upon the other side of the House who countenanced the conspiracy to overthrow the will of the people who did not vote against this bill, and why? Because they believed that they had a certainty of counting in their President by fraud and inaugurating him by force. They knew they had Federal bayonets at their back. When they discovered that they could not defeat the bill they thus reasoned with themselves, "We will not trust honest, unbiased men to determine this matter; we will select a man from among us who has prejudged this whole case, who has gone as a visitor down into Louisiana and has sent broadcast over this whole land his partisan judgment; we will put him up as an honest judge to determine who has been elected President of the United States." Why, gentlemen, it was an outrage upon all decency and a violation of good faith. I rejoice to know that for one at least my vote did not help to send him there.

Mr. GARFIELD rose.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate has expired. The original proposition will now be read and then the substitute.

The order moved by Mr. HALE and the substitute offered by LANE were again read.

The SPEAKER. The first vote will be upon the substitute.

Mr. LANE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LANE. I ask that the substitute may be again reported. I wish the House to observe this fact, that it only applies to the disqualification of Mr. Watts and does not reject the votes of the other electors.

The substitute was again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would the gentleman from Oregon admit an amendment that the votes of the other two electors be counted.

Mr. LANE. I deem such an amendment totally unnecessary. That follows as a matter of course.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 152, nays 106, not voting 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Philips, Poppleton, Powell, Rea, Reagan, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stanton, Stenger, Stone, Swann, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Jere N. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Fernando Wood, Yeates, and Young—152.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Buttz, Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, King, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Nash, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Pratt, John Reilly, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Strait, Stowell, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, White, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Woodburn, and Woodworth—106.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Bass, Burleigh, Douglas, Durand, Faulkner, Gibson, Goode, Goodin, Haymond, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hopkins, Frank Jones, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Luttrell, McFarland, O'Brien, Packer, Piper, Purman, Rainey, James B. Reilly, Schumaker, Stephens, Tarbox, Thomas, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, and Whitehouse—32.

So the substitute was adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. RAINEY. On this question I am paired with Mr. DOUGLAS, of Virginia. If he were present he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. BURLEIGH. On all political questions I am paired with Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire. Not being sure how he would vote if he were here, I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I am paired with Mr. LUTTRELL, of California, on all these questions.

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleagues, Mr. PACKER and Mr. JAMES B. REILLY, are paired on this question.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question recurred on the resolution as amended.

The question being taken, the resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER. I submit the following order:

Ordered, That the Senate be informed of the action of this House on the electoral vote of the State of Oregon, and that the House of Representatives is now ready to meet them in joint convention in its Hall.

The order was adopted.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. LANE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some remarks in relation to the electoral vote of Oregon.

There was no objection, and leave was granted.

Mr. NEW. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on the Louisiana election.

There was no objection, and leave was granted.

Mr. SCALES. I ask the same privilege.

There was no objection.

Mr. LE MOYNE. I ask the same privilege.

There was no objection.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the same privilege, that I may be permitted to have printed some remarks in relation to the Oregon case.

Mr. KELLEY. I object to any one having leave to print except the gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. LANE.]

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desired to object in the case of other gentlemen except the gentleman from Oregon, he ought to have risen and objected in time. His objection can now only apply to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. KELLEY. I object to him and to anybody else having leave to print.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the privilege to object after consent has been given.

Mr. KELLEY. I rose before the request of the gentleman from Tennessee was submitted.

The SPEAKER. Exactly so; and the gentleman from Tennessee has not permission in consequence of the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but other gentlemen got permission.

Subsequently,

Mr. KELLEY said: Learning as I do now for the first time, that other gentlemen than the gentleman from Oregon obtained leave to print their remarks, I withdraw my objection as regards the gentleman from Tennessee and all others.

The SPEAKER. Objection being withdrawn, the request of the gentleman from Tennessee is granted.

By unanimous consent, the same privilege was granted to Mr. WALLING, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. WATTERSON, Mr. BLAND, Mr. FINLEY, Mr. SMALLS, Mr. REA, Mr. BOONE, Mr. YEATES, Mr. PHILIPS of Missouri, Mr. ROBBINS of North Carolina, Mr. FRANKLIN, Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. BLISS, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. RICE, Mr. CANNON of Illinois, Mr. PAGE, Mr. WIGGINTON, Mr. MAGOON, Mr. BANNING, Mr. WARNER, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HUMPHREYS, Mr. HENKLE, Mr. SOUTHARD, and Mr. CATE.

Mr. FORT. I move that the permission be general.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has been pretty general.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTES.

At three o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall, preceded by its Sergeant-at-Arms and headed by its President pro tempore and its Secretary, the members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate took his seat as Presiding Officer of the joint meeting of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying a chair upon his left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint meeting of Congress for counting the electoral vote resumes its session. The two Houses having separately determined upon the objections to the decision of the commission on the certificates from the State of Oregon, the Secretary of the Senate will read the resolution adopted by the Senate.

The Secretary of the Senate read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Oregon stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House of Representatives will now read the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives read the resolution adopted by the House, as follows:

Ordered, That the vote purporting to be the electoral vote for President and Vice-President, and which was given by one J. W. Watts, claiming to be an elector for the State of Oregon, be not counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The two Houses not concurring otherwise, the decision of the commission will stand unreversed, and the counting of the vote will proceed in conformity therewith. The tellers will announce the vote of Oregon.

Senator INGALLS, (one of the tellers.) Oregon casts 3 votes for Rutherford B. Hayes for President and 3 votes for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Having opened the certificates from the State of Pennsylvania received by messenger, the Chair hands it to the tellers, and it will be read in the presence and hearing of the two Houses. A corresponding certificate, received by mail, is also handed to the tellers. If there be no objection the reading of the certificates will be waived, as at the last joint meeting of the two Houses, and the tellers will read simply the result of the vote.

Mr. TUCKER and Mr. SPRINGER objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The certificates, then, will be read in full.

Senator ALLISON (one of the tellers) read the certificates in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there objections to the certificates from the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. STENGER. I submit on behalf of myself and others the objection which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House will read the objection.

The Clerk of the House read as follows:

The undersigned Senators and Representatives object to the counting of the vote of Henry A. Boggs as an elector for the State of Pennsylvania on the grounds following, namely:

That a certain Daniel J. Morrell was a candidate for the post of elector for the State of Pennsylvania at the election for electors of President and Vice-President on the 7th day of November, 1876, and was declared by the governor of the State of Pennsylvania to have been duly elected an elector at said election.

And the undersigned aver that the said Daniel J. Morrell was not duly elected an elector for the State of Pennsylvania, because for a long period before, and on the said 7th day of November, 1876, and for a long period subsequent thereto, the said Morrell held an office of trust and profit under the United States, that is to say, the office of commissioner under the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine, in the city of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania, in the year 1876," to which he was appointed by the President of the United States under the provisions of said act.

Wherefore the undersigned aver that the said Morrell could not be constitutionally appointed an elector for the State of Pennsylvania on the said 7th day of November, 1876, under the Constitution of the United States.

And the undersigned further state that on the 6th day of December, 1876, the said Morrell did not attend the meeting of the electors of the State of Pennsylvania, and that he was not according to the laws of Pennsylvania, and under the Constitution of the United States, duly elected an elector of said State, and could not be constitutionally, and legally declared duly elected as such elector, and had no legal right to attend the said meeting of electors.

And the undersigned further state that the college of electors had power under the law of Pennsylvania to fill vacancies in the office of elector under and by virtue of the law of Pennsylvania which is in the words following, and by none other whatsoever, namely:

"If any such elector shall die, or from any cause fail to attend at the seat of government at the time appointed by law, the electors present shall proceed to choose viva voce a person to fill the vacancy occasioned thereby, and immediately after such choice the name of the person so chosen shall be transmitted by the presiding officer of the college to the governor, whose duty it shall be forthwith to cause notice in writing to be given to such person of his election, and the person so elected [and not the person in whose place he shall have been chosen,] shall be an elector, and shall, with the other electors, perform the duties enjoined on them as aforesaid."

And the undersigned further state that under said law the electors present had no authority to appoint the said Henry A. Boggs to fill the vacancy of the said Daniel J. Morrell, or on any other grounds whatever, and that said supposed appointment of said Henry A. Boggs was wholly without authority of law, and was, and is, null and void.

Wherefore the undersigned aver that the said Henry A. Boggs was not duly appointed by the State of Pennsylvania in the manner that its Legislature directed, and that he was not entitled to cast his vote as elector for said State, and that his vote as such should not be, because it cannot be constitutionally, counted.

And the undersigned hereto annex the evidence to sustain the above objections which has been taken before the committee of the House of Representatives on the powers, privileges, and duties of the House.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I certify that the document hereto annexed is a true copy of the original now on file in this Department.

In testimony whereof I, Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State of the United States, have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the seal of the Department of State to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 23d day of February, A. D. 1877, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and first.

[SEAL.] HAMILTON FISH.

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, March 10, 1871.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to inform you, that in conformity with the recent act of Congress "to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of American Independence," &c., I have made the following appointments, which I submit for your approval:

Hon. Daniel J. Morrell, Johnstown, Cambria County, Pennsylvania, to be United States commissioner for Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the second section of the act.

Hon. Asa Packer, Mauch Chunk, Carbon County, Pennsylvania, to be the alternate United States commissioner for Pennsylvania, in accordance with the fourth section of the same act.

With assurances of my kindest regards, I am, general, very respectfully and truly yours,

JNO. W. GEARY.

General U. S. GRANT,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 22, 1877.

JOHN REILLY, a member of the House from the State of Pennsylvania, sworn and examined.

By Mr. FIELD:

Question. Do you know Daniel J. Morrell, of Pennsylvania?
Answer. I do.
Q. How long have you known him?
A. I suppose fifteen or eighteen years.
Q. Where does he reside?
A. In Johnstown, Cambria County, Pennsylvania.
Q. Was he one of the centennial commissioners appointed by the President?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is he still such?
A. I believe he is; he was at the close of the exhibition; I have not heard of him in connection with it since.
Q. How near to him do you live?
A. I live within thirty-eight miles of him.
Q. Do you know him very well?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is he the same gentleman who was appointed one of the presidential electors in the State of Pennsylvania?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. On the republican ticket?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Did you serve with him on the centennial commission?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you vote for him?
A. I did not.
Q. You have no personal knowledge as to what you have testified to, have you?
A. I have seen Mr. Morrell at the centennial exhibition, in the discharge of his duties.
Q. What duties did you see him perform at the exhibition?
A. I saw him around there. I don't know that I can state specifically that I saw him perform any particular act.
Q. Did you not see 20,000 other individuals about there at the same time?
A. I saw a great many more than that.
Q. One hundred thousand?
A. Perhaps 200,000.
Q. Walking about the grounds?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Can you mention any particular thing you saw Mr. Morrell do at that time?
A. No, sir; but it is a well-known fact that he was a centennial commissioner.
Q. It is rumor and general information that you have on the subject?
A. I may state that I had from Mr. Morrell himself, directly, a statement that he had paired with a man on the day of the election, for the purpose of attending to his duties as centennial commissioner.

By Mr. FIELD:

Q. You saw him at the centennial exhibition, in the apparent discharge of his duties?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you heard him speak of his duties as centennial commissioner?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is he universally reported to be a centennial commissioner?
A. Yes, sir, he was formerly a member of Congress.
Q. Do you know that he was the candidate for presidential elector?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know that it was the same person?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Do you know that from him?
A. I do not know that I ever heard him speak of it himself directly.

By Mr. FIELD:

Q. But it was well understood among the people in Pennsylvania that Daniel J. Morrell, who was centennial commissioner, was also a candidate for presidential elector on the republican ticket?
A. It was generally understood in that district. I cannot speak as to the whole of the State.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1877.

JOHN WELSH sworn and examined.

By Mr. TUCKER:

Question. Where do you reside?
Answer. I reside in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
Q. Were you a candidate for the position of presidential elector at the late presidential election, and were you certified as one of the electors for the State of Pennsylvania?
A. I was, from the first district.
Q. Did you attend the college of electors?
A. I did.
Q. And cast your vote?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States?
A. No, sir.
Q. What is your connection with the centennial exhibition?
A. I am a director and also president of the Centennial Board of Finance which was chartered by the United States on the 1st of June, 1872. It is a stock company. I was elected a director in April, 1873, and every year since then by the stockholders and have been chosen president every year by the directors.
Q. Were you president of that corporation on the 7th of November, 1876?
A. I was.
Q. And on the 6th of December, 1876?
A. Yes, sir; and am still.
Q. You are a stockholder in the corporation?
A. I am a stockholder in the corporation.
Q. And have been since 1873?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You held no position as centennial commissioner?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know Mr. Daniel J. Morrell?
A. I do.
Q. Was he a centennial commissioner under appointment of the President?

A. He was and is.
Q. He was acting as such on the 7th of November, 1876, and on the 6th of December, 1876.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is he the same gentleman who was elected one of the presidential electors for the State of Pennsylvania?
A. He is.
Q. Did he appear at the meeting of the electors?
A. He did not.
Q. Did he assign any reason for not appearing?
A. He was not present; I cannot say that he ever assigned any reason for his absence.
Q. Did he send a letter?
A. No. I think he was absent and that his place was supplied.
Q. Who was appointed in his place?
A. If I recollect right, it was Mr. Boggs, of Cambria County, the same county that Mr. Morrell lives in.
Q. Who appointed Mr. Boggs?
A. He was appointed by the electoral college.
Q. Did he hold any Federal office?
A. I think not.
Q. His title as an elector for the State of Pennsylvania was due to an appointment by the college of electors?
A. Entirely.
Q. To fill the place of Mr. Morrell?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. The corporation was a mere private stock corporation?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You had no appointment from the President of the United States?
A. No, sir.
Q. There is no salary fixed by law to the office of director or president?
A. The law allows a salary to be paid to the president and the treasurer, but I have never received any salary. I declined to receive it.
Q. The law does not fix any salary?
A. No, sir.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. The salary would have been paid by the corporation?
A. Yes, it would have been paid by the corporation.
Q. And your relation to the centennial exhibition was simply that of stockholder in this corporation and of an officer elected by the stockholders?
A. I was elected a director by the stockholders and president by the board of directors.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. You are no more an officer of the Government of the United States than would be a director of a railroad company incorporated by Congress?
A. No, sir. I have never held any office under the United States.

By Mr. TUCKER:

Q. Did you give any bond, as president of the Board of Finance, to the United States?
A. Yes, sir; not as president of the board of finance. Congress appropriated $1,500,000, and there was a provision in the appropriation bill that the president and treasurer should give a bond in $500,000. That bond was given by us, signed by one hundred citizens of Philadelphia.
Q. You executed that bond?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. To whom was the bond given?
A. I suppose the Secretary of the Treasury. The bond was conditioned on our applying the money to the purpose stated, namely, having the building open on the 10th of May, free of debt. The bond was filed and vouchers to the amount of $1,727,000 were sent voluntarily by us.
Q. Is this the provision of law on the subject, [reading?]
A. Yes, sir; that is it.
Q. You say that you presented vouchers?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When?
A. In the course of the season we sent to the Treasury Department vouchers for $1,727,000. They were sent at various periods during the summer.
Q. Did you send them all to the Treasury before the presidential election?
A. Long before.
Q. Did you get an acquittance or discharge of the bond?
A. No, sir, we get no acquittance or discharge.
Q. The bond, therefore, is still outstanding as an obligation?
A. Yes, sir. I do not know whether the Government ever gives up a bond.
Q. It gave you no acquittance?
A. No, sir.
Q. Was there any provision for returning this money to the Government?
A. I have no opinion to offer on that subject. There is a difference of opinion on the subject between gentlemen skilled in the law. My own reading of it is that there is no provision for the return of the money to the Government until after the stockholders shall be paid unless there be a profit, but I pretend to express no opinion on the subject. It was submitted to the court, and the circuit court has determined that there is no such provision in the law, in other words, that the money which we have on hand belongs to the stockholders; but an appeal has been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and it will be argued there.
Q. Then the question was whether there was any money to be paid to the Government in any event?
A. The question was whether any money was to be paid to the Government out of the capital or out of the profits. The construction of the court is that it was to come out of the profits.
Q. Then the court has decided that there is an obligation to refund the money to the Government if there shall be a profit sufficient for that purpose?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you hold any fund in your hands now awaiting the decision of that case?
A. We do. We placed before the court a statement that we have about $2,000,000 on hand, for which there are two claimants.
Q. Who are the two claimants?
A. The stockholders and the Government. We asked the court to instruct us what to do with the money.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. You were the president of a board of directors elected by the stockholders under sections 4 and 5 of the act of 1872?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. There has been no change in the law, to your knowledge, in reference to the duration of your term of office or your duties in regard to the Government?
A. No, sir; no change.
Q. That law provides that the president, two vice-presidents, treasurer, and secretary, and such other officers as may be required to carry out the purpose of the corporation, shall hold their respective offices during the pleasure of the board; and the board adopts by-laws for its own government?
A. Yes.
A. And you are in no way represented as an officer of the United States?
A. No, sir.
Q. You had no power to incur any liability to be charged to the United States?
A. No, sir. Each of the acts of Congress has had specific provisions in that respect that no debt or responsibility should be incurred on behalf of the United States.
Q. And your relation to this money which was appropriated by Congress was simply that of applying it as the law required?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. But it was appropriated to the corporation?
A. Entirely.
Q. For the purpose of the exposition?
A. Yes.
Q. And the act required the president of the board and the treasurer to give bond to the United States?
A. Yes.
Q. You had no special custody of the funds?
A. The treasurer had custody of the funds, but a bond was required from the president as well as the treasurer.
Q. Your only relation to it was simply that of giving a bond?
A. Yes. The fund was under the control of the board of directors, to be disposed of by them. I was their servant. The funds were all applied in exact accordance with the memorial sent to Congress and signed by me, and it is a very curious fact that the $1,500,000 asked for was precisely the amount that was required.
Q. You hold no office of profit or trust under the United States unless the giving of a bond created you an officer?
A. No, sir. If so, I am an officer of the United States in a great many instances, for I am on a good many custom-house bonds for the last fifty years.

By Mr. TUCKER:

Q. You say that $1,500,000 was just enough?
A. Just enough to enable us to open the exhibition.
Q. How much money have you on hand now interpleaded between the Government of the United States and the stockholders?
A. Something rising $2,000,000. We cannot yet determine definitely the amount, because there are certain large claims which may or may not be allowed. If the Government is to be refunded the $1,500,000, then we shall pay 25 per cent. to the stockholders, and in the other case we shall have probably 85 per cent. to pay to the stockholders.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 24, 1877.

DANIEL J. MORRELL sworn and examined.

By Mr. TUCKER:

Question. Where do you reside?
Answer. Johnstown, Pennsylvania.
Q. Are you or have you been a centennial commissioner by appointment of the President of the United States?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was the date of your appointment and up to what time did you hold the office?
A. I don't remember the exact date, but I think it was in 1871 or 1872.
Q. You were appointed by commission by the President?
A. I was nominated by the governor of Pennsylvania and commissioned by the President of the United States.
Q. Are you still a centennial commissioner?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you have continued to be such from the time of your appointment until the present time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you a candidate for the position of elector at the late presidential election held on November 7, 1876?
A. I was nominated and voted for as an elector.
Q. Was your election certified to you by the governor of the State?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you attend the meeting of the college of electors?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you resign the position?
A. No, sir; I did not. I was advised that it was not necessary that I should resign but that I should not attend; that I was not eligible.
Q. Not eligible by reason of your being a centennial commissioner?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You absented yourself on that account?
A. I did.
Q. Who was appointed in your place?
A. Henry A. Boggs.
Q. Henry, not Harry?
A. I have always understood that his name was Henry; he is called Harry generally, however.
Q. He was appointed in your place?
A. That was my understanding. I was not present at the meeting of the electors.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Are you paid any compensation out of the Treasury of the United States as centennial commissioner?
A. No compensation whatever from any source.
Q. The position you hold is under the act creating the centennial commissioners?
A. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the certificate from the State of Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] If there be none, the Senate will now withdraw, that the two Houses separately may consider and determine the objection.

The Senate then (at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) withdrew to their Chamber.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock on Monday morning.

Mr. WALLING. I ask my colleague to waive his motion for a moment to enable me to offer a resolution.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. PAGE. I object.

Mr. WALLING. Let the resolution be read for information.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Powers and Privileges of the House of Representatives be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire into and report forthwith, or without unnecessary delay, what are the powers and privileges of this House in view of the rulings and decisions of the electoral commission under the law creating such commission, which law authorized an inquiry into the facts of the presidential election in Louisiana and Florida, but which inquiry has been partisanly disregarded and defeated by said commission.

Mr. KASSON. I object to that; it is not in order as being business.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I renew my motion that the House take a recess until Monday morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 122, not voting 35, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Woodburn, and Woodworth—122.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Bass, Beebe, Boone, Chapin, Douglas, Durand, Egbert, Frye, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Hays, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hopkins, Hurd, Frank Jones, Lewis, Luttrell, Miller, Packer, Phelps, Piper, Purman, James B. Reilly, John Robbins, Schumaker, Stephens, Thomas, Walsh, Wheeler, Jere N. Williams, Wilshire, and Young—35.

During the roll-call,

Mr. FRYE said: I am paired upon this question with Mr. HURD. If he were present he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty-two minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until Monday morning at ten o'clock.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at ten o'clock a. m., (Monday, February 26.)

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. CLYMER. It is manifest that there is no quorum present, and I therefore move a call of the House.

Mr. RICE. I move that the House now take a recess until five minutes before twelve o'clock.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We have already taken one recess for this legislative day, and a motion for another is not in order. A call of the House is in order.

The SPEAKER. The motion for a call of the House is in order.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The only business before the House is the discussion of the objections to the vote of an elector from the State of Pennsylvania. That discussion can proceed at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] raises the point that there is no quorum present, and the Chair is bound to recognize his right to do so. The Chair thinks that the most expeditious way to test the question is to have a call of the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I think there are many speeches to be made here which less than a quorum can listen to quite as well as a full House, and they will have just as much effect. If the design of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] by his motion is to delay the consideration of the regular order, I am sorry he has made it.

Mr. CLYMER. I do not admit the right of the gentleman to inquire what my design is. It is manifest there is not a quorum of the House present, and I insist upon my right to raise that point.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Technically the gentleman has that right.

Mr. KELLEY. We on this side of the House are ready to go on with the discussion.

Mr. MORRISON. But we are not; that is the difference between us.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] is clearly in the exercise of his right, when he moves that there be a call of the House.

Mr. CONGER. Can the question whether there be a quorum present or not be raised without some action of the House?

The SPEAKER. The manner of raising it is by the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.] It is manifest there is not a quorum present; and by a division on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that fact can be accurately determined one way or the other.

Mr. McCRARY. I should like to appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his motion. There may not be a quorum present at this moment, but gentlemen on this side of the House are ready to go on with the debate. I have never before known a demand for a call of the House when any gentleman was willing to go on with the debate without a quorum.

Mr. CLYMER. I am very certain that this question will receive the most speedy settlement by pursuing the mode I have indicated. I therefore insist upon my motion for a call of the House. As to gentlemen being ready to proceed with the debate, I am informed that there are gentlemen on this side of the House who desire to engage in this discussion and who are not now in their seats.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to say that so far as I am advised all the gentlemen on this side of the House who desire to speak upon the pending question are present and ready to proceed.

Mr. EDEN. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. EDEN. Then I object to further debate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] that there be now a call of the House.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 13, noes 53.

Mr. CLYMER. No quorum has voted, and I therefore ask that the roll be called.

The SPEAKER. The vote on a division developing the fact that there is no quorum voting, it is the duty of the Chair to direct the Clerk to call the roll.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Anderson, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Bass, Beebe, Belford, Blackburn, Bliss, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Buttz, Cabell, Chapin, Cochrane, Cowan, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Douglas, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Field, Flye, Fuller, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hartzell, Haymond, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoge, Hopkins, House, Frank Jones, King, Franklin Landers, Leavenworth, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, McFarland, Meade, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Money, Mutchler, Payne, William A. Phillips, Piper, Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, James B. Reilly, Savage, Sayler, Schumaker, Sheakley, Slemons, Smalls, Sparks, Stephens, Stone, Strait, Thomas, Turney, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Ward, Watterson, Wheeler, White, Wike, Willard, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Yeates, and Young—94.

The SPEAKER. Upon the call of the roll 196 members have answered to their names, which is more than a quorum.

Mr. ROBERTS. I desire to state that Mr. HOPKINS is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. FORT. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to, upon a division—ayes 151, noes 21.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry A. Boggs be counted with the other votes of the electors of Pennsylvania notwithstanding the objections made thereto.

The message further announced that the Senate is now ready to meet the House for the purpose of proceeding with the count of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. KELLEY. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry A. Boggs be counted as an elector for the State of Pennsylvania, the objections to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. STENGER. I offer the following resolution, as a substitute for that of my colleague:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry A. Boggs, as an elector for the State of Pennsylvania, should not be counted, because the said Boggs was not appointed an elector for said State in such manner as its Legislature directed.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the objection, together with the testimony, which was not read in the joint meeting of the two Houses, be now read, that members may vote intelligently.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that the Speaker cause to be read the objection, and the Chair thinks it his duty to do so.

Mr. KELLEY. I understood the gentleman to refer to the testimony. I will ask the Chair whether the two hours allowed for debate on this question run while this paper is being read.

The SPEAKER. They do not.

The Clerk began the reading, but was interrupted by

Mr. KELLEY, who said: I rise to a question of order. Is the mover of the original resolution or of the substitute entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The mover of the original resolution is entitled to the floor undoubtedly.

Mr. KELLEY. Then how could I be taken off the floor by my colleague?

The SPEAKER. The Chair means the gentleman who presented the original objection. In accordance with all parliamentary practice, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STENGER,] who presented the objection in joint convention, is entitled to control the floor in the first instance. He consents to his colleague speaking first.

Mr. KELLEY. Is he entitled under the law to the floor for more than ten minutes? Does not the law require the debate upon an objection to proceed in speeches not exceeding ten minutes each?

The SPEAKER. Whenever the debate commences the Chair will rule that according to the law no member has a right to more than ten minutes, and that the debate must close after two hours.

Mr. KELLEY. Is not the reading of such papers as part of a gentleman's speech (involving more than ten minutes as this paper evidently will) excluded by the terms of the law?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STENGER,] if the Chair heard him correctly, did not suggest that the reading of the objection was to be in his time at all. He claimed the reading of the objection as a right, and the Chair is of opinion that it was his duty to order the objection to be read.

Mr. KELLEY. If each gentleman may ask that some official paper, the reading of which involves four or six times the ten minutes allowed him, may be read, what becomes of the provision of the law which restrains debate to two hours, divided in speeches of ten minutes?

The SPEAKER. It is always within the power of the House to have a paper read or not.

Mr. KELLEY. The question whether this paper shall be read has not been submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. Because no one has asked to have it submitted.

Mr. KELLEY. Well, I am here now to object to further proceeding in the reading of that paper.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he considers it part of his ministerial duty to lay before the House the objection. As to any paper accompanying the objection, the reading of that is within the control of the majority of the House, as has often been decided.

Mr. KELLEY. The House has had no voice upon the question whether this extraneous paper——

The SPEAKER. This is not an extraneous paper.

Mr. KELLEY. It has already been read in the hearing of the House.

The SPEAKER. It comes from the joint convention signed according to law.

Mr. CONGER. But it has been read in the presence of the joint convention.

The SPEAKER. It has not been read at all in the House.

Mr. CONGER. It has been read in the presence of the House; in the joint convention.

Several MEMBERS. Not at all.

Mr. CONGER. It was read in the hearing of us all.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. One word, if you please, Mr. Speaker. The law provides that "every objection shall be made in writing, and shall state clearly and concisely, and without argument, the ground thereof." The law prohibits anything in the nature of argument. It is, of course, in order to read the objection now; that is, a clear, concise objection in writing, but not an argumentative paper accompanying the objection. Section 2 of the law precludes that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is clearly within the province of any member to demand the reading of the objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The objection as such.

The SPEAKER. If the majority of the House do not want to hear the testimony, they can so determine.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Would the Chair hold that a paper in the nature of an argument—testimony, or something of that kind accompanying the objection—can be read by order of the House contrary to the very terms of this law?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the objections are really founded upon the testimony; but if the majority of the House do not desire to hear this testimony read, it is within the province of that majority, under the rules, to prevent it.

Mr. BANKS. The law forbids the reading of the testimony.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled over and over again on this point.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I beg the Chair's pardon; not on this point particularly.

Mr. BANKS. The law forbids the reading of the testimony; it is in the nature of argument.

The SPEAKER. That a majority of the House can determine.

Mr. BANKS. But if the law forbids the reading, it is not in the power of a majority to order the reading.

The SPEAKER. To what part of the law does the gentleman refer?

Mr. BANKS. The provision that the objection shall be stated clearly and concisely, without argument. The testimony is in the nature of argument.

The SPEAKER. In what part of the law is that provision?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In section 2.

The SPEAKER. That applies to the joint convention.

Mr. BANKS. I will read the provision:

> Every objection shall be made in writing, and shall state clearly and concisely, and without argument, the ground thereof, and shall be signed by at least one Senator and one member of the House of Representatives before the same shall be received.

The SPEAKER. That is before objections are received by the joint convention.

Mr. SPRINGER. That reference to argument has nothing to do with the facts in the case. Will the Chair hear me on this point of order?

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. I think, Mr. Speaker, more time will be consumed in discussing this question than in reading the paper; therefore I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the reading of the paper asked for by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the paper will accordingly be read.

Mr. KELLEY. Including the testimony?

The SPEAKER. That is within the province of a majority of this House to determine, as the Chair has more than once suggested.

Mr. KELLEY. When will the time come to dispense with the reading of the testimony.

Mr. RICE. This testimony was part of the original objection, and was not read when the two Houses were in joint meeting. We cannot vote intelligently without knowing what that testimony is, and I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk proceeded to read the objections.

Mr. KELLEY. Now, the response in law to the objections made are so——

Mr. WALLING. I call for the continuation of the reading of the objections, including the testimony.

The SPEAKER. There is no occasion for either side to take any technical advantage, as the Chair proposes to submit the question to the decision of the majority of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I have no desire to take any technical advantage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rose to object to the reading of the testimony.

Mr. KELLEY. No, Mr. Speaker; I supposed that was not asked for, but that the time had come for discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has objected to the reading of the testimony, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICE] has asked for its reading.

Mr. WALLING. I asked for its reading, and still continue to ask for its reading.

Mr. KELLEY. If that be demanded I shall not object, because the reading of the testimony will take less time than the ay and no vote might.

Mr. WALLING. I asked for the reading of the testimony, and its reading would have been proceeded with some time ago if the gentleman from Pennsylvania had not objected.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If we are going in the face of the electoral act, which provides that nothing in the nature of argument shall be allowed to come in, then all that is necessary will be to bring in testimony that will take a whole day to read and that would be the same thing as taking a recess.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa objects to the reading of the testimony.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I certainly do.

The SPEAKER. Rule 141 of the House provides when the reading of a paper is called for and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House. Objection being made, therefore, the question will be submitted to the House whether the paper shall be read or not.

Mr. WILSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, if you will bear with me for a moment I wish to remark, what has been read by the Chair is a rule of the House; but that rule of the House was suspended by this feature of section 2 of the electoral act, which absolutely prohibits any argument being read in connection with the objections.

The SPEAKER. The Chair considers it as the testimony presented in the joint meeting of the two Houses, upon which the objection itself was based.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Chair can see very well, under his previous rulings, that while in the performance of a constitutional duty anything in the nature of delay would be fatal to the execution of that duty, and therefore must be ruled out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not say "delay," but ruled out dilatory motions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This is a dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The gentleman from Ohio asks for the reading of a paper accompanying the objections, and upon which the objections themselves are based.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Chair will see that while the testimony accompanying these objections will not take longer to read than would be occupied in a call of the yeas and nays, yet a time may come when all the testimony taken in one of the Southern States by one of our investigating committees may be attached to objections presented in the joint meeting, and the whole of that will be asked to be read, consuming two or three days perhaps.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not rule, nor can he be asked to rule, on any such contingency until that contingency occurs.

Mr. BANKS. If the Chair rules to hear this testimony now I wish to say——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not ruled that the testimony shall be read, but he has decided that, under the one hundred and forty-first rule, when the reading of a paper is called for and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House, and objection being made by the gentleman from Iowa the Chair will submit the question to the House. This whole question is within the power of the House, and in that regard the rule of the House is explicit.

Mr. BANKS. It is not within the power of the majority to have the testimony read in this case. That is a matter of argument which is expressly excluded by the letter of the law, and that law cannot be evaded by the Speaker by a pretended submission to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker evades no responsibility, and never has since he has occupied the chair.

Mr. BANKS. Permit me to say this is an evasion, if the Chair claims the right to submit this to the House without a decision being made on the point of order. It is an evasion of the point of order to submit the question to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair passes by, and properly, as the Chair thinks, the suggestion of the gentleman that he desires to evade anything. He only does not desire to evade the one hundred and forty-first rule, which reads:

When the reading of a paper is called for and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] raised a question of order, and I ask the decision of the Chair on that question.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I make the point of order that that rule is suspended by the operation of that provision of the law under which we are now acting, which I have read.

Mr. WALLING. There is so much confusion in the Hall that we on this side cannot hear what is going on. I would like to hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BANNING. It is hoped that the country will take notice who is making the delay now.

Mr. HENDEE. O, yes; no doubt it will.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not know that I will ask for the ruling of the Chair. I desire to say that I never in my life appealed from the decision of the Speaker, because as a general proposition I believe the rulings of the Chair ought to be sustained.

Mr. COX. I ask that order be maintained. We cannot hear one word that is said.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the judgment of the Chair is clear that the one hundred and forty-first rule is not suspended by the provision of the law to which I have called his attention, then I will not raise the question to the extent of asking the Chair to rule upon it. If the Chair is perfectly satisfied on that point, then I am content that the question shall be submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is clearly of opinion that the call for the reading of the testimony attached to the objection is a call for the reading of a paper; and under the rule the Chair thinks it is not left to his volition to do otherwise than to submit the question to the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Very well.

Mr. BANKS. Does the Chair overrule the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa does not make the point of order.

Mr. BANKS. Then I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will submit in writing the point of order which he makes.

Mr. HALE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he allow the question to be submitted to the House and withdraw his point of order.

Mr. BANKS. Very well. I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being withdrawn the Chair will submit the question to the House. Shall the paper the reading of which is demanded by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICE] be read?

Mr. PAGE. That is, the testimony?

The question being taken there were—ayes 88 noes 99.

Mr. RICE and Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. HALE. I ask that rather than take up further time——

Many members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

Mr. HALE. I think we had better have the paper read than take up so much time in calling yeas and nays. I think unanimous consent will be given if requested.

Objection was made.

The House again divided and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 100.

Mr. O'BRIEN and Mr. RICE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KELLEY. Before the call of the roll proceeds, I ask the Chair again to state the question.

The SPEAKER. The question is: Shall this paper be read?

Mr. MCMAHON. I understand the paper asked to be read is the testimony upon which the objection is based.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. RICE. It is a part of the objection. Let that be understood.

The yeas and nays were taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 116, not voting 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Bland, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Reilly, Sayler, Schumaker, Slemons, Sparks, Stephens, Thomas, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, White, Willis, and Young—41.

So the House agreed that the evidence should be read.

During the roll-call,

Mr. ATKINS stated that his colleague from Tennessee, Mr. YOUNG, was detained from his seat by sickness.

At the conclusion of the roll-call,

Mr. HUBBELL said: I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. RICE. I object.

The list of names having been read, the vote was announced as above recorded.

The Clerk proceeded to read the evidence annexed to the objection, which has already been published in the RECORD.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House but very few moments. The objection in this case is so wanting in constitutional and legal support, and is based on principles which have been so often overruled in law, that I think this side of the House could well submit the question without uttering a word. The question raised is whether a director in a quasi-corporation created by the United States is rendered, by virtue of his holding that office, ineligible to the office of elector. I apprehend that no legal decision or constitutional provision can be found to sustain the affirmative thereof, and if one could be cited it would be simply to the effect that such an election was voidable and not void, and that after the vote had been cast and the result declared it was irreversible by any power.

But, as I said, I shall not consume the time of the House in argument, and will only add that I believe there will be but little said on the question on this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the gentleman desired to yield five minutes of his time to another gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY. No, sir; I have exhausted my ten minutes, so far as my power is concerned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman stated differently to the Chair; that is all.

Mr. STENGER. Mr. Speaker, at the election on the 7th of November last Daniel J. Morrell was one of the twenty-nine candidates for presidential elector who received the highest number of votes in Pennsylvania. He was on that day and is still a member of the United States centennial commission. He did not attend the meeting of the electors on the 6th day of December following, and Henry A. Boggs was selected to fill the alleged vacancy by the other electors.

It is contended by the objectors that Mr. Morrell, as centennial commissioner, held an office of trust under the United States which made him ineligible as an elector; that under the laws of Pennsylvania there was no authority given to the other electors to substitute another for him, and that, therefore, the vote of Mr. Boggs ought not to be counted.

The Constitution of the United States ordains that "no Senator, or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector." Did Mr. Morrell, as centennial commissioner, hold "an office of trust or profit?" Inasmuch as there has been a judicial opinion emanating from high republican authority on this very point, I prefer to cite it rather than to give my own in the limited time allowed me. The supreme court of Rhode Island, in the matter of George H. Corliss, have authoritatively answered this question in these plain words:

We think a commissioner of the United States centennial commission holds an office of trust under the United States, and that he is therefore disqualified for the office of elector of President and Vice-President of the United States.

And they proceed to show that in the discharge of this trust—

The duties and functions of these commissioners were various, delicate, and important; that they could be successfully performed only by men of large experience and knowledge of affairs; and that they were not merely subordinate and provisional, but in the highest degree authoritative, discretionary, and final in their character.

So much for that.

What is the meaning of this clause of the Constitution? It does not say "no person holding an office of trust or profit" shall hold the position of an elector; or that no such person shall vote as an elector, but no such person "shall be appointed an elector." It meets the citizen on the way to the polls, with his ballot in his hand, and says to him: You must not vote for any person as an elector who holds an office of trust or profit under the United States. If you do, your vote is thrown away, for even if such person receive a majority of the votes cast, such votes are utterly void and there will be one place in the electoral college unfilled. You cannot "appoint" an ineligible elector. To this effect is the decision, already cited, of the Rhode Island supreme court. They say:

We think the disqualification does not result in the election of the candidate next in vote, but in a failure to elect. In England it has been held that where electors vote for an ineligible candidate, knowing his disqualification, their votes are not to be counted any more than if they were thrown for a dead man or the man in the moon; and that, in such a case, the opposing candidate being qualified will be elected, although he has had a minority of the votes. (King vs. Hawkins, 10 East, 210; Reg. vs. Coaks, 3 El. and B., 253.) But even in England if the disqualification is unknown the minority candidate is not entitled to the office, the election being a failure. (Queen vs. Hiornes, 7 Ad. and E., 960; Rex vs. Bridge, 1 M. and Selw. 7.) * * * The question submitted to us does not allege or imply that the electors, knowing the disqualification, voted for the ineligible candidate in willful defiance of the law, and certainly, in the absence of proof, it is not to be presumed that they so voted. The only effect of the disqualification, in our opinion, is to render void the election of the candidate who is disqualified and to leave one place in the electoral college unfilled.

The office Mr. Corliss held in Rhode Island is exactly the same which Mr. Morrell held in Pennsylvania. Both were alike ineligible.

Mr. Corliss declined his position as an elector after the day of election and before the meeting of the electoral college, but the court disposed of that feature of the case as follows:

Before any person can decline he must first be elected, and no person can be elected who is ineligible; or, in other words, incapable of being elected.

Rhode Island has a statute which runs in this wise:

If any electors chosen as aforesaid shall after their said election decline the said office, or be prevented by any cause from serving therein, the other electors * * * shall fill such vacancies.

The court held that there was no power under this statute in the other electors to fill the place of Mr. Corliss, because the latter had not been chosen by the people, and that he, in attempting to resign his place as an elector, was attempting an impossibility, because he could not resign that which he was not entitled to and which he had no right to occupy.

The place was filled by the Legislature, convened by the governor by virtue of another statute.

Now let us look at the case in hand.

The Constitution of the United States authorizes and commands each State to appoint electors "in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct." In Pennsylvania the Legislature has directed that the electors shall be chosen by the people. I have endeavored to show that as far as Mr. Morrell was concerned there was no appointment of an elector by the people, that there was a place unfilled. The other electors endeavored to fill this place by the appointment of Mr. Boggs, under a statute which reads as follows:

If any such elector shall die, or from any cause fail to attend at the seat of government, at the time appointed by law, the electors present shall proceed to choose, viva voce, a person to fill the vacancy occasioned thereby; and immediately after such choice the names of the person so chosen shall be transmitted by the presiding officer of the college to the governor, whose duty it shall be forthwith to cause notice in writing to be given to such person of his election; and the person so elected (and not the person in whose place he shall have been chosen) shall be an elector, and shall, with the other electors, perform the duties enjoined on them as aforesaid.

"If any such elector." What does this mean? Unquestionably, any elector appointed by the people. Mr. Boggs was not elected in place of an elector who had died, or who, from any cause, failed to attend, but in the stead of Mr. Morrell, who was never an elector at all, who was ineligible, who was incapable of being appointed. Mr. Morrell, in refusing to attend the meeting of the electoral college, made a show of declining a position which, in the language of the Rhode Island supreme court "he was not entitled to and which he had no right to occupy."

It was contended before the electoral commission in the case of Oregon, that when a person ineligible to appointment as an elector has received a majority of the votes cast and has acted in the capacity of an elector, "he is not a mere usurper, but an officer de facto, acting under color of title, and that his acts as such officer, in the absence of fraud, are binding upon third persons and the public." Had Mr. Morrell acted himself, had he cast his vote as an elector, this doctrine would doubtless have been advanced here. But he never acted at all. He never entered upon the duties of his office. He did not cast his vote. He declined to do so. He failed to attend. He was, therefore, not an elector de facto and this new-fangled doctrine is not applicable to this case.

Not being an elector de jure, because he could not be appointed on account of his disqualification, and not being an elector de facto, because he did not pretend to act under color of title, there was, on the day the electoral college of Pennsylvania met a place in it unfilled, and the laws of that State failing to prescribe any mode of appointment in such a contingency, the act of the other electors in choosing Mr. Boggs was simply a nullity and his vote ought not to be counted.

We are told that the governor of the State dare not inquire into the ineligibility of an elector. Governor Grover is charged with an usurpation of power in passing upon the ineligibility of Watts. It is asserted that the duty of the canvassing board, in such a case, is simply to see that a proper arithmetical calculation is made and certify to the appointment of the men receiving the highest number of votes. The argument is that there is no power in the State to declare an elector ineligible.

The certificate goes to the President of the Senate and is opened in the presence of the two Houses. It may accredit an alien, or a Senator, or a Representative, or any person "holding an office of trust or profit under the United States," but then, we are told, there is no power there to inquire into it. The two Houses are bound to take the certificate of the governor, based on the computation of the canvassing board, and ask no questions. The argument is that there is no power in Congress to declare an elector ineligible.

Thus this clause of the Constitution is rendered absolutely inoperative because we cannot find where the power to inquire and correct is lodged. It is as though it never had been written. It cannot assert itself in any way. It is "not self-executing." Men know that it is there and that it is being violated, but are powerless to enforce it. What a mockery such a doctrine is! I can never subscribe to it.

The power to count the votes is lodged in the two Houses of Congress. That is a power to separate the true from the false, or, in other words, to determine what are votes. The ballot of a person who is constitutionally disqualified as an elector is not a vote that is to be counted, and the two Houses of Congress, discriminating between the true and the false, must pass upon his disqualification and reject his so-called vote.

A few words with reference to the principle involved in this objection. I have made the objection in good faith, because I am profoundly impressed with the danger of the doctrine announced by the electoral commission that officers of the United States may use all their influence, patronage, and power in procuring their appointment as electors, and before the day arrives for casting their votes resign, and thus qualify themselves for reappointment by the other electors or have their places filled by persons suggested by themselves. So were Clay, Grundy, and Wright impressed when, in 1837, they said to the Senate:

The committee are of opinion that the second section of the second article of the Constitution, which declares that "no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector," ought to be carried in its whole spirit into rigid execution in order to prevent officers of the General Government from bringing their official power to influence the elections of President and Vice-President of the United States. This provision of the Constitution, it is believed, excludes and disqualifies deputy postmasters from the appointment of electors; and the disqualification relates to the time of the appointments, and that a resignation of the office of deputy postmaster after his appointment as elector would not entitle him to vote as elector under the Constitution.

It seems to me to be the duty of this House to place the seal of its condemnation upon the novel suggestion, borne of the exigencies of this crisis, that the disqualification of an elector relates to the time of the meeting of the electoral college, and not to the date of his appointment.

Mr. Speaker, the people of the United States have suffered some severe shocks during the late presidential canvass and since.

They have seen the Secretary of War acting as a delegate in a political convention and controlling the nomination of its candidates for President and Vice-President.

They have seen the Secretary of the Interior taking the championship of a political committee and conducting the campaign for the succession to the Presidency.

They have seen the Attorney-General issuing his commissions to deputy marshals by the thousand for the purpose of controlling the election.

They have seen an army of office-holders making their voluntary and forced contributions to aid in electing the candidates with whom the Administration was in sympathy.

They have seen the President of the United States send troops to certain States of the Union apparently for no other purpose.

And, when the election was over, they have seen him organize a commission, composed partially of Senators and Representatives, all of one political faith, and send them to a sovereign State to witness a fair count of the "votes actually cast" by a returning board that has never made a fair count since it has had an existence. They have seen these appointees of the President return and report to the country that this returning board, which had steeped itself in infamy and fraud, which had rejected 10,000 of the "votes actually cast," thereby reversing the decision and defeating the will of the people of the State, was entitled to the respect and commendation of the people of the country.

And they have seen one of these men who thus acted in a quasi-official capacity under the President placed, at the suggestion of the republicans of this House, upon the electoral commission to decide how the vote of that very State should be counted. Surely, this interference of Federal office-holders and members of Congress in elections has gone far enough, in all conscience. But now we are told that any Federal office-holder may be appointed an elector, resign his office, and vote for President. In other words, a doctrine is announced under which the President of the United States, himself a candidate for the succession, may head an electoral ticket in the State in which he resides, use all the prestige of his great name and the patronage of his great office to carry that ticket at the polls, then resign the Presidency for three months, and vote for himself in the electoral college for the next term.

Mr. Speaker, I confess that I never was deeply enamored of the electoral bill. I had doubts as to its constitutionality, and have them still; but these I waived in deference to the superior wisdom and legal attainments of the men who framed it. I had doubts as to the expediency of passing it, but these I yielded to what seemed to be the demand of a majority of my constituents and for the preservation of the public peace. Indeed, I felt very much as a distinguished member of this House felt, when, in voting for it, he said:

Here, Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do.

But, sir, amid all these doubts, I never dreamed that this commission would shock the moral sense of the country by refusing to unmask the frauds which lie beneath the certificates of Stearns in Florida and Kellogg in Louisiana, by asserting the pernicious doctrine that constitutionally disqualified persons are eligible as electors, and by deciding in two directly antagonistic ways inside of a week as to the admissibility of evidence touching the ineligibility of electors.

I do not wonder that there is deep anxiety on the other side of this Chamber as to whether this great fraud of counting in a President who was not elected is to be consummated. I commend to them the words of the distinguished Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] uttered with what now seems to have been a prophetic voice, when, in 1875, from his place in the Senate, he sketched the period in our history through which we are now passing in this language:

There is imminent danger of revolution to the nation whenever the result of a presidential election is to be determined by the vote of a State in which the choice of electors has been irregular or is alleged to have been carried by fraud or violence, and where there is no method of having these questions examined and settled in advance; where the choice of President depends upon the election in a State which has been publicly characterized by fraud or violence, and in which one party is alleged to have triumphed and secured the certificates of election by chicanery or the fraudulent interposition of courts. Such a President would in advance be shorn of his moral power and authority in his office, would be looked upon as a usurper, and the consequences that would result from such a state of things no man can predict. But it may be compared to what has so often occurred in history, where the successor to the crown in a monarchy was believed by a large part of the nation to be illegitimate or not to be rightfully entitled thereto under the laws or usages of the nation.

Observe the language well: "Imminent danger of revolution where there is no method of having these questions examined and settled in advance!" What questions? Whether or not "the choice of electors has been irregular, or whether or not the State has been carried by fraud or violence."

To make the picture complete, he might have added, or where the "method of having these questions examined and settled in advance' has been established and an electoral commission appointed to examine and settle them, moved by partisan considerations, refuse to do it.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BAKER, of Indiana: Joint resolution of the Legislature of Indiana, for the restoration of the names of John H. Killgore, George W. Johnson, and Owen Johnson, late members of Company A, Fortieth Regiment Indiana Veteran Volunteer Infantry, to their original places on the roll of the Army, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CANNON, of Utah: The petition of K. A. Duffield and other citizens of Highland, Utah Territory, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FREEMAN: The petition of Jerrus M. Bryant, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for arrears of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JONES, of Kentucky: The petition of S. W. Price, late postmaster at Lexington, Kentucky, to be relieved from paying an amount of money stolen from said office without his fault or neglect, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. MORGAN: The petition of the letter-carriers of Saint Louis, indorsed by the board of trade of said city and other prominent citizens, that Congress re-instate the former pay of said carriers, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. NEAL: The petition of citizens of Ohio, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. O'NEILL: Resolutions of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, favoring the temporary colony near the north pole, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. POTTER: The petition of Emory O. Briggs and 42 other citizens of Paw Paw, Michigan, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. STRAIT: Resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, opposing the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 394) relating to pensions unless amended, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS: The petition of Thomas D. Gilbert and 39 others, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, for the repeal of the bank-tax laws, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, February 26, 1877—10 a. m.

The recess having expired, the Senate resumed its session.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (at one o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) The Chair having received a communication from the president of the commission, he will lay it before the Senate. The Secretary will read the communication.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ELECTORAL COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1877.

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

SIR: I am directed by the electoral commission, formed under the act of Congress approved January 29, A. D. 1877, entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," to communicate to the Senate a copy of a resolution of the commission this day adopted, touching a vacancy therein occasioned by the physical inability of Hon. ALLEN G. THURMAN, a Senator and member of said commission, to proceed with its duties.

Respectfully, yours,

NATHAN CLIFFORD,
President of the Commission.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION, WASHINGTON, D. C.,
February 26, 1877.

Whereas Hon. ALLEN G. THURMAN, a member of this commission on the part of the Senate of the United States, has now communicated to the commission, by a letter, in writing, the fact that he has become physically unable to perform the duties required by the act of Congress establishing said commission; and

Whereas the said THURMAN has in fact become physically unable to perform the said duties: Therefore

Resolved, That the president of the commission forthwith communicate said fact to the Senate of the United States, as required by said act, in order that the vacancy so created in said commission may be lawfully filled.

A true copy.

Attest:

JAS. H. MCKENNEY, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In compliance with the act the Senate will now proceed by viva voce vote to elect a Senator to fill the vacancy.

Mr. MCDONALD. I offer the following resolution:

Whereas the electoral commission created under the act of Congress approved January 29, 1877, entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," has according to said act communicated to the Senate the fact of the physical inability of Senator ALLEN G. THURMAN, a member of said commission, to perform the duties required by said act: Therefore

Resolved, That FRANCIS KERNAN, a Senator from the State of New York, be, and he hereby is, appointed a member of said commission, to fill the place so made vacant by said physical inability of said THURMAN, as required by said act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the name of Mr. ALCORN, who answered "Yea."

Mr. BOUTWELL. Do we not vote by name?

Mr. ALCORN. Then I vote for Mr. KERNAN.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Voting "yea" for the resolution answers. There is only one name in the resolution, and you may as well vote "yea."

Mr. ALCORN. I suppose that would probably be as well. Let my name stand recorded "yea."

Mr. BAYARD, (when his name was called.) I vote for Senator FRANCIS KERNAN.

Mr. DAVIS, (when his name was called.) I vote for Mr. KERNAN.

Mr. MCDONALD, (when his name was called.) I vote for Mr. KERNAN.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced as—yeas 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, West, Whyte, Windom, and Withers—46.

ABSENT—Messrs. Barnum, Blaine, Booth, Bruce, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Dawes, Dennis, Eaton, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hereford, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Logan, McCreery, Mitchell, Norwood, Paddock, Randolph, Robertson, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Wright—29.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is agreed to, and the Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] is unanimously elected. The commission will be notified of the election.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his secretary, announced that the President had, on the 23d instant, approved and signed the act (S. No. 1251) to remove the political disabilities of Joseph E. Johnston, of Virginia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAWES, (at two o'clock and eleven minutes p. m.) Mr. President, is it in order to offer an amendment to an appropriation bill for the sake of printing and reference?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MORRILL in the chair.) Nothing is in order now.

Mr. DAWES. That is as near nothing as well can be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Nothing is in order.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

At three o'clock and thirteen minutes p. m. Mr. G. M. ADAMS, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives have—

Resolved, That the vote of Henry A. Boggs as an elector for the State of Pennsylvania should not be counted, because the said Boggs was not appointed an elector for said State in such manner as its Legislature directed.

And that the House is now ready to receive the Senate in the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives, and returned to its Chamber at three o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., when the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF RHODE ISLAND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having returned from the joint meeting of the two Houses upon the objection submitted to the certificate of the State of Rhode Island, the Secretary of the Senate will now read the objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

The undersigned Senators and Representatives do hereby object to counting the vote of William S. Slater, alleged elector of the State of Rhode Island, and as reasons therefor assign the following:

First. That the said William S. Slater was not duly appointed elector by the State of Rhode Island at the election in said State on the 7th day of November, 1876.

Second. That George H. Corliss, according to the decision of the electoral commission rendered in the counting of the vote of John W. Watts, elector of the State of Oregon, if said decision be law, was duly appointed elector by the State of Rhode Island and the substitution for him of the said Slater was illegal and unconstitutional.

Third. If in any event it was competent to complete the electoral college of Rhode Island by adding another elector thereto, it could only have been done under the law as announced by the said electoral commission, if said decision be law, and pursuant to the laws of said State by act of the majority of the members of said college and not by the Legislature of said State.

JAMES K. KELLY,
J. B. GORDON,
Senators.

WM. J. O'BRIEN,
R. Q. MILLS,
G. A. JENKS,
L. A. MACKEY,
A. V. RICE,
JOHN L. VANCE,
FRANK L. HURD,
J. J. FINLEY,
A. T. WALLING,
E. F. POPPLETON,
M. I. SOUTHARD,
E. J. HENKLE,
J. K. LUTTRELL,
A. M. WADDELL,
WM. P. LYNDE,
Representatives.

Mr. KERNAN. I should like to have the certificate read showing how the appointment of the elector was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read it.

Mr. KERNAN. Simply the one in which it is stated how this gentleman was appointed,

Mr. HAMLIN. He was appointed by the Legislature.

Mr. KERNAN. Let that part be read. I do not care about the other papers at all.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If in order, I desire to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York desires to have the certificate read.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will state for the information of the Senator from New York that the elector was appointed both by the Legislature and also by the electoral college.

Mr. KERNAN. I should like to have the paper read to which I referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the certificate of appointment.

The Secretary read as follows:

By His Excellency Henry Lippitt, governor of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations:

Be it known that Samuel G. Arnold, of Middleton; Nathan F. Dixon, of Westerly; Charles H. Fisher, of Scituate, citizens and inhabitants of the State aforesaid, and having the qualifications requisite by the laws thereof and the Constitution of the United States for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, were by the people of said State qualified, according to the laws thereof and in the manner directed by the Legislature thereof, on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, chosen electors of President and Vice-President of the United States.

And further be it known that George H. Corliss, of Providence, did, on said 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, receive a plurality of the legal votes given in at the election of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States; and doubts having arisen as to whether the said George H. Corliss did have the qualifications requisite for an elector, and as to whether there was an election of the number of electors to which the State is entitled, the governor, as provided by the laws of this State, did convene the General Assembly, at Providence, on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1876, and that the General Assembly, in grand committee, on said 1st day of December, A. D. 1876, made choice of—

William S. Slater, of North Smithfield, a citizen and inhabitant of the State aforesaid and having the qualifications requisite by the laws thereof and the Constitution of the United States, for an elector of President and Vice-President of the United States; which said Samuel G. Arnold, Nathan F. Dixon, Charles H. Fisher, William S. Slater, chosen electors as aforesaid, are according to a law of said State, pursuant to an act of the Congress of the United States, to give their votes at Bristol, in the State aforesaid, on the first Wednesday in December, A. D. 1876, for President and Vice-President of the United States, the term of whose offices is to commence on the 4th day of March next.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of said State to be affixed, at Providence, this 2d day of December, in the year of our Lord 1876, and of independence the one hundred and first.

[SEAL.] HENRY LIPPITT.

By the governor:

JOSHUA M. ADDEMAN,
Secretary of State.

Mr. MAXEY. What date was the last elector appointed?

The SECRETARY. The 1st of December, by the Legislature.

Mr. ALLISON. Now let the Secretary read the other certificate.

The Secretary read as follows:

ELECTORAL COLLEGE, BRISTOL,
State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations.

The undersigned, having been appointed by the qualified electors of said State in manner directed by the Legislature thereof electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and having met and being now in session in Bristol, in the county of Bristol, in said State, and having received a communication from Hon. George H. Corliss, of Providence, claiming to have been chosen one of the electors, but declining to be present at the meeting of the electoral college, we, the undersigned, electors as aforesaid, have appointed Hon. William S. Slater, of North Smithfield, an elector to fill the vacancy occasioned by the absence of the said George H. Corliss by virtue of the statute of the State of Rhode Island.

In testimony whereof we have hereunto set our hands on the first Wednesday of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, at Bristol, in the county of Bristol, and State aforesaid.

SAMUEL G. ARNOLD,
NATHAN F. DIXON,
CHAS. H. FISHER,
Electors.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the vote of William S. Slater be counted with the other votes of the electors of Rhode Island, notwithstanding the objections made thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it is proper to be noted that before any decision had been made by the two Houses of Congress, or before the electoral commission appointed under act of Congress had made its decision both ways—two expressions of what I believe to have been the universal opinion of the citizens of the United States, of the legal profession, and all others—had been made under the grave, considerate action of the States of Rhode Island and Vermont, in cases where the limitations of the Federal Constitution upon the power of the State to appoint her electors had been disregarded. So plain and accepted was the public view of this question as to the prohibitions and limitations of the Constitution intended to hedge around and protect the election of President and Vice-President from influences impolitic and improper, and that no person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, or being a Senator or Representative, was believed by any man to be competent to be appointed an elector. In the State of Rhode Island the case of Mr. Corliss, who held the office of one of the commissioners of the centennial exhibition on November 7, 1876, was first submitted by the governor to the judges of the supreme court of that State, who responded that Corliss was an officer of the United States, holding an office of trust as centennial commissioner at the time of the election, and consequently that his appointment as a presidential elector was void. In other words, that the State had not the power to appoint such an officer elector, and therefore there was not a "vacancy" in the office, but there had been a failure to appoint; and, thus instructed by the deliberate opinions of the judges of the supreme court of that State, Rhode Island availed herself of the opportunity given by the act of Congress, passed in pursuance of the Constitution, to provide a remedy for the failure to appoint one of her electors. The governor convened the Legislature, who by the action of its grand committee elected W. S. Slater as the fourth elector. In this way the failure to elect was remedied by the subsequent election of the fourth elector, who assumes now, and as I think lawfully, to vote in the electoral college of that State.

How strong a proof is this, Mr. President, of the acceptance in the gravest and most deliberate manner by the three branches of that State's government of the proposition that, but for this remedial legislative action, the State of Rhode Island would have failed to have completed her power of appointment, and three, and not four, electors would have composed her electoral college? The course taken by the executive of that State in calling together her Legislature, in appointing a qualified person to fill the office which she had failed by election on November 7 to fill, was regular, and in accordance with law, in accordance with the Constitution, and is confirmatory of the view that I believe to have been universally held prior to this session of Congress, at least, that no officer of the United States could be appointed elector for President and Vice-President, and that, Mr. Corliss never having been appointed, there was no "vacancy" to be filled eo nomine, but a failure to elect had occurred, which must be remedied by the laws of that State under the authority of the Constitution of the United States as regulated by the act of Congress.

What a commentary upon the decisions of the electoral commission in the cases of disqualified electors in Louisiana and Oregon does this action of the judiciary and Legislature of Rhode Island and of the Legislature of Vermont contain. Is it not evident that the lawyers and legislators of those States believed the prohibition of the Constitution excluding Government officials from the office of presidential elector was self-executing and binding upon the States and upon the two Houses of Congress?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not feel at liberty to enter into any discussion at this time of the principles of decisions made elsewhere. Some day it may be that I shall feel at liberty to express my views upon it. I only rise now to say that I do not acquiesce in the parallel that the Senator from Delaware has attempted to draw between cases lest my silence might be deemed to be an acquiescence in the views he has presented; but as for the decision to which he has referred I do not myself feel at liberty at this time to engage in any discussion of their propriety or otherwise.

Mr. BURNSIDE obtained the floor.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me to ask one question of the Senator from Delaware? I wish to know what evidence we have before us that that matter was ever before the supreme court of Rhode Island, or that they ever gave any opinion upon it?

Mr. BAYARD. I have the best proof in the world. I have heard the case often argued during the present session of Congress, and have read it in full in the published reports. We must also take judicial knowledge of the public laws of every State, of which the Senator must also take notice, of which I have taken notice elsewhere as a member of the commission, as well as a Senator. A public law of one of the States of the Union has declared to the honorable Senator from Michigan, as well as to every other member of this body, the facts of which I speak, and Rhode Island has instructed him as well as me that she has been compelled to adopt the only lawful method to provide for her failure to elect her proper number of electors on November 7 last. Mr. President, the State of Vermont has likewise given full evidence of the opinion of her lawyers and legislators on this subject. Nay, if I mistake not, if I am correctly informed, the hand of the honorable Senator who rose last [Mr. EDMUNDS] drew the very act of Assembly to remedy the failure to elect one elector. For this I have merely newspaper authority, but it showed what was the opinion in Vermont as well as in Rhode Island, and, as I believe, everywhere in this country, that a failure to elect was a very different thing from a vacancy caused by death, resignation, or otherwise.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish to ask whether we have not just as much evidence before us that the supreme court of Rhode Island decided directly the reverse of what is here stated as that it decided as the Senator has said?

Mr. BAYARD. I know of no contrary decision in the courts of Rhode Island to the case of Corliss, which is now so well known and fully authenticated by citation and publication that I am not prepared to hear it questioned. I have no time now to read it, but it fully sustains the position that I have stated before the Senate. Governor Lippitt made, under the constitution of that State, an application to the judges of the supreme court for response to certain inquiries touching the power of the State to appoint officers under the United States—presidential electors. The full report of his interrogatories and the answers of the judges are contained in the American Law Register for January, and although I have the book in my hand I think it scarcely worth while to read them again after the full public discussion they have undergone before the electoral commission.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. My point is that there is no judicial evidence whatever of the action of that court.

Mr. SARGENT. I rise to a point of order. This irregular discussion is out of order. Each Senator has the right to speak but once, and for ten minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] held the floor and yielded it to the Senator from Delaware, who was occupying it with the Senator's permission.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I beg to say that I have held the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then it comes out of the time of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I have nothing to say on this subject. Inasmuch as the resolution is generally acquiesced in I am quite willing that the vote shall be taken at once, and that we shall not waste time in the discussion of subjects which do not appertain to the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All I wish to say is that my friend from Delaware is mistaken in his imputation as to the action or opinion of the State of Vermont. The State of Vermont was somewhat anxious to avoid any possible criticism that unfriendly bias or unscrupulous partisanship might make in certain quarters, and I believe she has done it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALCORN, (when his name was called.) I agreed to pair with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. DENNIS,] who is absent. I do not know how he would vote, but I deem it best that I should not vote at all, being paired with him.

Mr. COCKRELL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL.] I do not know how he would vote. Were I permitted to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCCREERY, (when Mr. STEVENSON'S name was called.) My colleague is confined to his room by indisposition and is not able to be here.

Mr. WALLACE, (when his name was called.) On the general question I am paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] If he were here he would vote "yea." I should vote "yea" in this instance for the same reason that I voted "nay" in regard to the vote of Pennsylvania.

The Secretary concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. BAILEY, (after having voted in the negative.) At the time I cast my vote I was not cognizant of the fact which has been stated, that Mr. Corliss had resigned the office to which he had been elected by the people of the State of Rhode Island. I was of the opinion on Saturday last, when I voted in regard to the Pennsylvania elector, that a centennial commissioner was not an officer under the United States within the meaning of the Constitution and, therefore, that he was not forbidden by the Constitution to hold the office of elector. Acting upon that theory I voted "yea," with the majority of the Senate at that time. I am of the same opinion to-day. I believe Mr. Corliss was not holding an office under the United States, that he was duly elected by the people of the State of Rhode Island, and had the right to resign the office of elector, and having thus resigned, the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island had a right to elect one in his place. Therefore, I ask to change my vote, and I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 57, nays 0; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Hereford, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Logan, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, Withers and Wright—57.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Blaine, Bogy, Bruce, Cockrell, Dennis, Eaton, Hamilton, Kelly, Mitchell, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace and Whyte—18.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the House be notified of the resolution of the Senate, and that the Senate is ready to meet them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the House be notified of the decision of the Senate in the case of the certificate of an elector for Rhode Island, including its readiness to meet the House.

The motion was agreed to.

At five o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m. Mr. G. M. ADAMS, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed to inform the Senate that the House has—

Resolved, That the vote of William S. Slater as an elector of the State of Rhode Island be counted, the objections thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

And that the House of Representatives is now ready to receive the Senate in the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives, and returned to its Chamber at six o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., when the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having returned from the joint meeting upon objections submitted to the certificates from the State of South Carolina, which having been submitted to the commission, the Senate resumes its legislative session.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SPEAKER KERR.

Mr. MCDONALD. I desire to give notice that at half past ten o'clock to-morrow I shall call up the resolution in reference to the death of the late Speaker of the House of Representatives, Mr. Kerr. I do this because it has not been usual to transact legislative business before twelve o'clock, and this will enable us to hear the addresses that may be delivered on the occasion. It will be the understanding that the resolution of adjournment will not be put until the close of the legislative business to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting for the consideration of the Committee on Military Affairs, in connection with other papers in the case transmitted on the 17th instant, a copy of the proceedings of a general court-martial convened by special orders No. 217, headquarters Department of the Missouri, November 17, 1869, in the case of First Lieutenant T. J. Spencer, Tenth Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

And Mr. WINDOM, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. DAVIS were appointed.

THE DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. SARGENT, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives an the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

And Mr. SARGENT, Mr. WINDOM, and Mr. WITHERS were appointed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4187) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. SARGENT, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

And Mr. SARGENT, Mr. CRAGIN, and Mr. WALLACE were appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MAXEY presented the petition of John M. Haden, M. D., of Galveston, Texas, praying for the removal of his political disabilities, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, instructing the Senators and requesting the Representatives in Congress from that State to use their endeavors to amend an act of Congress approved March 13, 1874, in relation to growing timber on western prairies; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, by whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1239) to provide for changing and fixing the boundaries of certain property ceded to the Government of the United States by the city of Memphis, Tennessee, to report it back and asked to be discharged from its further consideration in consequence of a House bill having passed the Senate.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4657) to provide a building for the use of the United States district and circuit courts, the post-office, and internal-revenue officers, at Austin, Texas, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1283) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Glasgow, Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1284) for the relief of William L. Hickam, of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following resolution to lie on the table, to be called up at some future time:

Resolved, That the Senate do now proceed to the election of a President pro tempore.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS RECOMMITTED.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 3277) granting a pension to Kate Louise Roy be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I also move to have recommitted to the Committee on Claims the bill (H. R. No. 3273) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen J. Brosman.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 19, 20, 43, 47, 48, 49, 52, 58, 59, 60, 68, 71, 79, 80, 81, and 82.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 16, 17, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 37, 38, 39, 42, 46, 50, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 69, 70, 83, 85, 87, 88, and 89; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 2, 11, 14, 15, 18, 21, 31, 34, 35, and 36, and agree to the same with amendments respectively, as follows: In No. 2 in lieu of "seventy" insert "sixty-nine;" in No. 11 in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$101,700;" in No. 14 in lieu of "four" insert "seven;" in No. 15 in lieu of "ten" insert "six;" in No. 18 in lieu of "six" insert "five;" in No. 21 strike out on page 15, line 3 of the bill, the words "flour and meat" and insert in lieu thereof the word "subsistence;" in No. 31 strike out "$14,000" and insert "$12,879.04;" in No. 34 in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,000;" in No. 35 in lieu of "five" insert "four;" and in No. 36 in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,500." And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 40, and agree to the same; with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "forty-seven" insert "twenty-five" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 41, and agree to the same; with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "two hundred and fifty" insert "one hundred and twenty-five" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 44 and 45, and agree to the same with amendments respectively as follows:

In No. 44 in lieu of "fifteen," insert "ten," and in No. 45 in lieu of "one hundred" insert "ninety;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 11, page 42 of the bill, strike out "fifty" and insert "forty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "fifteen hundred" insert "one thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "forty" insert "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, and 78, and agree to the same with amendments respectively as follows: In No. 62 in lieu of "thirty" insert "twenty-five;" in No. 73 in lieu of "thirty" insert "twenty-five;" in No. 74 in lieu of "twenty" insert "fifteen;" in No. 75 in lieu of "eight" insert "six;" in No. 76 in lieu of "twenty-five" insert "twenty;" in No. 77 in lieu of "twenty" insert "fifteen;" and in No. 78 in lieu of "seventy-five" insert "forty-eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of said amendment the words "the Secretary of the Interior," and strike out of the text of the bill all after the word "affairs," in line 16, page 50 of the bill, down to and including line 23, the close of the section; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "four" insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WRIGHT. I trust that the regular order will be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about doing that. Senate bill No. 984, known as the railroad bill, is before the Senate.

Mr. WRIGHT. This is only done that it may be left as unfinished business for to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be the unfinished business. The Chair would like to have an understanding with reference to the rest of the time between the hours of ten and twelve o'clock to-morrow, as to whether legislative business shall be transacted.

Mr. SARGENT. I believe the time is proposed to be occupied by eulogies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They may not occupy the whole of the time. The Chair refers to the time between the conclusion of the eulogies and twelve o'clock.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest, then, that there shall be no legislative business between ten and twelve. ["Agreed."]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will then be the understanding that there will be no legislative business to-morrow until twelve o'clock. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at six o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 27, at ten o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 26, 1877.

The SPEAKER, (at twelve o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) The Chair decides that a new legislative day begins, and the Chaplain will now offer prayer.

Prayer by Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of Saturday was then approved.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words for our country, which I hold to be something better and more than any political party. For more than twelve months the leaders and the rank and file of both the great political parties which divide this country have been engaged in a hand to hand struggle for supremacy, in constant neglect of vital public interests. For more than eight months, since the nominations for the Presidency were made, the people at large have taken an unusual interest in this uncommonly intense contest. If we look over the record of the proceedings of this House we shall find that, including the thirty-two speeches for which leave to print was granted on Saturday last, there have been made and put into the RECORD within the last month here several hundreds of partisan speeches. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is high time for us to stop for a single moment to inquire the cost to the people of this partisanship; and I wish especially to inquire the cost of continuing it for another year, under the Constitution and the laws and the precedents established by the commission? I want to know if any gentleman has an arithmetic competent to compute that cost. Such are the questions which come to us to-day in all our letters, over all the wires; they come to the Representatives of the American people from every whither.

I know that honorable gentlemen upon the other side of the House concede their defeat, that they have frankly and unqualifiedly stated their purpose to accept the decision of the great commission which they themselves organized. But why this delay over a trivial objection? I know that it is the business of lawyers to "make the worse appear the better cause," and the weak the stronger. I know that they are paid alike for defending the wicked and the just, but I have also observed that the final judgment of the highest courts on earth is usually in harmony with the average common sense of mankind. That is almost always true, and I venture to predict in this presence that if this question which has now delayed the House for a full day, practically, could be submitted to a jury of twelve men, or of twelve hundred men, or twelve thousand men of good common sense, they would say unanimously, in either case, that there was absolutely nothing in it.

Now, in the name of our common country, why on the verge of this prodigious crisis wait another moment before deciding it?

Sir, I am not here to apologize for the Louisiana returning board. I am not here to congratulate any man on this floor or elsewhere that through the proceedings of that board we are to have a President, but I believe sincerely that according to the Constitution and the forms of law there was nothing left for the commission to do but to count that vote. I recognize also that honors are easy between Louisiana and Oregon, and for the rest—

> Mr. Speaker! thou hast well said,
> Of our vices we may frame
> A ladder, if we will but tread
> Beneath our feet each deed of shame!

Mr. Speaker, if you did not say that somebody of equal authority has said it, and I commend the sentiment to the Representatives of the people here and to the whole country.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who voted for the electoral bill in good faith. I did it with great reluctance, but I did it in order to meet a condition of public affairs which I thought demanded it at my hands. It is charged that a conspiracy had been formed to count Mr. Hayes in at all hazards. This charge is sustained by facts and circumstances which carry conviction with them. The Secretary of the Interior, a bold, unqualified partisan, in violation of all precedents, all propriety, and, I might say, of common decency, had been selected as the chairman of the national executive committee of the republican party. His tastes, habits, and force of character give him a wonderful influence over the mind of the President, and by this appliment the republican party secured to itself the use and control of the Army and all the powers of the Administration.

In the course of the campaign the exigency of the party demands troops in Louisiana, South Carolina, and Florida, and at once, without any real cause and without the shadow of authority in law, they are sent. The pretext is to protect colored voters; the fact is to prevent colored men from voting the democratic ticket. The State governments is these States had been organized and sustained for ten years by Federal bayonets. The entire machinery of the election was in the hands of the republicans; all the supervisors, clerks, registrars, and marshals, with their deputies, were their appointees. There were fourteen hundred supervisors outside of New Orleans and sixteen hundred in the city. There were in all seventy-five hundred employés and tools of the party scattered over the State, distributed to every neighborhood and around every ballot-box; but all this was not enough. They must have troops, and troops were added.

The people, white and colored, would not be intimidated. As the difficulties grew their resolution strengthened. Goaded by the outrages and wrongs under which they suffered, and with an energy and power given by despair, they rose superior to all difficulties, and on the day of election gave Mr. Tilden a majority of 10,000 votes. There was no violence, no bloodshed; peace and quiet prevailed everywhere; and now at last a glorious victory had crowned their efforts. The news was flashed over the country, and for the moment it was almost universally conceded that honesty and reform had triumphed and that Mr. Tilden was the next President. But hold! a voice is heard from the administration: there must be no surrender and the State must be counted for Hayes. It can only be done through the returning board, and only then through fraud. But even this board hesitated and trembled to enter upon their work of infamy. They required support. They needed advisers. Nothing short of the voice and power of the administration would afford indemnity against the consequences of their great crime. That voice is heard. A number of gentlemen are requested to visit New Orleans "to see that there is a fair count;" and with this request comes the further announcement "that no man worthy of the office would hold it by fraud." We recall at once the memorable words, "Let us have peace;" "Let no guilty man escape;" "The republican party must unload;" and now "There must be a fair count." Miserable deception, base subterfuge. As in the former, so these words mean just the reverse of what they express.

Who is selected to stand between the two great parties, maddened by excitement, and to see to it that justice was done and a fair count had? Common honesty, common sense, and common decency would say at once they must be men of both parties; moderate, conservative, just, and as far as possible removed from the influence of either candidate. But this did not suit the purposes of the conspiracy, and other men are selected. Among them we find the distinguished Representative from Maine, a republican of the straitest sect, taken from the bosom of the President's political family, and the son-in-law of his administration. [Laughter.] Yes, sir, I mean what I say; for the chairman of the national executive republican committee was indeed the Administration during the campaign. This, gentlemen, is a fortunate selection for Mr. Hayes; he is the vicegerent of the President and the mouth-piece of his administration. He always has a lordly and impressive air; he walks like a lord and talks like a lord, and in consequence of this there has been a suggestion that he is a lineal descendant of Lord Hale, and the inference is that his name is inherited. He arrives at New Orleans; he feels the importance of his work, and is more lordly still. The board is fully impressed; the two colored members cannot repress their satisfaction with and admiration of the man, and it finds expression in the following couplet:

> Massa Hale, O Massa Hale, a sure nuff lord is he;
> He spurns de dirt beneaf his feet because it is dirty.

[Great laughter.]

If he chooses to exercise his power the board is but wax in his hands. The president of the board is enraptured with such a respectable and lordly association, and at once he conceives the idea that he himself is a peer, and not a vassal. This leaves the distinguished Senator from Ohio and the equally distinguished member from that State, both bitter, rigid partisans, both the confidential friends and political advisers of Governor Hayes. The Senator was the first to bring forward the name of Hayes as a candidate for President, and they both will and must have much influence in shaping his administration. They will see to it that the fair count which the President is so anxious about shall be secured. These gentlemen, it is true, will have to sit as judges in Congress between the opposing candidates when the vote is counted, but then this little schooling in that business in Louisiana will qualify them all the better "for a fair count."

Then comes Mr. Stanley Matthews, not a member of Congress, but a distinguished lawyer, a citizen of the same State, a bitter republican, and, I am informed, a brother-in-law of Mr. Hayes—at any rate, a connection—and he is selected to promote the fair count. There are others, all of whom are objectionable, but I have not time to look into them now. Thus the conspiracy progresses and approaches its crowning infamy. The returning board is to be the most important element in this work, and their individual characters and past conduct guarantee that the work will be well done, and they must stand between the crime and the highly distinguished and respectable gentlemen sent down by the President. The backing is all they ask, and they have it. Scarcely do these most respectable gentlemen reach New Orleans before a telegram is sent in substance, "Our northern friends sustain us. Have no fears." And again Wells says: "Be content; Hayes will be counted in." Wells is a most important element of fraud and wrong in this board. He is the president, and mainly relied on. Who is he and what has he been? I have no language to portray him. Let General Sheridan speak:

> There is not an honest man that he can call friend.

Can language add to this? Wells is now a man of three-score and twenty and upward. He stands on the verge of the grave, and yet, in the land of his birth, where his life had been spent, think of it, there is not in this wide world an honest man to call him friend; not an honest heart that beats in sympathy with his; not an honest voice to cheer him as he steps into the grave. Deserted alike by God and honest men, he must do the deed that will stand forth in the history of the Republic as a "deed without a name."

This board is composed of five men. There is one vacancy; the four are all republicans. The law of the State thought it wise that it should be composed of both political parties, and had so provided. The democrats urged that it should be filled, and they named their man; it is refused. Time and again it is demanded; time and again it is refused. Wherefore refused? Tell me, members of the returning board. Tell me, ye respectable gentlemen sent down by the President as a sustaining board! Ye who prate loudly and long of liberty, the rights of the people, Constitution and law, tell me, honest, candid, and fair-minded men, wherever you are and to whatever party you belong, why this refusal? Either one of the distinguished gentlemen named could have had it done upon an intimation; truth, justice, honor, and the law demanded it. Why then refuse? There is but one answer; there can be but one answer. It did not suit the purposes of the conspiracy. The work is done, the will of the people is thwarted, and a majority ranging from six to ten thousand for Tilden is thrown out. The President's "fair count" is accomplished, and the electoral vote of Louisiana is declared for Hayes, and the tools of power arrange the necessary certificates and commissions.

That returning board is now here in a lower room of this Capitol confined for contempt of this House for refusing to furnish the House with the original returns and papers upon which they acted. They still refuse and are still confined, and I am told that members of the republican party make periodical pilgrimages to the cell, as they term it, of J. Madison Wells, to draw therefrom fresh inspirations of patriotism and courage, and hail him everywhere as the savior of his country.

Mr. Speaker, I see before me the image of him who is conceded above any other name to be the father and savior of his country. Jefferson is known as the author of the Declaration of Independence; Madison as the great framer and expounder of the Constitution. They are all immortal, and have hitherto stood pre-eminent. Not so now. Henceforth J. Madison Wells is to be classed above the last two and equal to the first as the "savior of his country." Is it surprising that he aspires to the peerage and claims fellowship with the distinguished gentleman from Maine? But, sir, this man, this board, and this deed are whitewashed and indorsed by these fair-count gentlemen, who resolved themselves into a sustaining board, by the immortal eight on the high joint commission and by the republican party. I thought they had sins enough before to answer for and sufficient to damn any party; but they eagerly embrace and assume without hesitation the responsibility of this crime, and hope to wash away its stain by such indorsement from the minds of the American people. Theirs must be the fate of the river Rhine as set forth by Coleridge to the citizens of Cologne:

> The river Rhine, it is well known,
> Doth wash your city of Cologne;
> But tell me, nymphs! what power divine
> Shall henceforth wash the river Rhine?

The scene is changed. We are in Washington. Congress has met. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio has finished his part of the work. He has prepared and adjudged the case in Louisiana; he has sat as a judge upon it in the Congress of the United States. A joint high commission is established, and in the process of washing away the stain he is promoted to the high joint commission, the sole and final arbiters and judges, under the law, of this Louisiana case. Will he fail in this his last judgment upon this case? Will he defeat the alleged conspiracy and save his country or repeat his judgment, save his party, and whitewash Wells and his returning board? We shall see what we shall see. I sometimes imagine that I can see this gentleman, after he has been mauled, bruised, battered, and almost overwhelmed by the resistless logic, the indignant denunciation, and storm of invective as it is poured forth by the distinguished counsel representing the democracy in their noble plea against fraud and its perpetrators, repair with weary step and clouded brow to the cell of the savior of his country, (henceforth to be the Mecca of the republican party,) and when there I see him catch fresh inspiration by the touch of the garment of the imprisoned martyr; and as they two together reason of truth, righteousness, and judgment to come, I see the cloud leave his majestic brow, and he departs refreshed and strengthened and fully prepared to meet the lofty and arduous duties of his responsible position. With such a judge, aided by the distinguished counsel from Ohio and the no less distinguished Representative from Ohio, I will not say what was said in my State by a plain minister of the primitive Baptist church of a court similarly constituted against him—"that with such a court and such counsel against our Saviour He would have been cheated out of his kingdom"—but I will say that with such a court Mr. Hayes would hold twelve chances out of ten, and that Mr. Tilden had as well hang his harp upon the willows.

How stands the case to-day? Tilden has 184 undisputed electoral votes and a majority of the popular vote of 300,000 with a clear title to the electoral votes of Florida and Louisiana. He received unquestionably, and I believe it is not denied, a majority of the popular vote in those States. But through the instrumentality of the returning boards in those States the majority, without any just cause, is given to Mr. Hayes, and the Hayes electors receive the commission of the governors. In Oregon Hayes had the popular vote, but for reasons sustained by the law one of the Tilden electors was commissioned. This one elector would elect Mr. Tilden even without Louisiana and Florida. The contest arises here, both sides claiming the election of their candidate. The republicans in pursuance of the conspiracy formed in the beginning to count Hayes in if Tilden should be elected by the vote of these southern States, boldly proclaimed his election and boldly declared that the President of the Senate should count him in. To back this declaration they had the President, the Army, the Treasury, and the Senate, and the State Legislatures of nearly every northern State. If Mr. Hayes is counted in the Senate will confirm all his appointments, money will be furnished him from the Treasury, and the Army and the State organizations North will sustain him.

We know that Tilden is elected, and the world outside of the republican party believe it. The two Houses must count the vote; one is for Tilden and the other for Hayes. There is a dead-lock; how is the difficulty to be settled. One says, let the House declare that there is no election and elect Tilden; another says, let the President of the Senate declare Hayes in and use your power to sustain him. The Senate says there is an election and the House cannot elect, and if it does it is revolution; the House says that the President of the Senate dare not count the vote because it is unconstitutional, ridiculous, and revolutionary. It is impossible to agree; there is no issue out of it that will not be charged as revolutionary, and any successful candidate will be declared a usurper. The democrats have no army, no State organization, not a dollar of money, and no Senate to confer in her appointments. The crisis is a grave one and critical in the extreme. Force will beget force and war must result. How would my impoverished countrymen meet that question? Our northern democratic friends deeply sympathize with us in our sufferings and feel most keenly the present condition of affairs, but they could not help us, and if there is war the South must meet it; if there should be no war then there must be a dual government, a continued clangor of collision; and if not collision, then anarchy and confusion. The great question before the country and the world is: Has there been fraud in Louisiana, South Carolina, and Florida? It is asserted on the one hand, and denied on the other, and upon the truth and falsity of his issue hangs the title to the presidential chair.

The country demands an investigation of these frauds; nothing short of this will satisfy it. The truth must be ascertained and declared and all, however disappointed, will be governed by it, and he who reaches the presidential chair without this will be a usurper. The electoral bill is framed to meet this issue, to make this investigation. Congress had time and again sent out its committees to inquire into the frauds in elections in the States. At this session of Congress the House had sent out her committees to look into these frauds and gather up the evidence in the election of electors for President and Vice-President, and in the Senate a similar resolution was introduced by Senator EDMUNDS and passed by a nearly unanimous vote, authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate all the frauds charged in the election of electors and especially to inquire into the eligibility of electors. Senator EDMUNDS was under an oath to support the Constitution, and yet he and his republican associates on the commission and all the other republican Senators voted for it. Did they mean to do an unconstitutional thing? Did they mean to violate their oaths? Were they taken by surprise? Not at all, for the matter had been discussed time and again before the Senate and time and again acted upon. On January 6, 1873, upon a similar resolution offered in the Senate in reference to the election of electors in that State, Mr. EDMUNDS said:

> There is no denying the fact that the passage or rejection of this resolution involves a determination of a certain right in the Senate and in the House of Representatives over the subject of the election of President, a jurisdiction as the Senator from Illinois styles it. Now, what is that jurisdiction, where are you to go? * * * It has been maintained that we have no right to go behind the certificate of the elector. If that is true, then what is the use of sending down to Louisiana to ascertain what is the certificate of these gentlemen? It seems to me desirable that we should take a little more time to reflect and determine what is the scope of what this committee is to do.

After reflection and debate as late as January, 1875, on a proposition to amend the Constitution in regard to the count of the electoral vote, Mr. EDMUNDS said:

> I think there is constitutional power in the legislative branches of the Government to regulate the exercise of the powers conferred in the Constitution respecting the election of President and Vice-President.

Again, a little later, with still more reflection and thorough discussion on the same proposition, he says:

If this were a proposition to repeal the twenty-second joint rule I think I should vote for it, but it is in effect to say that any spurious or revolutionary vote which may be brought forward from people pretending to be electors of a State shall be counted unless both Houses agree that it shall not.

This doctrine he denies. Again, in the same debate, he says:

That when the electors meet on the first Wednesday of December in each of the States the Constitution entitles us to know, entitles everybody to know that the persons who thus meet are the electors. It entitles the people of the United States to know in some way under a government of law that what those who claim to be electors send to the Capitol is the vote of the State lawfully and constitutionally given.

Thus, from a state of doubt and uncertainty by means of argument and reflection through several years the distinguished Senator arrives at the conclusion that it is constitutional to go behind the returns to ascertain the true vote, and hence we find him introducing and voting for resolutions as late as this session of the Forty-fourth Congress to look into all this matter that was intrusted to the high commission. What use, as he says, if you cannot go behind the returns? So thought Mr. CONKLING, and so voted all the republican Senators time and again.

The republican party of both Houses in 1865 unanimously passed the twenty-second joint rule. This gave to either House of Congress the power to reject the vote of the State without inquiry, with no limitation. That remained in force and was acted upon by them in counting the electoral vote for ten years. The issue then is understood to be, are there frauds in the election? Nothing less would satisfy the country. The late precedents all favor it, and the committals of the republican party abundant and unquestioned. The electoral bill was intended to meet the case. It is true the question of power under the Constitution was left to the commission, but who had a doubt under all the circumstances as to what they would be bound to decide. But why was it not expressed in the bill that they should go behind the returns, so as to make assurance doubly sure? For the simple reason that the bill placed no limitation on their power but the limitations of the Constitution, and that would have been the same unexpressed just as much as if expressed, and then no one doubted the decisions of that tribunal as to this.

Our cause is just and fortified by evidence that is impregnable. With such a case before a court of any respectability we could not fail. The political members of the two Houses on the commission may be biased by party, but can we not trust the Supreme Court judges? This is the highest court in the world, the court of last resort in this great nation. The judges heretofore have been selected with special reference to their peculiar fitness and qualifications for the position. In the past this court has enjoyed the unqualified admiration and confidence of the American people. It has been their pride and their boast, and now in this day of trial, when fraud and conspiracy enter into our elections, threatening to smother republican government, to stifle the will of the people, when anarchy and confusion lie just ahead of us and civil war and bloody strife are imminent, where else shall we look for aid? The two great parties of the country are the contestants, and all other classes of men are more or less involved in the issues between them. The Supreme Court alone can and will meet public expectation. They will rise above party. They will grapple with fraud and conspiracy, and strike who it will, equal to every occasion, they will save the country.

If decided according to law and the Constitution, this tribunal must do it. The safety and welfare of the whole country, and especially of the South, rests upon the law and its preservation. I have said I voted with reluctance. I hesitated. I lacked confidence, I regret to say, in the judges. I knew little of them. Others knew them better, they were competent to judge; these trusted the judges and I trusted them, and gave my vote for the bill. The decision will certainly be peaceful, and surely an American citizen may be pardoned if under all the circumstances he indulged some hope that it would be honest and fair. Fate, or accident, gave them the advantage in the number of judges, but in the cases all the advantages were with the democratic claim.

But, sir, the country has been cruelly disappointed, the people grievously, and, I fear wickedly and fraudulently wronged. The judges sank into partisans; the ermine, the glory and pride of the country, has been besmeared in the dirty pool of politics, and every decision made by a strict party vote; but it is said there was as much party on one side as the other; is this so? One side voted always for investigation of frauds, the other against it. One asked, in obedience to the spirit of the bill and the demands of public sentiment, that all the evidence should be let in, that the truth might be ascertained, to the end that fraud might be crushed and justice and right made triumphant; the other side refused it. Proof was offered of the most gigantic frauds on the election returns, to show that certain men were not elected by the people and certain others were, that the returning boards had without law thrown out the legal votes; but the proof was rejected by one side and insisted upon by the other. The party majority decided that if it were all true still they would not go behind the returns. It is not true, then, that both sides were partisan.

Mr. Speaker, two justices of each political party selected a fifth man as the final arbiter. This man was bound by every consideration of honor and of patriotism to forget his party and rise to the dignity of the great occasion and do his duty. He was trusted by both. If he had prejudged the case or was in any way biased, it was his duty to have so stated and let some one else take his place; but he confessed nothing; and yet he never sat a moment on that bench except as a partisan. The same may be said of the other justices making up the immortal eight. And while there is no excuse for them, there was yet some more obligation resting upon the fifth man to act impartially. What an opportunity was lost. Had he met it as a man and a judge, his name would have been immortal and he would have commanded the respect of the world, the bad as well as the good. Had he but said fraud shall be unearthed; I will hear the truth and I will do justice; no law can be sound law which denies this, for fraud vitiates everything, then indeed would he have sustained the dignity of the bench, honored his own name, and attracted the confidence and admiration of the world. The country looked on to see what would be done; the people were breathless and in deep anxiety. On one side was truth and his country, on the other the behests of the party. He fell, and the world pities him.

The conspiracy is successful, the crime is consummated. Hayes will be counted in, but woe unto them who do it, for an indignant people will wipe such a party from existence. I have hitherto stood by the bill in good faith, and I have voted for a recess from Saturday to Monday. The crime was without a parallel in the history of the nation, and I felt the nation should hang her head in shame, put on sack-cloth and ashes, and enter on mourning, and that she might do this thing in decency and order I voted for a recess; beyond this decent requirement I have interposed no delay. I will stand by law, but I will appeal to the people; and I invite my brother democrats everywhere, on every mountain-top, in every valley throughout the land, to denounce this infamy and to condemn the usurper. Let him be known as "Hayes the First"—the first to occupy the seat of Washington by fraud and usurpation. God grant that he may be the last, and if there is virtue left in the land the people will say amen.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, if no gentleman on the other side desires to speak on this question, I would be glad to go on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was so advised of two gentlemen on the other side desiring to be heard; but as neither of those gentlemen is now in the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] a few moments ago said that this was a trivial objection. It has come to pass in this era that an objection grounded upon the Constitution of the United States is to be called trivial in this House. Now, I apprehend that any objection looking to the constitutionality of an elector's appointment and the legality of his vote because he was disqualified under the Constitution is one of very grave importance.

Why is a Federal officer made ineligible or unappointable to the office of an elector? It is to prevent Federal influence from operating in the appointment. I care not how trivial the office may be; if a man holds an office under the United States Government, his influence, whether it be greater or less, is brought to bear upon his own appointment and the appointment of those who are associated with him on the ticket

The high commission the other day, among others of its wise decisions, voted 8 in the negative and 7 in the affirmative upon a resolution delaring that "J. W. Watts was then" (on the 7th of November, 1876) "by reason of holding the office of postmaster, ineligible to the office of elector within the express terms of the Constitution." Eight of the members of that commission, all of them republicans, voted down that resolution, taking the extraordinary position, as I understand, that the question of the qualification of an elector relates to the time when he exercises the duty of voting and not to the time of his appointment. That is to say, though the Constitution has provided that no man holding a Federal appointment shall be an elector because of the undue influence he might use in his own election, yet if he only resigns after he has used his influence and before he votes, that is sufficient. In other words you "lock the stable after the horse is stolen." I apprehend that such a construction of the Constitution is wholly untenable. In regard to the election of a Representative it is provided that—

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age of twenty-five years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

There is here a clear distinction drawn between the time when the Representative goes into office and the time of his election. There is no such distinction in reference to a presidential elector. The prohibition of the Constitution is:

No Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

It is not shall not be elected, it is not shall not vote, but shall not be appointed. When, according to the theory of the commission, was he appointed? He was appointed on the 6th of December. If he was appointed then, he was illegally appointed, because the law of Congress says they shall be chosen on the first Tuesday in November, that is, the 7th of November. So if the time of his eligibility looks to the date of his vote, and that is the day of his appointment, then he was unconstitutionally and illegally elected.

But, sir, look a little further. The English decisions have held, the very latest of them, that wherever a vote is given for a disqualified person the vote is absolutely nugatory as far as the appointment of that person to office is concerned. There has been a distinction, and that has been the distinction relied on in the Oregon case, as to how far being an ineligible person would avail for the person who got a fewer number of votes; but there has been no distinction on either side of the Atlantic on this point, that the man who is disqualified for the election cannot be appointed if he gets every vote. That is the point.

Now, in this case this man Morrell was appointed, if at all, on the 7th day of November. What was he then. Why, sir, here is the document which was read this morning and which the gentlemen were so averse to have read:

Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States of America, to all who shall see these presents, greeting:

Know ye that, reposing special trust and confidence in the integrity and ability of Daniel J. Morrell, and on his nomination by the governor of the State of Pennsylvania as delegate from said State, I do appoint the said Daniel J. Morrell a commissioner on the commission authorized to be constituted under and by virtue of the act of Congress to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine in the city of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania in the year 1876, approved March 3, 1871.

In testimony whereof I have caused these letters to be made patent and the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 29th day of April, A. D. 1871, and of the Independence of the United States of America the ninety-fifth.

[SEAL.] U. S. GRANT.

By the President:
HAMILTON FISH, Secretary of State.

What right had he as President of the United States to commission Morrell? As President of the United States he had no right to commission anybody but an officer of the United States, for the Constitution so provides. If he were an officer of a corporation, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] said this morning, what business had the President of the United States as President to appoint a member of a private corporation? He appointed him under the law of the United States authorizing the President to commission these commissioners of the Centennial. Yes, sir; the centennial job! Gentlemen said it was not unconstitutional; I said it was, but gentlemen said it was not unconstitutional. Then it was constitutional to give the President power to appoint the commissioner. He did appoint him. If he had the power to appoint him, he was made an officer by that law. You cannot get out of it. He is an officer under the law of the United States, wielding the patronage of the great centennial job over the whole of the voters of Pennsylvania in the election in which he was a candidate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen say Morrell is not the elector—another man is. Very good. How did he come to be elector? Under the law of Pennsylvania, which is very peculiar, the governor is authorized to declare by proclamation the names of the electors duly elected. What does that mean? Legally elected, lawfully elected, constitutionally elected to the office. Now, what does the law further provide? "If any such elector"—"such elector" as my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. STENGER] said, that is, one duly elected—"shall die." Did any such die? Was Morrell duly elected when the constitution forbade it? Have you and I a right to say a man shall hold the office of elector when the Constitution says "veto"—I forbid it? Can you and I, who are sworn to support that Constitution, make it nugatory by our fiat, and call it a trivial objection to a man to say he is unconstitutionally claiming to elect a President?

[Here the hammer fell.]

If, then, Morrell had no right to be appointed an elector, let me see what right the law gives to the college in such case.

If such elector shall die—

He did not die—

or from any cause fail to attend at the seat of government at the time appointed by law, the electors present shall proceed to choose viva voce a person to fill the vacancy occasioned thereby, and immediately after such choice the name of the person so chosen shall be transmitted by the presiding officer of the college to the governor, whose duty it shall be forthwith to cause notice in writing to be given to such person of his election, and the person so elected [and not the person in whose place he shall have been chosen] shall be an elector, and shall with the other electors perform the duties enjoined on them as aforesaid.

Now, did such elector—that is, one duly, constitutionally appointed—fail to attend? Clearly not. Then the contingency upon which the college could elect Boggs did not arise, for Morrell was never duly elected, and therefore was not "such elector" as either died or failed to attend.

This is more clear from the parenthetical phrase in the act "and the person so elected," that is, by the college, ("and not the person in whose place he shall have been chosen,") &c.

Now, this shows that Boggs, in order to a valid appointment under this law, must have been appointed in the place of Morrell. The statute contemplated the filling of an office of elector made vacant by a person who had filled it. But Morrell, as I have shown, never filled it; never had title to it. He never held the place. No one could be appointed in his place, for he had no place as elector. The statute applies to no such case. Boggs was, therefore, appointed without legal authority, without color of law. He has no title to the place of elector. His vote was, therefore, null and void.

Can this House count it? Dare we, sworn to support the Constitution, recognize the vote of Morrell as an elector, who the Constitution declares shall not be appointed an elector? And can we count the vote of Boggs, whose appointment was made in a manner not directed by the Legislature of Pennsylvania?

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I propose to speak not so much to the Pennsylvania case, Mr. Speaker, but to the commission itself.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, we have at length arrived at that pass in this contest when words are vain and perhaps silence would better become us in view of the impending solemn result. The stupendous farce is about to close, and we are soon too sadly to realize the truth which we ought to have known before, that in a game of numbers the seven can never take the eight. Never in the history of man have such mighty issues been committed as it were to the toss of a copper or the throw of the dice-box. Indeed, for the democratic party this contrivance had not even the illusion of fortune. It should have been seen by our leaders at the beginning that a sure fatality awaited us and that the doors of this snare were but the portals of death. How it happened that the chief priests of our synagogue, so wise and tried and trusted, should have been inveigled into the acceptance of this intricate scheme—this Pandora's box of evils—now seems perhaps, indeed to themselves, past comprehension. I make no excuse for my condemnation of it now, as I opposed it from the beginning; and I do not intend to reproach the many of our brother democrats who advocated it, as I believe they did it from the purest and most patriotic motives. It was, as was claimed by its supporters, a grand effort for peace and harmony; but it was also, to say the least, a grand mistake. It was a device equally unknown to the Constitution, the laws, and to custom. And why, why was it adopted?

Pardon me, sir, while I recount a brief history. When this Congress assembled, on the 4th day of December last, although we of the democratic party, as well as hundreds and thousands of republicans, believed that Tilden and Hendricks had been elected, yet, in order to ascertain the facts more surely and place them beyond dispute, the Senate and House sent down to the States of Louisiana, South Carolina, and Florida committees to make thorough investigation, and at an expense of near two hundred thousand dollars. These committees pervaded every avenue, every nook and corner; raked those States as with a drag-net; examined thousands of witnesses, and yet, before they had an opportunity to report, this electoral commission was formed to preclude and shut out all this immense and costly testimony. All was for nought. The people's money and the onerous labors of their committeemen were thus thrown away and lost. Both parties united in the appointment of these committees, and the President himself, desirous, as it appeared, to have a fair count of the electoral vote in those States, requested a number of gentlemen to visit them and ascertain the facts. But behold, the wise men at the Capitol, for some reasons perhaps to be developed in the near or far future, took time by the forelock and instituted this most extraordinary mode of settling the greatest question ever known among men. In it they placed the balance of power in the judiciary, some of them presuming that party spirit had not invaded that last resort of justice and civil liberty.

And now, sir, what have we seen? This commission has failed to do the very thing for which it was appointed. If the electoral bill settled any question at all, it was that the President of the Senate could not count the votes of the States; it was settled that his duty was simply to open the certificates and the votes were then to be counted in such manner as the two Houses determined. It was settled also that the two Houses, as shown by their previous appointment of their committees to investigate the facts as to which were the real votes of those States, had the power to go behind the certificates and the reports of the returning boards, and by this bill the two Houses delegated their powers to the commission. It was, therefore, intended by the very act which gave it its existence, the law of its being, that it should look beyond or go behind the certificates and examine the evidence in order to ascertain what were the the true and legal votes of those States and which were the constitutional and legal electors. The spirit and letter of the bill made this duty imperative on the commission.

Why, sir, if these had not been the objects and this the intention of the bill we might as well have allowed the President of the Senate to stand at that desk and open the certificates, count the votes and declare the result. And as it has turned out it would have been far better if he had done so. It would have saved us much valuable time, much useless argumentation, and a vast amount of anticipation or apprehension. It would have saved us more, sir. It would have saved the country the mortification and humiliation of seeing the highest court of the Republic, indeed, of all Christendom, yield to the spirit of party, drag the ermine in the dust and become a scorn and a by-word on the lips of honest men. The majority of this commission have violated their oaths and ignored the very intention of those who created it, and by every law, human and Divine, ought to be broken. Will it be told me, sir, that if you or I or this House appoint an agency or commission to do certain acts under an express law, published and known to all parties concerned and to the world, that if such agency or commission should violate that law or fail to carry it out, we would be bound to sustain it or abide its unjust acts or decisions, that we could not abrogate its authority or extricate ourselves from the abuse of its powers? There is no law, legal or moral, that would compel our obedience or acquiescence.

Sir, I hold that this House would be perfectly justifiable in resorting to every legal and constitutional means to annul the decisions of this odious commission and break it to atoms. Sir, have we created a monster to tear out our vitals and ourselves powerless to resist? Have we made a vise to crush us to death and shall we not stretch out a hand to defend our life? Has it come to this? Shall liberty die without a struggle? Shall the rights of the people be bartered away and the gamblers' law be bowed to and acknowledged supreme? Have men been "duped" and shall they say dupe on dupe ever and we will submit, your willing victims? Is that the manner in which the representatives of American freemen shall act now at the threshold of another century of liberty and glory? God forbid! Forbid it my countrymen! Men should not alone consider their personal honor in this great conjuncture, but remember that they have a great trust to perform for the people; they are fiduciaries of the rights of millions.

I, sir, for one, protest in the name of the brave men I represent, in the name of right, justice, and law, against the consummation of this monstrous fraud and villainy, and I will resist it to the end. I would still turn to the constitutional mode of electing the President and Vice-President. If we can arrive at no election by the people, the Constitution provides the manner of electing both officers. That points out our plain path of duty. And now, sir, even now, let this commission be broken by the resignation of our appointees, or any one of them, who would immortalize himself by the act. Their places, or his place, could not be filled by the terms of the bill, there being no provision for filling a vacancy occasioned by resignation. The commission could not proceed without a full board. Hence, they would be scotched and killed. Let this House then proclaim that there has been no election by the people and proceed at once to elect the President. Follow the law, do right, and leave the rest to God and the country.

But, sir, it may be this dread ultimatum of treachery on the one side and submission on the other may soon be made palpable and irrevocable. It may be we shall soon have inaugurated a man as President of the United States who was never elected, but repudiated by a majority of the States and by a popular vote of more than three hundred thousand men. And to whom, sir, will he be chiefly indebted for his office? Look below us, sir, now confined and guilty in the cellars of this Capitol instead of being at hard labor in some penitentiary for their crimes, and you can see the four creatures, as you have seen them at that bar, two white men and two negroes, who silenced the voice of eight thousand freemen of Louisiana, the legal majority for Tilden, and swore away in a lie that will rankle forever the State for Hayes. These men are our prisoners, but they are also our masters. "To the victors belong the spoils," and the incoming republican President, if he does come, should make these criminals the chief functionaries of his administration. The names of Wells and Anderson and Casanave and Kenner should emblazon the shield of his power.

Sir, if these things shall come to pass with our acquiescence or without our persistent and united efforts to escape the doom, let our men and women go mourning through the streets, and as this presidential cortege shall ascend the Avenue let the castles of freemen be draped in black; yea, sir, let the sun go back as on the dial of Ahaz. Let law and order be trampled under foot! Let the veiled goddess be no longer blind, but with open eyes hold the scales and with crafty fingers load down the one side with fraud and corruption that will kick the beam and throw truth and justice to the winds. And let Mercury, the god of thieves and pickpockets, who began to steal the day after his birth; who stole the oxen of Admetus, the quiver and arrows of Apollo, robbed Neptune of his trident, Venus of her girdle. Mars of his sword, and Jupiter of his scepter; let this lying, thieving god be enthroned in our temples of law and justice to teach senates and courts their duty.

Let the Constitution and the laws be no more held up as the guardians of republican liberty; indeed, let liberty herself step down from her capitolian height, go and draggle her robes in the dust and mud of the Avenue, and fly shamed and abashed to the forests and the mountains.

What power in what time shall retrieve the wrongs and restore the rights of an insulted and outraged people? May God save the state and the nation!

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday last, in trying to fix the measure of the responsibility of the great wrong which has been perpetrated upon the American people, I found it necessary to trace the declarations and the position of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] who, I am sorry to say, I do not now see in his seat, although I informed him that I proposed to discuss this matter further. In trying to fix this responsibility I was compelled to say that his declarations upon the committee and upon the floor of this House were not in accordance with his action upon the commission. He met that charge not by argument or even denial. It was met by confession and avoidance, just as when you come upon the nest of the partridge you will find that the parent bird goes through a series of gyrations, rolling over and over, until your attention is withdrawn away from the nest of the young, and then, whirr! he is gone. So in this case. The honorable gentleman from Massachusetts reached over, one week in advance of his elevation from this Chamber to the other end of the Capitol, and, seizing the mantle of the great expounder and defender of the Constitution, he tried to eke out—reversing the usual process—he tried to eke out the fox's skin with the lion's hide. But even the mantle of Webster, which the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts seeks to appropriate before his time, is not broad enough to cover deception, misrepresentation, and hypocrisy.

My charge was that on the floor of this House he had stated that it was competent for the commission to take proof; that sitting upon the commission he had brought in a resolution and by his casting vote had the order entered that no proof of fraud should be taken. How did he meet this charge? He says:

> It was perfectly agreed that the commission should determine how far they could go in the way of taking proof.

It was so agreed. I never asserted otherwise. What I asserted was that when that question came to be passed upon we had reason to expect from him a vote in favor of taking the proof against fraud. Here is the language he used:

> How can that man be said to compromise who, having a just and righteous claim, asserts it, maintains it, enforces it by argument and proof, yielding no jot or tittle of it to a tribunal so constituted as to insure its decision in accordance with justice and righteousness.

Now, let us see what kind of justice and righteousness he believes in. I find that Mr. Commissioner ABBOTT offered the following resolution:

> Resolved, That testimony tending to show that the so-called returning board of Louisiana had no jurisdiction to canvass the votes for electors of President and Vice-President is admissible.

How do we find the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts recorded? In the negative. He would not take proof that the returning board had no jurisdiction to canvass the votes. Is that justice and righteousness? Again, I find Mr. Commissioner ABBOTT offering the following resolution.

> Resolved, That evidence is admissible that the statements and affidavits purporting to have been made and forwarded to said returning board in pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of the election law of 1872, alleging riot, tumult, intimidation, and violence at or near certain polls and in certain parishes, were falsely fabricated and forged by certain disreputable persons under the direction and with the knowledge of said returning board, and that said returning board, knowing said statements and affidavits to be false and forged, and that none of the said statements or affidavits were made in the manner or form or within the time required by law, did knowingly, willfully, and fraudulently fail and refuse to canvass or compile more than 10,000 votes lawfully cast, as is shown by the statements of votes of the commissioners of election.

How is the honorable gentleman from Massachussetts recorded on that offer to prove fraud as to the very affidavits upon which the returning board made up their returns? He stands recorded in the negative. And he comes here and talks of "justice and righteousness!" Ah! Mr. Speaker, he found a new reason for it. The commission had no "judicial powers!" That is the allegation—that they had no judicial powers. What did he say upon the floor of this House?

> I think justice and righteousness are compromised when they are submitted for their decision to force. They are compromised when they can only be maintained by doubtful, disputed exercises of power. They never can be compromised when they are permitted to stand before a tribunal clothed with judicial powers, surrounded by judicial safeguards, invested with legal authority by the law-making power of the country.

Ah! no judicial powers except to do—what? As they did in the Oregon case. They take judicial notice. They allow evidence to come in to prove that the seal may or may not be the authentic seal. They allow proof that a man may or may not have held a commission from the President of the United States. But when there is an allegation of fraud, where then is the decision in accordance with justice and righteousness? Then there is no judicial power in this land to prevent this fraud. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would not have said so much if the position of the honorable gentleman in this matter had not been on all occasions the great champion of "justice and righteousness." In that memorable trial of W. W. Belknap he uttered at the close of his speech words that will endure while the English language lasts. I have already heard the youth of this country repeating from the platform that magnificent peroration, worthy of Junius or Tacitus for its denunciation of fraud. Shall we now tell these ingenuous youth that when the author of these words of indignant virtue was trusted as a judge, as a high commissioner, with the destiny of the American people in his hands, he voted not to receive evidence of fraud; and planting himself all the time upon hollow professions of devotion to "justice and righteousness."

Well, Mr. Speaker, what then? I ask my democratic friends—deceived and defrauded as we have been—I ask them whether we shall meet bad faith with bad faith. I answer that never ought the proud record of the democratic party to be sullied by a single act which will make any man blush. I went on the committee that framed the electoral bill, as the Speaker will bear me witness, against my will. I said I knew whatever I might do would be subjected to misconstruction. But when I took my place there I ceased to be a partisan; I tried to become a patriot; I tried to perfect a measure of justice and conciliation and peace for the suffering people of this country. We perfected it. We brought it here. It has been approved in this House. It has been approved by the country. And now shall we stop in this effort toward a solution of the greatest problem which has ever been presented to a free people because we have been met by fraud and injustice on the other side of the House? I say no! forever no! Let us give to the people of this country and to the world an example that even under the greatest provocations to resistance we know still how to trust in the providence and justice of God, and in the disposition and determination of this people to vindicate the truth and do justice in the end. [Applause.] We have still the ballot-box, thank God. We have still a free press. We are still a free people. No justification for revolution, no justification for civil war, can ever arise among a free people until they are deprived of their remedy at the ballot-box.

Mr. O'BRIEN. How long will you be free if Hayes comes in?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. To that remedy I propose to resort. And if that remedy shall be found in vain, though I am the humblest of democrats and most feeble of citizens, still I will be ready in the last event to resort to arms, if necessary, and follow in the crusade against injustice, oppression, and tyranny. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'BRIEN. Now is the time to do it.

Mr. CATE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. CATE. You have pronounced the action of the joint high commission infamous, a gross betrayal of the confidence reposed in it, a perversion of right and justice. Now, do you declare it the duty of democrats to assist in the speedy consummation of what you pronounce an outrage?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will answer that question if the House will allow me to do so. I say that I will submit to this wrong now, because we took the chances of wrong when we passed the electoral bill. We entered into a solemn agreement, and until the bill is repealed we are bound by it. To resist it is to bring on anarchy, because the Constitution makes no provision for a failure to count, and anarchy among forty millions is a contingency which no statesman will ever contemplate as a possible solution for political wrongs.

Mr. CATE. I deny it, and assert that it is the duty of democrats to oppose it by every means in their power. It would be cowardice to do otherwise.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. When Jefferson, the great founder of the democratic party, was asked what a gentleman should do under the provocation of a great wrong—not so great as this, it is true, for there is not a more grievous one in all history—he took down the metrical version of the Psalms and read the following good old-fashioned advice from Tate and Brady, all of which I commend to the republican party, and the last verse especially to my democratic associates:

1. Lord, who's the happy man that may
To Thy blest courts repair,
Not, stranger like, to visit them,
But to inhabit there?

2. 'Tis he who walketh uprightly
Whom righteousness directs,
Whose generous tongue disdains to speak
The thing his heart rejects.

4. Who vice in all its pomp and power
Can treat with just neglect,
And piety, though clothed in rags,
Religiously respect.

5. Who to his plighted vows and trust
Has ever firmly stood;
And though he promise to his loss
He makes his promise good.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] has alluded to the fact that gentlemen on the other side of the House regard it as a trivial matter and a technical one that votes shall be opposed here upon the simple ground that they are cast by persons declared by the Constitution ineligible to be appointed as electors. I think, sir, that we have fallen upon evil times when gentlemen can declare openly that anything incorporated in the Constitution by the fathers of our country is trivial. That Constitution declared that—

No Senator or Representative or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

That position clearly and by every rule of construction applies to the time of appointment and not to the time of casting the vote. That is so plain that I am astonished that any man with a legal mind can raise any question or doubt about it. But is it trivial? Is it technical? Was there not some reason for that provision? Mr. Speaker, there was nothing put in vain by the founders of the Government in this instrument called the Constitution. What was the purpose of it? Why, it was to prevent influences being exerted by Federal office-holders to control elections in the States and thus secure an election of a President by improper influence. And was it not wise? Why, sir, they thought so, and they thought so at a time when there were but few Federal office-holders. Here and there was a customs officer or postmaster. If it was wise then, how infinitely wiser now, when these officers are scattered by thousands over the land. I say that to charge that it is merely technical to exclude these votes is to charge our fathers with folly and want of wisdom. There was nothing they did that was not wise in this regard. We now have the country filled with unnecessary officers—many having no duties to perform but to receipt for their salaries and work for the republican party. Mr. Johnson, Commissioner of Customs, in his report for 1874, says:

By referring to a list of custom-houses in the United States, exhibiting the transactions and cost of each, it will be found that there are many doing little or no business, but which are maintained at considerable expense of salaries to officials and the construction and repair of buildings, with the usual incidentals of such establishments. In some instances it appears that there are no duties to be performed worth mentioning, aside from the disbursements of salaries, and that the official papers are limited almost wholly to accounts of this character. Ports of this kind have been created in times past without the warrant of necessity, while others have dwindled from places of comparative importance to this condition through changes in the currents of commerce. By the abolition of such districts and incorporating them with others, large sums may be saved to the Government, but in most instances legislation will be required for this purpose.

I have here a statement which I submit, showing the expenses of the Government in the last three presidential years. It is as follows:

STATEMENT NO. 4.

Comparison of expenditures of public money on account of miscellaneous and Indian appropriations during the years of the last three presidential elections, and the next prior and next subsequent to each election respectively, showing invariably an increase of expenditures in each year of presidential election over the year immediately prior, and decrease in year immediately subsequent thereto:

Fiscal year.	Miscellaneous expenses.
1863–'64	$27,572,216
Election, 1864–'65	42,989,383	Increase,	$15,417,167
1866–'66	40,613,114	Decrease,	2,376,269
1867–'68	53,010,000
Election, 1868–'69	56,474,000	Increase,	3,464,000
1869–'70	53,237,000	Decrease.	3,237,000
1871–'72	60,984,757
Election, 1872–'73	73,328,110	Increase,	12,343,358
1873–'74	69,641,593	Decrease,	3,686,517

In the last two years, during Mr. Bristow's administration of the Treasury Department, internal-revenue receipts increased	14,000,000

It will be seen by this statement that the expenditures of the Government in the last three presidential years have been increased largely over and above the expenditures of the preceding and succeeding years, the excess amounting in the aggregate to nearly $38,000,000. Why is this so? Because the revenue officers and the other agents of the Government, the marshals and all the machinery of the Government all over the land, instead of being employed in the interests of the public, were employed in the interests of the party; the example being set by the Secretary of the Interior who sits here in Washington and instead of discharging his duties as a public servant is working in the interests of a party. So much for that.

I do not, sir, propose to join in the denunciation of the action of the electoral commission. I desire to say only in regard to it that they will have to answer to the country how it was that in the Oregon case they could admit evidence and in the Louisiana case exclude it? They will be asked the question by the country how it was that in the Oregon case they could ascertain that Watts received 1,000 more votes than Cronin but could not in the Louisiana case admit similar evidence to show that eight honest democratic candidates had received more votes than eight Hayes candidates, counted in by a returning board with five clerks, three of whom had been indicted for perjury and another indicted for another crime, Littlefield, being the fifth; and if he tells the truth it was a board of corruption, and if he does not tell the truth it does not lie in mouths of the other side to say that he does not, for he is one of their own office-holders. How is it that in the Florida case they could not find that four honest democratic electors had received more votes than a convicted felon on the Hayes ticket? It will be for them to answer these questions to the country, and the country will ask them. But we have submitted the count to the electoral commission at a time when we were in danger of anarchy, of strife, and of civil commotion. The Presidency is claimed by Mr. Tilden and his friends, and by Mr. Hayes and his friends. The commission have not decided wisely as Solomon did when two women appeared before him, each claiming to be the mother of the child produced before him. Each claimed the child, and they went to Solomon for judgment, and he said "Let the child be divided between you." But the true mother, with the maternal instinct of the mother said, "Not so; let her take the child." And so in this case, rather than that civil liberty shall perish and law and order die, we say to you that if it be so that this child must be divided or given up to you, it shall not be destroyed, it shall not be divided, take the child, but you are not the true mother, you are the false, fraudulent claimant; take the child, we commit it to your foul bosom, but we will watch you and guard it, and if any attempt is made to mutilate it, or destroy it, or dwarf its fair proportions, we will with the courage of the true mother spring to its rescue, and you shall be destroyed and not it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I came into this House at the beginning of this Congress having very little legislative experience. When this question of counting the electoral vote came up I supposed that we were bound to follow the Constitution. But over upon the other side of the House were gentlemen of more experience than myself, who said: "No; we have have got a new device; we have got what a Yankee would call a 'machine,' that is going to work out all that the Constitution could work out, and is going to give us peace, going to give us harmony; we will enact this law against the minority of the House, and thus gain the honor of being the saviors of the country, the great constitutional party that knows how to defer to the interests of the country."

Well, we passed the law—we put it to work. And now I propose to ask the gentlemen upon the other side this question: What did you mean by this law? Was it upon the principle of dividing the game between the white man and the Indian: "I take the turkey and you take the owl, or you take the owl and I will take the turkey?" Was it that if this commission decided in fav or of Tilden we will loyally, faithfully, under our oaths, stand by the decision; but if it counts in Hayes we will howl and resist? Is that the way honorable men discharge public duties? Is that the fidelity with which this cup was offered to our lips?

Ah, there has been fraud, they say. Now, sir, I know a case exactly in point that occurred in our State. We had in that state one of the greatest jurists that ever sat upon the judicial bench; it was Martin Grover. They had a great question before the court of appeals of which he was a burning and shining light. My old legal preceptor, my new colleague from New York, [Mr. FIELD,] came up there in charge of another distinguished citizen of my State, William M. Tweed. That individual had been adjudged to twelve years' imprisonment by a court of New York, upon an indictment for several misdemeanors in one indictment. The court of appeals in the discharge of their duty decided that that judgment was illegal for the period exceeding a single year. Charles O'Conor, a distinguished name, one of those who have been engaged in the discussion before yonder tribunal, wrote letters and made speeches denouncing the court of appeals as corrupt, as perjured, as scoundrels.

Judge Grover, who used to live in Allegany, in the western part of the State, said that out in Allegany when a man was beaten in a suit it was understood that there were but two things that he could do. If it was a case where he could appeal, then he might appeal; but if it was a case where he could not appeal, then he had the right to go down to the tavern and swear at the court. [Great laughter.] Now my friend from Kentucky, who has spoken this morning, [Mr. JONES,] and my friend from New York, who has spoken this morning, [Mr. HEWITT,] have both exercised that privilege, not "down at the tavern," but in the Hall of the highest legislative body in this country.

That, sir, is not the feeling of the people in this country. They know that tribunals may decide differently from what men in the heat of party excitement, in the heat of the excitement that litigants put on upon going into court—they know that tribunals may decide differently from what political partisans or litigants believe to be right. But they have faith in their tribunals. And this country will have faith in this tribunal. Whether they have decided right or wrong, I call upon the other side of the House, in the name of the country, in the name of the Constitution, in the name of patriotism, in the name of honor and of manhood to do what you would have required us to do in case the decision had been against us.

Mr. BEEBE. Mr. Speaker, realizing as fully as any other Representative upon this floor can realize the importance of the issues presented, and the nature of the crisis before us, I feel called upon, in justice to the constituency which I represent, to raise my voice upon this floor in protest against the iniquitous fraud that is now being attempted to be perpetrated upon this nation.

When this electoral bill was presented from the joint committee for the purpose of devising means to adjust this question, I was not here, not then having returned from my duty upon a committee of investigation in the State of Louisiana. But when I saw the report of that committee, signed by and bearing the names of all the members of the joint committee, save one only; when I read in it provisions explanatory of the intent and meaning of the bill, I thought I had a right to take the statement made by the committee as to the effect of the bill they had themselves devised.

That committee say:

The substance of the bill embraces * * *

Third. Provisions for so-called double returns from a State; that such conflicting returns and papers shall be submitted to the consideration of a commission, composed of equal numbers of members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives and of the Supreme Court of the United States; that this commission shall be organized and sworn and have power to consider and decide, according to the Constitution and law, what is the constitutional vote of the State in question.

Not what is the fraudulently-declared vote of the State, but what is the constitutional vote of the State. This it was the duty of the commission to consider and decide. They have not done it.

Again, the committee say:

The Constitution requires that the electoral vote shall be counted on a particular occasion.

Now mark:

All will agree that the votes named in the Constitution are the constitutional votes of the States, and not other.

Can language be more explicit than this? Not the declared vote, not the fraudulently-ascertained vote, but "the constitutional votes of the States, and not other."

And when they have been found—

Not by Madison Wells, but by the commission—

When they have been found and identified there is nothing left to be disputed or decided; all the rest is the mere clerical work of summing up the numbers, which being done, the Constitution itself declares the consequence.

We did not need a commission to declare the consequence. When we ascertain and identify and decide what is the constitutional vote the Constitution of the United States declares the consequence.

This bill, then, is only directed to ascertaining, for the purpose and in aid of the counting, what are the constitutional votes of the respective States.

Does the Constitution spread its broad mantle over and become the ægis and protection of fraud? No; we expected this commission to strip the mantle from fraud, to ascertain the fact, and to declare the true, the lawful, the constitutional vote. They have been derelict in this duty, and history will deal with them in terms of no uncertain denunciation for this dereliction.

Again this report says:

However important it may be whether one citizen or another shall be the Chief Magistrate for a prescribed period, upon just theories of civil institutions it is of far greater moment that the will of the people—

Not the will of Madison Wells and his fraudulent board of returning officers sanctified by a commission raised by the laws of the country, but—the will of the people lawfully expressed in the choice of that officer shall be ascertained and carried into affect in a lawful way.

Again the committee in reporting this bill say:

But we have still endeavored to provide such lawful agencies of decision in the present case as shall be the most fair and impartial possible under the circumstances.

Talk of fairness where you shut God's light of truth out of your investigation! I do not wonder that Mr. Commissioner HOAR voted to exclude evidence. He did not need the evidence.

> When vice has marked her man and stamped the gait,
> He cheats me not; I put him down to fate;
> Frankness has still some plea. But perish those > Who act the enormities their tongues expose."

Sir, Mr. Commissioner HOAR during his service in this House in a former term gave his assent and indorsement to a report of a committee of the House in which he said:

In the State of Louisiana there is a governor in office who owes his seat to the interference of the national power, which has recognized his title to his office, not by reason of any ascertainment of the facts by legal process, but has based its action solely on the illegal order of a judge. In the same State there is a Legislature, one branch of which derives its authority from the same order, the other being organized by a majority who have been established in power by another interference of the National Government—and which majority derives its title, not from any legal ascertainment of the facts but from the certificates of a returning board which has misconceived and exceeds its authority.

This was not then a legal ascertainment of their right. And we are told that men shall vote as electors with reference to whom there has been no legal ascertainment of their right. I say (and the point is one from which neither the gentleman from Massachusetts nor any other man can escape) that if that other branch of the Legislature which owed its existence to the unlawful action of the returning board had no legally ascertained right or authority, then, inasmuch as this electoral college derived its authority from the same source, there has been no legal ascertainment of its right to justify it in its claim to cast the electoral vote of Louisiana.

But, sir, I did not stop at this point in my investigation as to what would be the province and the power of this commission. I found that Congress had decided a few years ago that certain States should be excluded from participation in the election of a President. I found that this resolution had been sent to President Abraham Lincoln for his approval, and in returning it he said:

The joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution declaring certain States not entitled to representation in the electoral college" has been signed by the Executive, in deference to the view of Congress implied in its passage and presentation to him. In his own view, however, the two Houses of Congress convened under the twelfth article of the Constitution have complete power—to exclude from counting all electoral votes deemed by them to be illegal.

Now here we have a direct and positive assertion in a state paper emanating from a President of the United States who has always been understood to be good authority with the other side of the House, that the two Houses of Congress have power not only to ascertain what are true and false votes but to exclude the false and count the true. Now gentlemen tauntingly deride and laugh when we say on this side of the House that we trusted to their faith and that they have deceived us. Be theirs the lasting honor and the lofty dignity of the lie; be ours the humble humiliation of the dupe. I am willing to accept the position they assign us, and can afford to bear their taunts.

But again, Mr. CONKLING, whose voice was significantly silent in the Senate Chamber the other day when the vote was taken upon indorsing the finding of the commission in regard to Louisiana, said with reference to the Sherman resolution a few years ago:

> But I go further than to maintain the naked power of Congress to inquire. I insist that we can utilize the result of the inquiry, and employ the facts in our action upon counting or refusing to count electoral votes for President or Vice-President.
> To ascertain and make record of the facts I will vote for the resolution. This alone will be wholesome; and I will vote for it also for the use we may make of the facts in counting electoral votes and in determining any other proceeding which may come within our province.

Now, sir, that was right directly in the line of the argument upon which the committee which went to Louisiana, with Mr. HOAR at its head, went into the inquiry a few years ago.

Another committee has been sent from each House of Congress. For what purpose? For the mere idle purpose of satisfying curiosity in Congress? By no means; nor did the country so understand it.

When the election closed in November last disputes immediately sprung up. The democratic party said "Mr. Tilden had carried Louisiana and Florida." The republican party then said: "While you may have scored a majority of the votes polled, you did it through violence, intimidation, and fraud, and the canvassing board has set aside and rendered nugatory that violence and fraud." We, on the other hand, replied that the returning board had been guilty of gross and outrageous fraud. Here was the issue made up. This issue we sent to this commission. They have told us they have no jurisdiction. Then I say we have the right to find a tribunal that has jurisdiction, and that tribunal having jurisdiction is the one to which I shall lawfully take my appeal—the great tribunal, which next to that which governs all nations is all potent in this country of ours, and to that tribunal we take in disappointment our appeal.

We remember when the Jacobins of France, in their heinous, horrible burlesque of liberty and all that is sacred, set up a naked courtesan for their worship they survived in power but a few short weeks. So we say to the other side that, having attempted to deify fraud, having attempted to vitalize with the living soul of truth the putrid carcass of a lie, the people will condemn your action, will drive you from power, and visit on you that scorn and contumely which your fraud, your outrage, your violence of justice so well merit at their hands. [Applause.]

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois the time which I am allowed.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I yield my whole ten minutes.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to occupy the attention of the House at this time with a discussion of the question now before it, but I rise by the courtesy of the gentleman from Ohio for the purpose of asking that resolutions from my constituents at home addressed to myself and to the other members from the city of Chicago shall be read, and I send them to the Clerk's desk without now committing myself one way or the other for or against the final conclusion of those resolutions. I occupy, however, the position of protesting by all constitutional modes against the decision of the electoral commission, by which it excluded evidence of fraud, silencing the real voice of the people, in favor of an usurper who claims the presidential office without the slightest semblance of constitutional right and by the fraudulent devices of the villains comprising the returning boards of some of the southern States.

After it is read, I propose then to yield what remains of my time to to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. POPPLETON.]

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, February 24, 1877.

Hon. B. G. CAULFIELD, C. H. HARRISON, JOHN V. LE MOYNE,
Washington, D. C.:

At a meeting of the democratic city executive committee of Chicago, consisting of one hundred and twenty members, held this afternoon, the following resolutions were adopted and directed to be sent you:

"Whereas the electoral commission has disappointed the just expectations of the country, in having persistently refused, by a majority of one, to receive and examine evidence in regard to the frauds perpetrated in Florida and Louisiana, in the returning and certifying of the electoral votes of those States, although the commission had full power under the law and was bound by the practice and and precedents established by Congress to receive evidence as to the truthfulness and validity of the electoral votes;

"And whereas the electoral commission, having authority to hear the evidence and decide, has presumed to decide without hearing the evidence: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the findings of the said electoral commission, based upon mere hollow forms and technicalities, and not upon the truth and the facts, are not entitled to the approval and the moral support of the American people.

"Resolved, That the inauguration of any man as President whose title to the office is not clear and unquestioned, but tainted with fraud and befouled with crime, would, after the first flush of success, cover with shame and fill with remorse the party and the men who had contributed to its consummation; it would be a great national calamity, disgracing the nation in the eyes of the world and bringing derision and contempt upon our system of free popular government.

"Resolved, That it is the duty of Congress to take such action as will secure a new election by the people at an early day, not later than November next.

"Resolved, That BERNARD G. CAULFIELD, CARTER H. HARRISON, and JOHN V. LE MOYNE, the Representatives in Congress from the city of Chicago, be requested to use all honorable and lawful means to secure the object contemplated by these resolutions."

P. H. SMITH,
Acting Chairman City Executive Committee.
H. F. MERRITT,
Secretary City Executive Committee.

Mr. POPPLETON. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing this question at any length. In the National Republican of this morning I find a telegram from the home of Governor Hayes, giving an account of a speech delivered by him on Saturday night last, and as an evidence of the fearless bravery and profound statesmanship of that would-be, returning-board President, I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read as a part of my remarks. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

FREMONT, OHIO, February 25.

Governor Hayes arrived here unexpectedly last evening, and an impromptu reception was given him. He was introduced by General Buckland, who said:

"FRIENDS: I have the pleasure of introducing our President-elect, as we believe."

Governor Hayes said:

"FRIENDS AND NEIGHBORS: The manner in which I am introduced makes it rather easy for me to speak without embarrassment, but we had better stick to the old title until we are sure of something new. In these times of uncertainty we are often disappointed. The good news of to-day is often dispelled by the evil news of to-morrow.

During the few months since the 7th of November I have schooled myself so as not to be very much down nor very much up, but to try and keep as near the even line as possible. This kindly meeting this evening I do not take so much as honoring me as a congratulation upon the manner in which the strange and peculiar question is now being settled. No other country in the world could have endured such a struggle without suffering lasting calamities. In the event of remaining among you for the next two or three years, I will attend the next pioneer meeting and bring a bundle of letters and notes, many of which I am constantly receiving, such as curiously drawn sketches of knives, daggers, and revolvers.

[Laughter.]

But I have not lost much sleep from any of them yet.

[Laughter.]

One of the most amusing was received this week. It was a knife about two feet long, one edge hacked like a saw, probably for sawing the bone, the other side for cutting the flesh. This was wrapped in several thicknesses of paper, and inside was a note, as follows:

This is the knife with which the editor of the Capital was to assassinate you with as you went from the White House to the Capitol. It was taken from his pants while he was asleep.

[Great laughter.]

Well, friends, I think I have talked long enough. As I am in the business of shaking hands, I would say that I am enjoying excellent physical health, and if any of you wish to shake hands, I will be glad to do so.

[Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. Was the knife sent with the communication?

Mr. POPPLETON. The gentleman from Michigan cannot change the orthodox speech of his party, just read. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I am told, while I was out of the House this morning the honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] much meditating on his latter end, uttered a posthumous speech to the preparation of which he had devoted the Sabbath. I desire to do that gentleman the justice to say that he gave me full notice he intended to renew the debate this morning, and it was an accident on my part which deprived me of the pleasure of listening to him.

I have heard read by the kindness of one of the reporters the remarks which he made, and they seem to me to require but one word in reply. He undertakes to say from a sentence uttered by me late in the debate on the electoral bill, in which I was urging my republican associates to accept it, and in which I said that a man who appeared before a tribunal with a righteous cause, and maintained it, and asserted it, and enforced it by argument and proof and submitted it could not be said to compromise it, that I had pledged myself in advance to a determination of the most important question to be submitted to the commission. He inferred an expression of opinion on my part that the proof which was offered and rejected before the electoral commission was competent and proper. Now to that charge I reply there was and is proof which in my judgment, and in the judgment of the commisssion as I understand it, the two Houses when they meet to witness a count or count an electoral vote can properly receive. But I assert that that gentleman had the fullest means of knowledge, by three days' companionship with me on a committee where that matter was constantly discussed, that the right under the power of being present at a count to go into the ascertainment of the fact who had been lawfully elected was utterly denied, and on the contrary that that power belonged to the States, and in proof of that I refer to the language of the bill; I refer to the unmistakable utterance of the Senator from Ohio in the Senate; and I refer to the knowledge of my republican associates on that committee.

If the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] be a sane man with ordinary intelligence, it is utterly incredible that he should have understood any such thing from my position and that he should not have understood exactly the contrary. But, Mr. Speaker, take him upon his own story. See where he leaves himself. He does not deny that he knew that the republicans in the Senate went into that electoral commission on the understanding that that power was denied by the republican party, and that the question whether it existed or not was to be a great question strenuously debated before the commission.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Governor MORTON says directly the reverse.

Mr. HOAR. Governor MORTON was attacking the bill; and his position was denied by every friend of the bill on both sides in the Senate; denied by Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, denied by Mr. THURMAN; and he knew that the republican party here never would have gone into it on any other understanding; and he knew that if I was giving any human being private or other assurances of a different purpose on my part I was committing an act of infamy to which that of Benedict Arnold only would have afforded a just comparison.

Now what does he say—he, the leader of a great party, intrusted with its interests, intrusted with its leadership? That in opposition to every public utterance and assurance which came from the republican party he went into it because he had got the assurance of some scoundrel that it would come out all right! A pretty gentleman to stand up and make charges of this kind in the face of the American people. Sir Henry Clinton might as well have ordered the British forces back to England in the midst of the Revolution and assigned as a reason for having done so that he had a private promise from Benedict Arnold that, if he would do it, the Revolution should be abandoned.

Now, sir, I do not want any more evidence of the utter delusion and folly that has prompted this charge than the gentleman who makes it furnishes himself to the candor and the judgment of the country.

One other thing. I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to discuss at the present time the propriety of the judgment which has been rendered by this electoral commission. We have heard from gentlemen on the other side of the House the predictions that public disapprobation, that public condemnation, that public infamy, is to be the fate of those persons who have united in that judgment.

Mr. Speaker, prophecy is not one of the exact sciences. In my humble judgment any democrat conversant with the history of his own party will be pretty likely to assent to that proposition. [Laughter.] But I will venture a prophecy; and that is, that there will not be an event in the history of this country which in the future will be more gratifying to the American people than the constitutional assertion of the limit between State and national authority which this electoral commission has made; and that the previous declarations of Mr. BAYARD and Mr. THURMAN made in their places in the Senate when there was no presidential question in dispute will be those which they and their associates will most delight to remember. I do not not speak now of the jurists, or the legal profession of the country. I do not look for my reputation in this matter to my republican associates. I am willing to take my luck with the democratic party. This decision is in the line not only of its past precedents but of all its future interests. If they disapprove and condemn it under the excitement of to-day, I will appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober. I will appeal from the democratic party, excited by the desire of power, maddened by an earnest contest for political supremacy, drunk, some of them, with eagerness for the spoils—I will appeal from the party maddened, excited, drunk, in the present, to its future, and to its past. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Private Secretary, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 7) to provide for the sale or exchange of a certain piece of land in the Wallabout Bay in the State of New York to the city of Brooklyn; and

An act (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. HARDENBERGH rose.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, how much time is left for debate?

The SPEAKER. Nineteen minutes.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Mr. Speaker, but a few days since and every seat upon this floor and within these galleries was filled. Anxious care seemed depicted upon every countenance as they watched with intensest interest the fate of the bill then pending. It seemed as one of the great days of history, whose drama we were enacting and which should live throughout the ages as big with the fate of empire. After a long and weary contest a national election had been held. Doubt existed as to which of the contending parties had won of right the prize. How should it be adjusted? A crisis had arisen which the Constitution seemed not to have anticipated. No similar emergency had occurred. The ballot-box had been tampered with, the returns altered, and the highest privilege of an American freeman grossly, wantonly, maliciously assailed.

Paralysis had lain its withering hand upon commerce and manufactures and the various employments of successful industry. Capital refused employment and doubt and dismay and fear everywhere existing told but too truly what mighty issues were at stake. Rising above the prejudices of passion and of party, a bill was framed which to the patriot and the statesman gave assurance of relief. It met with the sanction of a large majority in the Senate and the House, and was at once approved by the President.

The country hailed its passage with delight as the harbinger of peace and an honest determination to redress the wrongs which had been committed; the drooping energies of business seemed again to revive.

Each of the great parties had chosen their foremost men with whose names the whole country were familiar, and for some of whom the laurel wreath had been often plucked to adorn their triumphs on the fields of an exalted statesmanship. Added to these were representatives from that august tribunal which, lifted above the atmosphere of passion and of party and of prejudice, in days gone by had won enduring fame, where Marshall and Jay and Story had achieved high honors as the exponents of American jurisprudence. When these retired to their hall of consultation the spirit of Webster, of Clay, of Crittenden, and of Benton seemed still to hover around the chamber which for so many years had been the great scene of their gladiatorial contests in all of which the Union and its preservation was the grandest and most inspiring thought. Again the Union was at stake. It was thought this high commission were clothed with every power that was necessary to expose the frauds which had by common acceptance been committed, and that the infamy of returning boards which had wrested from States their ballots for the Presidency would be fitly and unblushingly exposed, and that the findings and decisions of this high court would be such as would command the respect and reverence of the people; that, no matter which might win, American honor would be unstained. How these high hopes were doomed to utter disappointment has since been revealed, and how rude the shock to the great body of the American people at the announcement that the returns should find no examination and that the great facts which all so desired to be ascertained were beyond the jurisdiction of the tribunal. Ah, why was this beyond its jurisdiction when it was supposed to have been the main object for which they had been organized, to go to the very roots of corruption to know why and when and where the ballot had been rendered nugatory and to ascertain the rightful choice of the American people as to who should sit in the chair of their Washington, their Jefferson, and their Jackson. That this should have been denied to us is most unfortunate and sad, not for purposes of party aggrandizement, but the higher and nobler purposes of purity and of honor. Give us but the right and we will gladly follow; clothe it with doubt, and mistrust will reign.

Believe me, Mr. Speaker, when I say that while my people will yield all of party for their country's good they never will yield a willing sanction to such gigantic frauds. Your electoral count as given by the tribunal announces their choice for Governor Hayes. New Jersey loves this Union. A thousand tender memories are linked with its past career. Her historic fields are the witnesses of her devotion. She will still believe in the correction of an outraged public sentiment. She would have no public disturbance, no disorder, but she will demand that no new blow be aimed against the liberties of the Union.

We sorrow for the stricken States whose people find an unfair representation.

Through the corruptions in government dark clouds have gathered around our country, and the future can only be discerned by Him who holds us all in the hollow of His hands. An imperiled people will yet, I believe, correct the baneful evils which have fallen upon us, that we yet may witness the Roman firmness and the Spartan valor which gave distinction to the earlier and happier days of the Republic.

But that period can alone be reached when fraud and violence and corruption shall find their exposition as the highest duty of the citizen and legislator. That in this case it has not been done, in the name of my people and of their imperiled liberties I enter their firm and solemn protest.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, I am in great doubt whether the country has more reason to deplore the unexampled villainies and unblushing crimes of the canvassing boards of the States of South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana, the lamentable prostitution and degradation of the highest judicial tribunal in the Union, or that decadence of public virtue which makes it possible for the two great executive officers of the Government to be willing to accept of these high trusts by a title originating in fraud, falsehood, and forgery and consummated by wholesale violations of law and the Constitution. We have become so familiarized with the robberies and thefts, the peculations and corruptions of the governments of these States that the wrongs and oppression of these unfortunate people have ceased in a great measure to arouse our apprehensions or even to excite our sympathies.

The republican party has reached the climax of its criminal career in these States, and to-day it stands before the world dependent for all its hope of the future upon the anointed villains to whom it has given power and place and who for ten long and weary years have been rioting in crime and adding chapter after chapter to the history of misgovernment without a parallel in the annals of modern civilization. Helpless and hopeless without the assistance of the dishonored wretches whose crimes it should detest, it scruples not to profit by their villainies, and in its shameless lust for power it does not hesitate to make the justices of the highest judicial tribunal of the country participants with it in its great crimes against the people and to drag its judges down to the level of its own debauchery and debasement. This is the heinous offense of the republican party, an offense which smells to heaven and which all over this broad land provokes the inexpressible indignation of decent men of all parties.

Mr. Speaker, I voted for the electoral bill in common with every representative from my State in both Houses. I voted for it with my eyes open. I was caught in no trap of other people's setting. I have no regrets for that vote. I have no excuses or apologies to make for it. I believed then and I believe now that it provided a fair, just, impartial, and constitutional means of adjusting the presidential succession; that it necessarily eliminated that most dangerous element—force—from its solution, and would throw the forms of law at least around the title of the successful candidate. I confided in the impartiality, fairness, and independence of the five judges of the Supreme Court, with the exception of the renegade Kentuckian who now hails from the State of Iowa. The bigoted and partisan demeanor of this man on the trial before the commission confirmed me in my fears that he was ready to make any decision which the bold bad men of his party required at his hands. He has but given another illustration of the truth of the maxim, that "one renegade is worth more than ten Turks." Nor did I have any expectation that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] would be anything else than partisan in the adjudication of the questions of law and fact presented for the decision of the commission. I was censured by my friends on this side of the Hall for refusing to vote for that gentleman as one of the members of this commission.

It may have been a delusion or a superstition with me that the members of the commission should not have committed themselves, in the face of the whole world, to one side or the other of every disputed question of both law and fact that as judges they were called upon to decide. I knew the fact that he had been one of the witnesses of the misdoings of Wells and Anderson at New Orleans; that he had committed himself to the absolute conclusiveness of the electoral certificates; and I knew also that he was required under the provisions of the electoral act to solemnly call down upon his head the vengeance of high heaven if he did not impartially examine and consider all questions submitted to him, and a true judgment give agreeably to the Constitution and laws. I was not willing, sir, to be an accessory before the fact to the self-stultification of the gentleman from Ohio on the one hand or to the disregard of his sworn obligations on the other.

Mr. Speaker, we have been deceived and betrayed by this high commission. We submitted certain disputed questions of law and fact to it as judges, and, instead of deciding these questions as judges, a majority has adjudicated them as degraded partisans and as a packed jury. Instead of performing the high and noble functions of just, upright, and intelligent jurists, the majority has "perverted judgment," played the rôle of party tricksters and political jugglers, and have won for themselves an immortality of infamy. No impartial man, whether lawyer or layman, can read their several judgments in the three disputed States but is forced to the conclusion that the objective point to which all the efforts of the immortal eight were directed was to count Hayes in and to count Tilden out. This was the foregone conclusion to which the Constitution and the law as well as the facts were made to yield. There was no obstacle that they did not surmount, no provision of the Constitution or principle of law, no adjudication of the courts which stood in the way of their pre-ordained purpose that they have not overturned and trampled under their feet. The brief space of ten minutes gives me no time to demonstrate the faithlessness, the trickery, and the dishonesty of the conscienceless judges whom we honored by making them a part of this commission.

I call special attention to the question of the ineligibility of the electors in Florida, Louisiana, and Oregon. In Florida where the evidence showed that Humphreys had resigned before the day of election, they let in evidence as to the facts; and say that it does "not show that he held the office of shipping commissioner on the day when the electors were appointed." That day is fixed by express law, (Revised Statutes, page 21, section 131,) which declares that the electors of President and Vice-President shall be appointed in each State on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, &c.

When the same question comes up in Louisiana, and the proof is clear, positive, and uncontradicted that Brewster and Levissee held offices of trust and profit under the United States on the day of their appointment, and are therefore ineligible, then it was that this dishonored trio discovered that they had made a mistake in admitting evidence as to Humphreys in the Florida case, and write themselves down as perverters of judgment in this wise:

> The commission, by a majority of votes, is also of opinion that it is not competent to prove that any of said persons, so appointed as electors as aforesaid, held an office of trust or profit under the United States at the time when they were appointed, or that they were ineligible under the laws of the State, or any other matter aliunde the said certificates and papers.

Thus we find these disgraced judges, in the interest of the most stupendous villainy of every form and grade in modern times, going back upon themselves and repudiating their own judgment in the case of Florida, and absolutely excluding evidence, when it was conclusive, after similar evidence was admitted when it was inconclusive. When they came to Oregon, that all knew was then the pivotal State of the controversy, they admit evidence to prove that Watts was ineligible at the time of his appointment, but for the first time the world, and especially the legal profession, is informed "that that fact was rendered immaterial by his resignation, both as postmaster and elector, and his subsequent appointment to fill the vacancy so made by the electoral college."

Mr. Speaker, this last judgment is not law, and no men knew it better than the immortal eight, and especially the dishonest trio who disgrace the highest judicial tribunal of America. No respectable court in America has ever decided and no statesman of any party has ever held such a doctrine. It was made for this case and for the present emergency. Not three months since the supreme court of Rhode Island unanimously decided the reverse, and the Legislature of that State was called together to provide expressly for just such a case, and so was the Legislature of Vermont. If there is anything settled by the adjudications of the highest tribunals in England and America and by the opinions of the most distinguished jurists it is that the election of a person to an office for which he is disqualified is absolutely void, and that he has nothing to resign.

Mr. Speaker, I have not time for further comment upon the conduct of these disgraced judges. Their adjudications have given the severest blow to the hopes of the people of this country that has been inflicted by all other men combined. It has effectually destroyed all confidence in the rectitude, impartiality, and integrity of one-third of the Supreme Court. With pure, upright, and independent courts there is hope that we may survive the venality of politicians, the patronage of the Executive, the power of the military, and even the corruptions of the ballot-box; but with a judiciary either awed by power, corrupted by bribery, submissive to party domination, or divested of the confidence of the people the last vestige of hope for the permanence and security of free institutions is obliterated forever. To these three men belongs the inglorious distinction of bringing disgrace upon our highest judicial tribunal and prostituting the functions of their eminent position to the basest partisan purposes. I verily believe that their judgments as members of the electoral commission will be execrated by all fair-minded and impartial men of this and future generations; and they,

> Living, shall forfeit fair renown,
> And, doubly dying, shall go down
> To the vile dust, from whence they sprung,
> Unwept, unhonored, and unsung.

And, when all in this presence shall be gathered to their fathers and the impartial and scrutinizing historian shall make up the record of the last few years of the first century of our national life and of the first year of its second, he will write no more disgusting chapter of judicial partisanship and of judicial prostitution than these three judges have written for themselves. It will be painful and deeply humiliating to portray the misdeeds of Sherman, of Delahay, of Underwood, of Busteed, and of Durrell, but truth and candor will compel him to say that Miller and Strong and Bradley have reared to themselves a still higher and more inglorious monument than they; and that, as William Pitt Kellogg had his Durrell, so Rutherford B. Hayes had his Bradley.

Mr. SPRINGER. Having been a member of the joint committee on the part of the House, that reported the bill creating the electoral commission, I feel it my duty to explain fully my understanding of the power conferred upon the electoral commission.

There has never been any difference of opinion in the country as to the regularity of the certificates of the Hayes electors in Florida and Louisiana. The face of the returns shows the election of the Hayes electors. No commission was needed for the purpose of determining this question. The President of the Senate could have determined this with unerring certainty.

Petitions numerously signed were laid before Congress and referred to the joint committee, all praying for a settlement of the presidential election so as to satisfy the conscience of the country. The arguments in favor of a commission were predicated upon the fact that it was impossible for large bodies to examine witnesses and weigh evidence in a case involving so many facts. So far as I ever heard, it was universally conceded in the deliberations of the joint committee that we were endeavoring to devise some plan by which the merits of the controversy were to be inquired into and judicially determined. To devise such a plan was the work upon which we were engaged.

In the deliberations of the House committee it is not violating any confidence to say that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] proposed and submitted a bill which created a tribunal consisting of the Chief-Justice and a portion of the associate justices, "to whom should be referred the certificates objected to, together with the objections and all papers and evidence in the possession of the Vice-President or of either of the Houses of Congress relating thereto." In addition to this evidence the tribunal was authorized to send for persons and papers and to compel the attendance of witnesses. "Also to cause testimony to be taken before one or more commissioners to be appointed by them for that purpose." This bill, or the portion of it to which I have referred, received the approbation and support of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and every other member of the House committee. Such sweeping powers as to the evidence to be considered were never given to enable the tribunal to pass upon the face of the certificates. All those powers are of no consequence, if the commission could not consider any evidence aliunde the papers laid before the two Houses by the President of the Senate. If the McCrary bill, to which all the House committee assented, so far as the provisions cited are concerned, had passed, how is it possible that the commission would have passed the following order, submitted by Mr. Commissioner HOAR, in the Louisiana case?

Ordered, That the evidence offered be not received.

The evidence offered was that in the possession of the House relating to the case.

The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] the author of this bill, was one of the objectors on the part of the Hayes electors before the commission, and there spoke at some length. But on that occasion he had no use for the evidence in the possession of the two Houses, or for a commissioner to take depositions. He suddenly reverses his position, and declares, in his argument, that the two Houses of Congress have, in reference to the count, "the narrowest possible ministerial duty." He further said that to "count" meant "to enumerate, one by one," the votes. That was the power of Congress. That, and nothing more. If his bill had passed what would he have done with the evidence taken by the House committee on the Florida election, which would have been referred to the commission thereby? Of what use was all this evidence to enable the commission to count the votes, one by one?

The commission, under the law as it passed, was to take each case and consider it with all the powers of the two Houses. And I concede the fact that these powers were not defined, and hence the commission was the judge of its powers.

But who could doubt what these powers were in the light of the past record of the two Houses on this subject? Four years ago both Houses of Congress, by large majorities, rejected the votes of both sets of electors from the State of Louisiana, and the information upon which the Houses acted was obtained by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections. But the precedents on this subject were even later than those of four years ago. Both Houses of this Congress, at the very beginning of the session, appointed special investigating committees to visit the Southern States whose electoral votes were in dispute. The Senate passed, among others, the following resolution on the second day of the present session:

Resolved further, That said committee, in order to the more speedy performance of its duties, have power to provide for the taking of depositions on the subjects aforesaid before any officer authorized by the laws of the United States to take depositions, and to receive and consider the same.

The "subjects aforesaid" related to the denial of right of suffrage to the colored people in certain States of the South at the late presidential election. Upon the adoption of this resolution there was a short colloquy between two distinguished Senators, as follows:

Mr. THURMAN. It is wholly indifferent to me whether the yeas and nays are taken or not. I know very well if they are taken the resolution will be adopted. I see that the whole thing was foreordained, perhaps from the foundation of the world.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President, the Senator is right; it was foreordained before the foundation of the world; as truth, and justice, and the means of getting at it, in spite of all opposition, factious or otherwise, will always live.

The Vermont Senator was exceedingly anxious then to get at "truth and justice," and to do so would take evidence by a roving commission. But the evidence, in view of the new lights he has received, would be aliunde. He would have no right, acting under his oath, to read it or allow it to influence his mind in the least. But the next and last resolution of the Senate series for investigating the elections in the Southern States, adopted on the 5th of December last, was as follows:

Resolved further, That the said committee be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the eligibility to office under the Constitution of the United States of any persons alleged to have been ineligible on the 7th day of November last, or to be ineligible as electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, to whom certificates of election have been or shall be issued by the executive authority of any State as such electors, and whether the appointment of electors, or those claiming to be such, in any of the States has been made, declared, or returned, either by force, fraud, or other means, otherwise than in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the laws of the respective States; and whether any appointment or action of any such elector has been in any wise unconstitutionally or unlawfully interfered with; and to inquire and report whether Congress, or either House thereof, has any constitutional power, and, if so, what, and the extent thereof, in respect of the appointment of or action of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, or over returns or certificates of votes of such electors; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer, and have leave to sit during the session of the Senate.

The last was evidently intended as a saving clause. If the evidence did not suit, it could be excluded on constitutional grounds.

The yeas and nays were taken on its adoption, and resulted—yeas 49, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Cockrell, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Windom, and Wright—49.

NAYS—Messrs. Eaton, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Stevenson, Whyte, and Withers—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Gordon, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Price, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, and Thurman—15.

The House resolutions on the same subject were passed by a two-thirds vote at the commencement of the present session. Those in the Senate were passed by a vote even more emphatic—49 to 11. By these resolutions both Houses were committed early in this session to the doctrine that they had the right to go behind the face of the returns and get at "truth and justice" in spite of all opposition. Indeed, from the time of the election in November until the opening of Congress, and down to the passage of the electoral bill, both sides, democrats and republicans, were vying with each other in protesting the justice of their respective causes, and in demanding a thorough investigation of all the facts. And in order that all the facts might be brought out and duly considered a commission was created, with all the power of the two Houses, to consider, weigh, and decide the several cases.

It was not disputed in the discussions on the electoral bill when it was pending in the House, that it provided for a decision according to truth and the right, and not one based upon legal technicalities. The opponents of the bill in the Senate and the House declared that it authorized an inquiry behind the returns. And this was not denied as far as I know. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] who was a member of the joint committee, and also is one of the commission, said, in his speech in the House, when the electoral bill was on its passage:

Some gentlemen have spoken of this as a compromise bill. There is not a drop of compromise in it. I do not mean that, after it was found that the principle of securing an able and impartial tribunal conformed to the opinions and desires of all the committee, there was not some yielding of individual views as to detail. But how can that man be said to compromise who, having a just and righteous claim, asserts it, maintains it, enforces it by argument and proof, yields no jot or tittle of it before a tribunal so constituted as to insure its decision in accordance with justice and righteousness so far as the lot of humanity will admit? I think justice and right are compromised when they are submitted for their decision to force. They are compromised when they can only be maintained by doubtful disputed exercises of power. They can never be compromised when they are permitted to stand before a tribunal clothed with judicial powers, surrounded by judicial safeguards, invested with legal authority by the law making power of the country.

Let it not be said that this reasoning implies that truth and error stand on an equality; that it makes no difference whether matters be settled right or wrong provided only they be settled. It is precisely because truth and error differ; it is because of the vast difference between the righteous result and its antagonist that we propose to submit the differences between them not to force, not to heat and passion, but to that tribunal which, among all mechanisms possible to be exerted by law is least liable to be diverted from the truth.

These are the powers of a court of chancery; the powers of a common law court, trying an information in the nature of a quo warranto. The cases were to be determined by a tribunal which had such unlimited judicial powers that it was the "least liable to be diverted from the truth."

These remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts expressed exactly my own views as to the powers and prerogatives of the commission. And when his friends presented his name as one of the commissioners under the bill I voted for him as cheerfully as I did for any of the other commissioners on the part of the House. But imagine my surprise, when the same gentleman, acting as commissioner, under the solemnity of his oath, submitted the following order in reference to the proofs offered in the Louisiana case:

Ordered, That the evidence offered be not received.

What evidence? Evidence which would have led to "a decision in accordance with justice and righteousness."

Ordered, That the evidence offered be not received.

Not received? Not receive evidence that the Hayes certificates were the product of conspiracy, of fraud, of forgery, of perjury and bribery? "A tribunal so constituted as to insure its decision in accordance with justice and righteousness, so far as the lot of humanity will admit," could not receive evidence of the sum of all villainies!

I repeat again that I concede the fact that the commission was to be the judge of what the power of the two Houses was. But in my admiration of the honorable gentleman and confidence in his ability and integrity, I felt positively certain that, however others might decide, he would go far enough behind the certificates of perjury and bribery to decide according to truth and righteousness, and not be bound by the returns of a corrupt and rotten returning board.

The counsel on behalf of the Tilden electors in Louisiana offered to prove before the commission that the certificate of the election of the Hayes electors was false, fraudulent, and corruptly procured; that it was made in pursuance of a criminal conspiracy; that the affidavits upon which the returning board acted in throwing out parish returns were false and forged, and known to be and procured as such by the returning board; that the returning board offered to count the State for Tilden if paid to do so; and that the Tilden electors received more than 6,000 majority of the legal votes of Louisiana.

Ordered, That the evidence offered be not received.

Is that "justice and righteousness," as they are understood in the old Commonwealth of Samuel Adams and Daniel Webster?

Mr. Speaker, whatever may have been the precedents heretofore, it was universally conceded at the time the joint committees were appointed to prepare a plan for counting the electoral vote, that on this occasion, and in this great emergency, nothing would satisfy the reasonable expectation of the country but a thorough inquiry into the facts of the late elections of Florida, South Carolina, and Louisiana, and a decision of each case upon its merits. And in order to enable this to be done the electoral commission was established. The whole country rejoiced at the passage of the bill. It was hailed as a measure of peace, of conciliation, of justice. There was no fault in the law, no more than there is fault in the law creating the Supreme Court itself. The difficulty is this: that the law has not been executed either in its letter or its spirit. It was established to insure justice and righteousness; it has been perverted into an engine of fraud and wickedness. It was created to find out the truth; it sought only error and falsehood. It was devised in order that the true will of the people might be carried into execution; it has stifled the voice of the people, and may place a usurper in the seat once filled by Washington. It was brought into existence in order to vindicate the purity of the ballot-box and save our country from the condition of Mexico; it has brought republican institutions into disrepute and Mexicanized the whole elective system. It was intended to quiet the public mind and allay the passions of the hour; but it has added fuel to the flame and provoked such a shower of invective and passionate discussion as was never before exhibited in the halls of legislation or in the public press. That, in short, which was launched into existence as a panacea for all the ills we bore has proven a Pandora's box, from which countless evils have issued forth to afflict the land.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCRARY. I had no thought at all of engaging in this debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that the two hours allowed for debate have expired.

Mr. McCRARY. I did not know that the time had expired.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no objection to hearing the gentleman. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" on the republican side of the House.]

Mr. McCRARY. I do not wish to extend the debate beyond the two hours.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa have leave to proceed. [Loud cries of "No!" "No!" and "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry A. Boggs be counted as an elector for the State of Pennsylvania, the objection thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The substitute was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry A. Boggs, as elector for the State of Pennsylvania, should not be counted because said Boggs was not appointed an elector for said State in such manner as its Legislature directed.

The SPEAKER. The question is first upon the substitute.

Mr. STENGER. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 135, nays 119, not voting 36; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Blackburn, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Ellis, Faulkner, Felton, Field, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Henry R. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, Holman, Hooker, House, Humphreys, Hunton, Hurd, Jenks, Thomas L. Philips, Piper, Popleton, Rea, Reagan, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Stanton, Stenger, Stone, Swann, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Jere N. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, Fernando Wood, and Yeates—135.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Buttz, Campbell, Cannon, Carr, Cason, Caswell, Caulfield, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Egbert, Evans, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Goodin, Hale, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoge, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Morgan, Nash, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, John Reilly, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Stowell, Strait, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Woodburn, and Woodworth—119.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, George A. Bagley, Bass, Bell, Bland, Buckner, Burleigh, Chapin, Culberson, Durand, Gibson, Hancock, John T. Harris, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Frank Jones, Kehr, King, Franklin Landers, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lord, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Payne, Purman, James B. Reilly, Schumaker, Slemons, Springer, Stephens, Tarbox, Wheeler, and Young—36.

So the substitute was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. ELLIS. My colleague, Mr. GIBSON, is absent on account of illness.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I am paired upon this question with Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire; if he were present he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. MONEY. Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, is detained from the House by sickness; if present he would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the resolution as amended, and being put the resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the Senate be informed of the action of the House, and that the House is now ready to meet them.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had appointed Mr. KERNAN a member of the electoral commission to fill the vacancy occasioned by the physical inability of Mr. THURMAN.

PRINTING IN THE RECORD.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution, and to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, and Mr. HURLBUT objected.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be read because objection is made.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTES.

At three o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall, preceded by its Sergeant-at-Arms and headed by its President pro tempore and its Secretary, the members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate took his seat as Presiding Officer of the joint meeting of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying a chair upon his left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint meeting of Congress for counting the electoral vote resumes its session. The two Houses acting separately have considered and determined the objection to the certificate from the State of Pennsylvania; the Secretary of the Senate will read the resolution of the Senate.

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry A. Boggs be counted with the other votes of the electors of Pennsylvania notwithstanding the objection thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House of Representatives will now read the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives read the resolution adopted by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry A. Boggs as an elector for the State of Pennsylvania should not be counted, because said Boggs was not appointed an elector for said State in such manner as its Legislature directed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The two Houses not concurring in an affirmative vote to reject, the vote of the State of Pennsylvania will be counted. The tellers will announce the vote of the State of Pennsylvania.

Senator ALLISON, (one of the tellers.) The State of Pennsylvania cast 29 votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President and 29 votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Having opened the certificate received by messenger from the State of Rhode Island, the Chair hands to the tellers the same to be read in the presence and hearing of the two Houses; also the corresponding certificate by mail is handed to the tellers.

Mr. STONE (one of the tellers) then read the certificate from the State of Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any objections to the certificate from the State of Rhode Island?

Mr. O'BRIEN. On behalf of myself and other signers, Senators and Representatives, I send up objections to one of the votes from the State of Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The member from Maryland having submitted an objection to the certificate from the State of Rhode Island, the Clerk of the House will read the same.

The Clerk of the House then read the following:

The undersigned, Senators and Representatives, do hereby object to counting the vote of William S. Slater, alleged elector of the State of Rhode Island, and as reasons therefor assign the following:

First. That the said William S. Slater was not duly appointed elector by the State of Rhode Island at the election in said State on the 7th day of November, 1876.

Second. That George H. Corliss, according to the decision of the electoral commission rendered in the counting of the vote of John W. Watts, as elector of the State of Oregon, if said decision be law, was duly appointed elector from the State of Rhode Island, and the substitution for him of the said Slater was illegal and unconstitutional.

Third. If in any event it was competent to complete the electoral college of Rhode Island by adding another elector thereto, it could only have been done, under the law as announced by the said electoral commission, if said decision be law and pursuant to the laws of said State, by act of the majority of the members of said college, and not by the Legislature of said State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the certificate from the State of Rhode Island? (After a pause.) If there be none, the Senate will now withdraw to its Chamber, that the two Houses may separately consider and determine the objection.

Accordingly (at three o'clock and twenty-eight minutes p. m.) the Senate withdrew.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The House was called to order by the Speaker at three o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

Mr. POPPLETON. I move that the House now take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I hope not.

Mr. HENDERSON. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and the affirmative votes having been counted,

The SPEAKER announced that the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I ask that the other side be counted.

The SPEAKER. More than fifty members having called for the yeas and nays, the Chair decides that that is a sufficient number to order them.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 84, nays 178, not voting 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Ellis, Field, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, Henkle, Hooker, House, Humphreys, Hurd, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lane, Levy, Luttrell, Lynde, Maish, McMahon, Meade, Money, Morrison, Mutchler, O'Brien, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Rice, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sayler, Sheakley, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stanton, Stenger, Stone, Terry, Thompson, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, and Jere N. Williams—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Beebe, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Blount, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Buttz, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Carr, Cason, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gause, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Holman, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyman, Frank Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Phillips, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, John Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Seelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Stowell, Strait, Tarbox, Teese, Thomas, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Warner, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Yeates—178.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Bass, Cabell, Durand, Egbert, Gibson, John T. Harris, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hopkins, King, Lewis, Mackey, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Purman, James B. Reilly, Scales, Schleicher, Schumaker, Slemons, Stephens, Swann, Ward, Wheeler, and Young—28.

So the motion of Mr. POPPLETON was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS said: I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. DURAND, is still absent on account of sickness.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House has just refused to take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning, and I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. LANE. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his motion.

Mr. COX. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What would be the effect of the adoption of this motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes as in order the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock. The gentleman from New York makes that motion and then moves to lay it upon the table, the evident object being to prevent a vote being taken on the motion to reconsider. It is what is known in parliamentary practice as a clinching motion to prevent further delay.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. My object is to prevent any further delay in proceeding with this count.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise to a question of order. My point is that under the electoral law, which is framed I believe in obedience to the Constitution of the United States, a majority of the House can at any time take a recess until ten o'clock on the next day.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman will observe that the majority of the House has just voted against taking such a recess.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I understand that very well. But I submit that a motion to lay on the table this motion to reconsider would not necessarily preclude the House afterward from taking a recess under the provision of the law. In other words, the motion of the gentleman from New York is in effect a nullification of that law, is out of order, and should be so ruled by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman who voted with the majority has the power to move a reconsideration of a vote.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I understand that.

The SPEAKER. And then the same gentleman or any other gentleman has the right to move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. O'BRIEN. But suppose the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider should prevail; is it not practically a nullification of the law which says that we may take a recess?

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable. The gentleman from New York moves to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to take a recess until to-morrow at ten o'clock, and moves to lay that motion on the table. The question is on agreeing to the latter motion.

Mr. CASWELL. I rise to a question of order. I do not think that the motion to reconsider this vote is in order, because a motion for a recess is in the nature of a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, with all due respect to the gentleman, thinks that a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to adjourn would be in order and would not be of a dilatory character. Rule 49 is very clear on the point:

When a motion has been made and carried in the affirmative or negative, it shall be in order for any member of the majority to move for the reconsideration thereof.

Mr. CASWELL. Is that applicable to a motion to adjourn?

Mr. SAYLER. There is a very grave misapprehension, I think, as to the effect of the motion of the gentleman from New York. It seems to be supposed——

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Mr. Speaker, as there seems to be some misapprehension as to the effect of my motion, I desire to explain, and the Chair will correct me if I am in error.

Mr. SAYLER. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. As I understand the effect of my motion, it will be to bring the House immediately to a discussion upon the question before us, arising under the electoral commission bill, and to dispose of that question; and then after the Senate has again convened with us and another State has been objected to we can take a recess until to-morrow morning. There is nothing in my motion to interfere with that.

The SPEAKER. Whenever that question arises the Chair will rule upon it. The Chair will now listen to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER.]

Mr. SAYLER. The gentleman from New York has made substantially the explanation I intended to make.

The SPEAKER. The Chair follows the rule never to make a decision in advance of the issue.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the vote of William S. Slater be counted with the other votes of the electors of Rhode Island, notwithstanding the objections made thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate was ready to meet the House to proceed with counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WOOD, of New York, to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion for a recess was negatived, there were—ayes 142, noes 64.

Mr. WALLING. I call for tellers.

Mr. WADDELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 182, nays 67, not voting 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Beebe, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Blount, Bradley, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Yeates—182.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Collins, Cowan, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Ellis, Field, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, Henkle, Hooker, House, Humphreys, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lane, Levy, Luttrell, Lynde, Maish, McMahon, Meade, Money, Mutchler, O'Brien, John F. Walker, Walling, Whitthorne, Wigginton, and Jere N. Williams—67.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, John H. Baker, Bass, Buckner, Carr, Caswell, Chapin, Cox, Durand, Egbert, Gibson, Goode, John T. Harris, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hopkins, Frank Jones, King, Franklin Landers, Lewis, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Piper, Purman, James B. Reilly, Roberts, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schumaker, Slemons, Southard, Stephens, Swann, Teese, Tucker, Walsh, Ward, Wheeler, and Young—41.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

During the vote,

Mr. HUNTON moved that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. ELLIS and Mr. LEVY objected.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. EAMES rose.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk the resolution which I now offer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair first recognized the gentleman from Maryland, who presented in joint meeting the objections to counting the vote in the case of Rhode Island, as he is entitled to be first recognized, but the Chair will next recognize the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask my resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of William S. Slater as elector for the State of Rhode Island should not be counted because said Slater was not appointed or elected elector for said State in such manner as its Legislature had directed.

Mr. EAMES. I move the following as a substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of William S. Slater as an elector for the State of Rhode Island be counted, the objections thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

Cries on the republican side of "Vote!" "Vote!"

Mr. O'BRIEN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will open the discussion.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will have a vote sooner if they omit to call for it out of order.

Mr. JENKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise not so much to impart information as to ask it.

The objection to the State of Rhode Island is the very converse of that from Pennsylvania. In the case of Rhode Island, to which objection has now been made, the supreme court of Rhole Island ruled that Mr. Corliss, having been a centennial commissioner, could not be elected, and as he could not be elected the fact that he was voted for and not elected did not constitute any vacancy in the electoral college, and, although their statute was equally as broad as that in Pennsylvania, that there could be no filling of the college by those who had been elected as members thereof. That was the Rhode Island decision. The Pennsylvania decision just now made by the Senate and minority of this House is that the fact that a man was a centennial commissioner does not disqualify him, or, if it does disqualify him, his failure to attend leaves a vacancy which can be filled by the electoral college.

They are the converse of each other, and those who voted for excluding the vote in Pennsylvania cannot with any consistency vote to exclude the vote of the person by which the place of Mr. Corliss was supplied. Those who voted in favor of receiving that vote, if they propose to be consistent, must vote to exclude the vote of Rhode Island now objected to.

That is all I desire to say with reference to this subject, but I desire to make a few inquiries, and I make these inquiries in no querulous temper. I desire to know a few facts for my own information as one of 40,000,000 of people and for the information of those who are to succeed us hereafter. Those inquiries I propose to make also in the fullest spirit of charity; "that charity which thinketh no evil, which speaketh no evil, yet in whose beauteous diadem the brightest jewel is that she rejoiceth in truth."

The first inquiry I have to make is this: I desire to know by what authority the electoral commission has made the two Houses of the American Congress mere addenda to a conspiracy between a corrupt governor and a felonious returning board. This inquiry, it seems to me, it is pertinent for some one who is cognizant of the why and wherefore to answer for the benefit of the American people. I listened with intense interest on Saturday to the honorable commissioner from Massachusetts, hoping he would give us that information. Instead of that he diverted himself from the subject under consideration and endeavored to cover himself with the cloak of the honorable Senator from Ohio, a man whose most unhallowed thought is purer than his best righteousness. He could not so cover himself. The gentleman claimed that Congress had conferred upon this commission great and extensive powers; that they were authorized to inquire and to exclude evidence or to admit it, as to them seemed just. But the fact that a great power is committed is no excuse for its betrayal. He to whom much is given is expected to account for much, and in that he was greatly trusted, he should have discharged the trust with greater good faith than if the trust had been smaller. The greater the confidence, the more base is the betrayal. So that his two answers were by no means satisfactory.

But that satisfaction becomes less apparent when we inquire a little into the past. The very same honorable commissioner in 1872, when the question of the exclusion of certain votes of the State of Georgia that had been cast for Horace Greeley came up, then interpreted the law and the Constitution just as it now exists that he had power to go outside of the certificates and to exclude those votes on the authority of what he called historical fact. But circumstances alter cases. I wholly concede and recognize this as true. In that case it was democratic votes he was throwing out, and in this case it would have been republican. But that speaks little for the impartiality with which he swore he would judge this cause.

The same thing occurred in 1872 in reference to the votes of Louisiana. The question came up whether they should be counted, and the honorable gentleman then, interpreting the law and the constitution just as it now is, said to this House and the country that they had a right to inquire into the facts. They did inquire into them, and they threw out those votes. But circumstances again alter cases. It was democratic votes they threw out then, but now it was republican votes they were asked to throw out; and in this way he shows his impartial justice under oath.

But we need not go to the far distant past to inquire concerning the integrity of this commission. Its own conduct stands before the people, not as an illustration of integrity, but as a contradictory infamy. In the case of Florida the certificate of the governor awarded that State to the republicans. The certificate of the secretary of state declared the majority of the votes cast were for the democratic party. That certificate was corroborated by the decision of the supreme court of Florida. In Oregon the certificate of the governor gave the State to the democrats, but the certificate of the secretary of state as to the vote cast gave a majority for the republicans. Just the reverse of the Florida decision literally. In the first the governor's certificate controlled; in the latter it was overruled. But circumstances alter cases. The one was a democratic vote; the other republican. It was a difference on party lines on which they acted, and not judicial truth at all.

Now, it is this alchemy, this strange unknown composition, that I desire to know of. If the philosopher's stone has been found by which the base may be made the true metal, if that has been discovered by which truth can be made falsehood, it is our right to know it. If this commission's powers extend that far, and their sapience has discovered that which was heretofore unknown, as American citizens we have a right to know of what ingredients it is composed. It must be composed of ingredients more diabolic than even those of Hecate's hell broth.

> Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
> Wool of bat, and tongue of dog, never made so fell a potion as this which we are required to take unexplained.

This, then, is what we wish to know first, how they discovered means by which truth is made falsehood, by which the gilded brass is made sterling gold. I rise to ask this question, and have it answered for the benefit of the American people.

There is another question which seems to me to be not impertinent here now; that is, with reference to the action of this honorable commission, and it is this: In the case of Oregon, a resolution was offered by Justice Field; as follows:

Whereas J. W. Watts, designated in certificate No. 1 as an elector of Oregon for President and Vice-President, on the day of the election, namely, the 7th day of November 1876, held an office of trust and profit under the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the said J. W. Watts was then ineligible to the office of elector within the express terms of the Constitution.

Now, with reference to the preamble to that resolution there is not one disputed fact. The commission of that postmaster was laid before that tribunal. The postmaster himself came and swore that on that 7th day of November, and until the 13th day of November, he held that office, and discharged its functions. So that the commission could not have found against the fact. Then what is the law?

That the said J. W. Watts was then ineligible to the office of elector within the express terms of the Constitution.

Now, the Constitution was before the commission. Its express terms are—

That no person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector.

The oath of that commission required that they should—

Without partiality examine and consider the questions submitted to the commission of which they were members, and a true judgment give thereon agreeably to the Constitution and the laws.

Then, having taken this oath, and the fact being undisputed that Watts was a postmaster on the 7th day of November, and the Constitution saying that no one holding such an office should be appointed, and their attention being called to that fact—what would be the crime that they would commit who, in the face of that oath, would find that that vote should be counted? That the resolution offered by Justice Field was not true! He who so voted must have rendered a false finding.

Mr. EAMES. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make a very brief statement, and I think upon that statement there will not be a member upon this floor who will make objection to the vote of Mr. Slater as one of the electoral votes of the State of Rhode Island. Under the law of that State, on the 7th of November last, the republican electors were chosen by about five thousand majority. Upon the counting of that vote certificates of election were issued by the governor to Mr. Arnold, Mr. Corliss, Mr. Fisher, and Mr. Dixon. Very soon after the election, and when it was known generally in the country that a single vote might determine the general result of the presidential election, it was also ascertained through the papers that some question would be raised as to Mr. Corliss's eligibility to the office of elector, because he held the office of centennial commissioner. And upon that, under the constitution of the State of Rhode Island, the governor saw fit to make certain inquiries of the supreme court, so as to be sure that the vote of Rhode Island would be cast as her people had determined and that there should be no possible doubt in the case. The question submitted to the supreme court was whether a person holding the office of centennial commissioner was holding an office of trust or profit under the Constitution of the United States and was therefore ineligible to the appointment of elector. Upon that question the majority of the court, there being one dissenting justice, decided that Mr. Corliss did hold an office of trust within the meaning of the Constitution, and that consequently he was ineligible to be appointed or disqualified from holding the office of elector.

There was another question also answered by the court, and it was where in a case of this kind, if Mr. Corliss was ineligible and disqualified from being appointed, was the power under the law of the State of Rhode Island to fill the vacancy so as to secure to that State the full number of votes to which it is entitled? In answering this other question as to where the power is, the court referred to the seventh section of the act of the State in relation to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, which is in the following words:

If any electors chosen as aforesaid, shall after their said election decline said office, or be prevented by any cause from serving therein, the other electors when assembled may fill the vacancy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, under the decision made by the supreme court of Rhode Island, inasmuch as they had decided that Mr. Corliss was ineligible, it was seen immediately and was so determined by the court that the other electors would have no power whatever to fill the vacancy. Having determined that, they referred again to another section in the law, which applies exactly to this case, and under which the Legislature exercised the power of appointing Mr. Slater in the place of Mr. Corliss. I refer now to the fifth section of the act under which the General Assembly of Rhode Island made the appointment of Mr. Slater. The language of that section is as follows:

If by reason of the votes being equally divided among any of the candidates or otherwise there shall not be an election of the number of electors to which the State may be entitled, the governor shall forthwith convene the General Assembly at Providence for choice of electors to fill such vacacies by an election in grand committee.

Now, the court having decided that Mr. Corliss was ineligible and that it was not in the power of the other electors to fill the vacancy, they found in this provision what covers this case entirely and under which the General Assembly was convened, and, as the papers read at the desk show, the election was made on the 1st of December of Mr. Slater.

Taking these sections in connection it is a matter of but very slight importance whether Mr. Corliss was eligible or ineligible. If he was eligible so that he could have been appointed and would have had a right to vote as one of the electoral college, the papers read at the desk show that Mr. Corliss declined to act. The certificate states the facts in relation to that. Having declined, if eligible to the office to which he was appointed, the papers show that the other electors having the power in a case of that kind elected Mr. Slater, so that if Mr. Corliss was eligible Mr. Slater stands in his place, inasmuch as Mr. Corliss declined to act. If Mr. Corliss was ineligible so that the other electors did not have the power to fill the vacancy, then under the other section of the act the General Assembly of Rhode Island have elected the same gentleman. In either event he is the true elector and his vote ought to be counted.

I do not desire to trouble the House further. It seems to me that there can be no doubt in the mind of any member of the House that the substitute should be adopted by the House in lieu of the resolution. It is like the resolution that has been unanimously adopted in the Senate. I cannot but feel that the distinguished gentlemen, Senators and Representatives, who have appended their names to this objection made to one of the votes of Rhode Island have acted under a misapprehension of the facts and the law of the State applicable to those facts.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It was not expected that the objection which received the signature of Senators and the Representatives upon this floor in this case would be sustained by this side of the House. There was no intention in offering the objection to raise any question in regard to the vote of Rhode Island excepting this, that as the democratic side of the House believe that the decision of the electoral commission in the case of Watts from the State of Oregon was not founded in law but was contrary to law, the propositions which grow out of the facts in the Rhode Island case would be presented to the minority of this House and to the majority of the Senate in order to see if they had the honesty and conscience and good faith to maintain the ground which they then took deliberately when they voted to sustain the decision of the commission in the Oregon case.

The case of Oregon is directly the reverse of the case of Rhode Island, save that in the one case the elector objected to was a postmaster and in the other case he was a centennial commissioner. While we on this side of the House are compelled under the law to abide by the decision, right or wrong, of the electoral commission, we had a desire to know whether our friends upon the republican side of the House would maintain their consistency, and would maintain and defend the integrity of the decision of the commission in the Oregon case. Therefore we have presented to them the proposition which properly emanates from the objections to the Rhode Island elector.

I voted for the electoral bill. I believed it to be constitutional. Further than that I believed that at that time some such measure was imperatively necessary to ward off violence and civil strife. It seemed to me that there was great and apparent danger to the Republic because of the difference of opinion which existed between the two Houses of Congress in regard to the proper authority to ascertain and count the electoral vote. I voted for the bill in good faith; I voted for it with an intention deliberately formed to carry out whatever decision might be fairly reached by the electoral commission to be organized under the bill.

I knew at that time as well as I now know what were the provisions of the bill. I was not deceived by a single line or a single word in the bill. I knew that under the provisions of the bill the commission would have the right to determine whether evidence would be admitted to settle the grave questions presented to them, but which were to be decided according to the equity and the right of the matter.

At the same time I had very reasonable assurances, founded upon well settled precedents of both Houses of Congress, adhered to and enforced by members of the republican party, by those of the republican party in the Senate and by many upon the republican side of the House, that the two Houses of Congress separately had the right to determine through their proper committees, whether in any State there was any irregularity of proceedings in the electoral college, and whether the vote of that State should be not counted because of any fraud or other cause.

And yet I must say that notwithstanding that assurance I was in a measure prepared for the decisions which have been rendered by the electoral commission. I entered upon my path of duty in sustaining that bill, because I believed that the dearest interests of the American people were at stake, and because I believed that an overwhelming majority, not only of my own party but of the republican party, all of whom were equally interested, sustained the bill and desired that it should be passed.

Now I am willing to carry out the decisions of the electoral commission to the extent, and only to the extent, that I feel myself in conscience and in honor bound to do.

Further, I believe that it is my duty to sustain these decisions only so far as I am prompted by reason, by my conscience, by justice, and by my deliberate opinion of what is the voice and the desire of the American people.

Now, I believe, in fact I know, that the great body of the people repudiates those decisions because of the denial of justice by the orders of the commission. They believe that the charges of fraud and bribery should have been inquired into, and therefore denounce as partisan and infamous the action of the commission. There is nothing in the law, there is nothing in the Constitution, there is nothing in my idea and my consciousness of duty that demands that I shall hasten the count in order to make it a finality; to render as it were a certainty decisions which I have learned to believe, from all the evidence I can gather from those who have spoken in regard to the action of that commission, are an outrage on law and subversive of truth and justice. I do not recognize any duty demanded of me by honor or consistency to lend my aid to seat in the presidential chair for the next four years a man whose only title will be that of fraud, a man whose right to sit there will never be consented to by the American people only so far as strict law binds them to submit to this executive usurpation. The path of duty and honor is in the other direction.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee.) The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The gentleman from Maryland, [Mr O'BRIEN,] although he was one of the objectors, acknowledges that he does not expect his objection to be sustained by the House. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the debate now close and the vote be taken.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I will have to object, for the reason that there are names on the list of gentlemen who have as much right to be heard as I have.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Then if the debate is to continue I desire to say a few words.

Mr. PAGE. I hope not.

Mr. TUCKER. I object.

Many MEMBERS. Let us have a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The consistency of the minority has been arraigned in that we have voted to count the vote of the elector from Pennsylvania which was objected to. I desire to call the attention of this House to the fact that there was no competent evidence before this House to sustain the objection in that case.

No evidence of the ineligibility of Daniel J. Morrell was ever reported to this House from its committees. Whatever may have been testified to before any committee taking testimony is still under their charge and such secrecy as attends committee proceedings, and has never been put in possession of the House. The unofficial statement of unauthorized persons cannot give the House cognizance of the committee's doings, or make it evidence before the House by attaching it to objections made to counting a vote.

The evidence that accompanied the objections as read to the House did not constitute legal evidence if it had been laid before the House by a report from the committee before whom it had been taken, and would not be sustained by any court. The only competent evidence to show that Daniel J. Morrell was a commissioner would be the commission of the President of the United States. The RECORD of Saturday's proceedings simply shows, on page 35, the appointment by the governor, unaccompanied by any commission from the President. Was there any evidence before this House that Daniel J. Morrell held an office under the United States? The record of the House proceedings does not show that any such evidence to sustain that objection was ever before it.

Mr. STENGER. Will the gentleman allow me to say that among the original papers accompanying the objection he will find a copy of the President's own appointment.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I say there has not been read, at least in my hearing, (and I am informed by the Clerk that he read the original of the papers published in the RECORD,) any evidence of his appointment which would sustain the objection, and no report of any committee authorized to take testimony has submitted to the House any evidence of Mr. Morrell's ineligibility. I say that they are not here before the House. They may be on the files in the committee-room, but they have not been made a part of the official record of the House; and if you attempt to throw out the vote of the State of Pennsylvania on a technicality, we can reply that you have not technically made out your case, if at this count the House had the right to reject electoral votes for the alleged disqualification of persons composing the electoral college of a State, which I deny.

Then in regard to Oregon the language of the statute of that State is entirely different from the statute of Rhode Island. In the one case the authority of the electors to appoint is confined to two cases; one when there is a declination, and the other when there is a refusal to serve for any cause. The language of the Oregon statute is "if there shall be a vacancy in the office;" and I ask gentlemen to show that an office created by United States law is not vacant when it has not been filled. The decision of the court would be entirely different in the two cases; and there is no inconsistency on this side of the House in voting in the Rhode Island case to count the vote of the elector appointed by the Legislature and heretofore voting to sustain the appointment made by the electors in Oregon to fill the office, which was vacant and which under the statute of Oregon the electors were authorized to fill. There is no analogy between the two cases; there is no inconsistency in our votes.

There are cases in other States where democratic electors have been in like manner ineligible; but I believe that the statutes should be interpreted liberally for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the people and not for the purpose of defeating it on technicalities.

Mr. TUCKER. Does the gentleman say that there was no evidence of a commission in the Pennsylvania case?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I say that none has been read within my hearing; and I am told by the Clerk that the record here shows all the papers that have been presented to this House.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. I read as part of my speech the commission; and it was attached with all the seals and ribbons to the objections made in the case of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHARD, of Illinois. Well, the gentleman himself may have tried to fill out the lack of testimony.

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir, I filled out nothing that was not in the record.

Mr. STENGER. It is in the record itself.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The record shows the seal of the Secretary of State, attesting that the papers which he sends are genuine copies of papers on file: and one of the papers on file is the appointment by the governor in a letter addressed to the President of the United States. But that record of the House proceedings does not show anywhere a commission.

Mr. TUCKER. If the gentleman will look at page 13 of the RECORD of yesterday, he will find the commission:

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting: I certify, &c.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I do not yield further. The gentleman is reading from papers presented to the Senate, not papers presented to the House.

Mr. TUCKER. Well, sir, I state on my own personal authority that the certificate of the Secretary of State and a copy of the commission of the President were by me attached to the objection that was presented to this House.

Several MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I only state what the RECORD shows to have been before the House and what was actually read here. Whatever may have been presented to the Senate——

Mr. TUCKER. I say that this commission was attached to the objection, and was presented here.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. But, Mr. Speaker, it is claimed that there is an inconsistency, and that the action of the commission has been improper because the members should have gone into a judicial investigation or an investigation with regard to the legality of the votes and of the action of the returning board. Reference has been made to the action of Congress in 1800, when a bill on this subject was before Congress; and John Marshall, the leader in that Federal Congress, has been referred to as favoring action by Congress to go behind the action of the duly constituted returning officers of a State—to go behind the action of State authorities. Let me say in reply, that Federalist as John Marshall was, believing in an extent of power on the part of the Federal Government far exceeding that believed in by the democratic party of that day, if not of the present day, he did not pretend to go behind the action of the returning boards or of the executive authorities of a State to revise or to question the votes that had been cast by the State in the choice of electors. And the text of that bill sustains the action of the commission. That bill, of 1800, which passed both Houses, although not in the same form, contained a provision which was indorsed by each House sustaining the action of a majority of the commission.

The bill as it passed the Senate had this provision in section 8:

Provided always, That no petition or exception shall be granted or allowed by the grand committee which shall have for its object to draw into question the number of votes on which any elector in any of the States shall have been appointed.

That bill was referred in the House to a committee of which John Marshall was chairman, and he reported back a substitute which proposed a joint committee of four members from each House to have power "to examine into all disputes relative to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, other than such as relate to the number of votes by which the electors may have been appointed." The electoral commission law of this session was framed from these bills and incorporates many of their details. The right, then, to go behind the returns of the State authorities was expressly denied, and in the law of this session was nowhere asserted.

Mr. CARR. Mr. Speaker, as the bill under which we are proceding gives the republican Senate full and conclusive power to count this vote over the rightful objections of this House, and as the recent history of that body assures us they will count it as cast, without regard to its legal status, it is quite useless for us here to enter into an earnest examination of the subtle questions presented by the objections. Under the operation of this feature of that law this House of Representatives, once regarded as the House of Commons of America, is now reduced to nothingness, and the people's Representatives left only with the power to fret over that which they are rendered powerless to prevent.

In defiance of the assertions made in and out of Congress that the adoption of and the proceedings under the now notorious electoral bill are "the grandest spectacle of modern days," it at all times has presented itself to me as a mammoth farce, a stupendous after-piece which possesses more of the ludicrous than any ever presented from smaller stages and by a less distinguished stock company. It needs only the fertile pen of a Boucicault to bring out in full relief its incongruities, inconsistencies, and downright buffooneries, that all may recognize it as the very burlesque I have conceived it to be.

The character-drawing were safer and better done by other hands than mine, because I am necessarily restrained by parliamentary law which will preclude that bold touch essential to their "loudness;" yet I cannot restrain the temptation of "laying in the ground colors" as a foundation for the pencil of some future American artist who shall aspire to immortality.

In the "grande entrée" of the play two immense troupes enter from opposite sides of the arena, each intent upon one object, and that object being the capture of the ringmaster. Here follows a vast amount of fine maneuvering and cunning pantomime at the close of which each is seen to select the very same device to secure the end. The sly winks, knowing nudges, wise grimaces, and secret congratulations on each side, when it was mutually believed the other had been outwitted and "sold," are truly amusing; but this grows into an irresistible laughter, doubly intensified when contrasted with the chagrin, mortification, and downright despair which settle all over the discomfited party when they discover how beautifully they were taken in by their own "sell."

The side-splitting by-play of the opening scene was that made by the "leading gentlemen" of the unsuccessful troupe, who arranged all the machinery for success upon the theory that seven of their number outnumbered eight of the other. The very development of the error was amusing, but the distorted features, the howls of utter despair, the expression of blank astonishment which flashed like a shadow over their countenances when they realized their deficient knowledge of the simple rules of arithmetic and were brought to a consciousness of their blunder, are overwhelming.

I have observed in the columns of our daily journals upon one side of a patent-medicine advertisement the picture of a long, lean, and woe-begone individual, and upon the other side the likeness of one who is hale, hearty, and with a face all aglow with happiness. Under the first of these were seen the significant words, "Before taking," and under the other the legend, "After taking." Reverse the locality of these titles and you have an admirable portraiture of the "leading gentlemen" who engaged in the farce to which I have alluded.

Mark the ludicrous contrast in these gentlemen before and after taking the alluring, but nauseating, electoral pill.

The fine-looking and cultivated gentleman from the mother of Presidents, Virginia, [Mr. WALKER,] "before taking" the pill, soared into poetry, and, aglow with sudden pleasure, quoted Shakespeare. Said he:

> Now is the winter of our discontent,
> Made glorious summer by this son of York,
> And all the clouds that lowered upon our house
> In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.

See and hear him "after taking:"

I am one of those who do not agree with the decision of this commission. I am rejoiced that these objections were presented here, because I want the democratic party in this House, by their votes, to enter their solemn protest against the consummation of this outrage under mere legal fictions.

The hopeful gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] swells to mighty proportions "before taking," and asserts:

I have confidence that the judges selected, as well as the members of the two Houses that may be joined with them, will honestly and faithfully do their duty, not only to their party but to their conscience, their country, and their God!

See how suddenly he comes down to common size and mother-earth "after taking," when he groans:

A more infamous judgment was never made in the history of American jurisprudence!

The patriotic gentleman from the "prostrate" State of Louisiana [Mr. LEVY] walked in the bright hues of morning "before taking," and drew us a glowing scene of the future. Said he:

I believe that the public good will be promoted, quiet and good feeling restored, civil discord avoided, and fraternal harmony established by the passage of this bill.

Presto, change. As the pill goes down and the nauseated bowels come up, between the paroxysms he moans:

As a representative of Louisiana I should be recreant to my duty and faithless to a sacred trust if I failed to raise my voice in earnest protest against the action of the majority of the electoral commission, which has violated the majority of the State, outraged right and justice, and substituted falsity and fraud for the true voice of the people.

The distinguished member from the proud old Commonwealth of Kentucky, [Mr. WATTERSON,] who so readily assumes the chameleon hues of the hour, and who on the historic 8th of January, now doubly renowned, startled the radicals and himself by announcing that on the 4th of March there would be present at the National Capitol, to insure and enforce the claims of certain gentlemen to Cabinet positions one hundred thousand stern-visaged men in buckram, and who afterward and, admitting he had been engaged in a game of "brag," declared that for the purposes of a fight;

> Threw down his target and his plaid;

The democratic party is as one who has his right arm tied behind him. If forced into civil war it would proceed under the greatest disadvantages.

Then "before taking" and gathering his robes about him, as the Roman senator was wont to draw his toga more gracefully to his shoulders when about to assume his native dignity, he majestically said:

I shall not undertake to add to the law of the case. It seems to me that an eminent jurist in the Senate [Mr. EDMUNDS, a republican] has made it perfectly clear that this bill is constitutional. I accept and adopt his views without reservation.

Having thus trusted and confided in the song of the republican siren "before taking," hear him "after taking:"

We were duped by false pretenses into a snare.

The great Senator from the little State of Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] to induce us to support the measure which has resulted in making him a high commissioner, by which he is enabled to shed still greater luster over the long line of his descent, "before taking" assured us that—will approach it in a spirit worthy of the functions which they are to perform.

They—

The commissioners—

But "after taking," amid the gripes and spasms of the colic, he moaned:

As a member of the electoral commission I have given all that I could give of earnest, patriotic, steady labor and devotion to secure the just execution of the law. My efforts and my labors have been crowned only by failure. Deep, indeed, is my sorrow and poignant my disappointment.

But the grandiloquent of the farce yet remains to be noticed. This play of "American Politics" would be all incomplete, even with the profuse display of the "spread-eagle" already alluded to, unless the Star-spangled Banner "continued to wave" prominent above all the grandeur of the occasion. To produce this indispensable scenic effect the learned gentleman from the Empire State of New York [Mr. FIELD,] is appropriately detailed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. PAYNE] who, acting as the "great medicine man," is administering the pill.

Standing to the "right in front" of the grand pageant, six foot two in his boots, full of the importance of the occasion, drawing his voice down to the pathetic tone, and pointing to the ten-foot flag-staff above, while a whole nation held its breath in anxious suspense, he said:

There it floated all through the night watches, till the daylight came, and as the sun rose over the snow, lighting up the Capitol from basement to dome, the flag was furled, and I knew the day was won.

The effect was electrical, and the world waited with bated breath for him to add, who had won the day. For fourteen long, dreary days they held their gasping breath, to know who had won, and still the eloquent gentleman stood there with his finger pointing to the flag, and the words still hanging upon his lips, "the day was won." Then his lips parted, and "after taking" he added:

The decision of this commission is entitled to no respect. It is as unsound in morals as it is unfounded in law. If the Presidency is thus to be won, the spectacle will be more injurious to our good name and more corrupting to our people than all the peculations, robbery, and frauds of all our history.

This is what had "won the day."

"Before taking" the renowned gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] who has since been made a member of the great national returning board, and has had the honor of having his photo hawked about the streets between those of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] told the anxious, toiling millions that the commisson—

Will afford a fair and honest and just solution of the vexed question. Then with Tilden in the Presidency and reform and economy in the Government, our country will start on the road to prosperity and happiness.

This gentleman has been provokingly silent "since taking," and the country is anxious for him now to announce just when Tilden will be in the Presidency and the country start on that tramp for prosperity and happiness.

Remarks from him are now in order.

In truth, "before taking" nearly all democrats said it was a "good thing," but "after taking" they do not want any of it in theirs.

While these splendid "end-men" are thus affording a mine of amusement for the "crowd," we must not by any means overlook the three grotesque figures in the center, dressed in the strange admixture of the "ermine" and the "caps and bells," and who are represented as wallowing in the mire of partisan mud, while above is thrown by a strong calcium light the dazzling eulogy: "THE JUDGES WHO WILL SOAR ABOVE PARTY." Following this in quick succession, and by a process of transfiguration by which the last blends into and submerges the first, is seen a conglomeration of abuses and condemnations; while all around are rising dense volumes of dark clouds, so typical of the regrets of all good men that our supreme judges should have been made to play the part of clowns in this stupendous farce that so disgraces American politics.

Yet the most ludicrous feature of the farce very properly comes in at the tail-end of the play and just as the curtain drops behind the footlights, amid the shouts of the victors and disgust of the vanquished.

Here we behold the party of "great moral ideas," the party possessing all the "intelligence" which even the generous Boston has genially shed abroad upon the land, and actuated by "high and noble purposes," led by that paragon of wisdom and virtue so pathetically portrayed a few days since by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] and for which he deserves and no doubt will be rewarded with a lucrative foreign mission. I say this grand party of place-hunters, led by the "great unknown," is seen advancing to the front, trampling in triumph over the three prostrate and purloined States of South Carolina, Louisiana, and Florida, and with a grand flourish of trumpets is discovered riding into the Executive Mansion astride of Cronin's nose.

[During the delivery of the above speech, it was frequently interrupted with laughter. The ten minutes expired before the speech was finished and Mr. LANE objected to Mr. CARR'S going on. The objection was afterward withdrawn, and by unanimous consent leave was granted for the printing of the portion not delivered.]

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the bill under which the electoral count is now proceeding and by virtue of which the electoral commission now exists. That it was designed as a trap to ensnare or a pit to take in any party I was not aware at any time before I voted for it. Of this fact I have been apprised by gentlemen of the republican party since the count has commenced under it. I voted for it, against my own judgment, out of deference to the recognized leaders of the democratic party, who said it was a measure desired by the conservative leaders of the republican party to suppress the revolutionary element in that party.

The conservative members of the republican party acknowledged after the election that Mr. Tilden was elected, but their radical brethren were determined at all hazards, at the expense of the peace of the country, to refuse to recognize Mr. Tilden's authority as President and to set up Mr. Hayes in opposition. In other words the radical republicans were determined to have a dual administration, which could only result in disorder, national disintegration, and bloodshed. With such dire prospects staring them in the face, the conservative republicans of the CONKLING stripe appealed to that gentleman to join hands with the democracy in framing legislation that would awe the revolutionary members of their party into submission. This act to provide for and regulate the counting of electoral votes for President and Vice-President is the child of that union. And faithfully carried out and observed, would not this act, this legislation, make these revolutionists submissive.

If the evidence of how the votes were cast in Florida and Louisiana in favor of Tilden and Hendricks, and how republican forgers and corruptionists manipulated these votes so as to change large majorities from Tilden and Hendricks to large majorities for Hayes and Wheeler, were admitted, the revolutionary element of the republican party, desperate and unscrupulous though they be, would not dare to dispute the authority of Mr. Tilden as President. This act designed the admission of that evidence; the republican members of the committee who participated in framing the act acquiesced in the democratic claim to admit evidence under it; and in the expectation that all evidence necessary to show for which candidate majorities were cast in Louisiana, Florida, and other disputed States would be admitted by the commission constituted by the bill, it became a law, principally by democratic votes; and in the same expectation it was opposed by a large republican vote in each House. To admit such evidence is the spirit and letter of this act, but the republican majority in the commission refused to carry out the act according to this letter and spirit. And now, in the face of frauds most glaring and a law disregarded—all committed and done to make Rutherford B. Hayes the Executive of this Government for four years—democrats arise in their places in this House and indulge in platitudes about honor and good faith. And very singular to say, some of the men most prominent on this floor and in caucus on the democratic side in advocating a speedy count and quick announcement that Hayes is elected are men whose names republican journals speak of in connection with Cabinet and other appointments under Mr. Hayes's administration, and some of them are men whose public utterances cost Tilden and Hendricks the loss of more votes on the 7th of last November than resulted to them from any other cause.

Hayes cannot sit in the chair of Washington without the aid of democrats of this House. He should not sit there by that aid if we democrats listen to the voice of those who sent us here.

We passed this law without consulting them. To press on under it when it is being perverted, when it is being used as a cloak for fraud by the republican party, is not only a betrayal of our constituents, but it is a betrayal of the principles they have so nobly battled for.

Hayes in the presidential chair through fraud, forgery, and corruption, and against the express will of the people—the only way in which he can get there—is the worst blow of all the terrible blows given to liberty by the republican party.

No man should be installed President who was not elected as the Constitution and laws prescribe; no man can be nor is President unless so elected; and, as far as Hayes is concerned, the office is vacant, and if no law now exists to provide for filling such a vacancy it is the duty of this House and the Senate to forthwith enact such a law. In opposition to the appeals made by the democratic members from New York [Mr. HEWITT] and from Kentucky, [Mr. BOONE,] and a few others, to press on with the count that Hayes may be installed President, I would say to the democrats of this House, pass immediately a law for a new election, and aid not the revolutionary element of the republican party in their perversion of law to place a usurper in the presidential chair.

Leave the installation of Hayes to that chair, if he is to be placed there, to the parties who expect to bask in the sunshine of his patronage and power, and to the manipulations of railway, bank, and corporate capitalists, who to-day are the only parties clamorous to have him declared President.

The men who made this Republic thought it no trifle to have in the presidential chair one not elected, as is manifest from the elaborate provisions they inserted in the Constitution in relation to the election of a President, and it is not the memory of the men who prevented Aaron Burr from attaining the Presidency through chicanery and against the will of the majority of the people that to-day is not respected, but, on the contrary, it is the memory of him that is not respected. I utter it in no spirit of prophecy, but because to me it is a self-evident proposition, that the democrat who by his vote and voice in Congress aids the fraudulent schemes of Hayes will before six months shall have passed by regret the act unless he shall ere that time have enrolled himself among the satellites of Hayes. We are told that Hayes will, if proclaimed President, recognize the Nicholls government in Louisiana. Yes, and we were told that the republican eight on the joint commission would admit evidence to show the frauds of the Wells returning board in canvassing the votes of that State. Hayes knows that Packard's claim to the governorship of that State is of equal validity to his own claim to the Presidency of the United States, and he will not be in a hurry to take away the propping from beneath his own pretensions. Let not democrats who cry "on with the count" lay the flattering unction to their souls that there is nothing in the future for them but to enjoy office, honor, and to bask in the sunlight of the smiles and praise of railroad, bank, and corporation capitalists and their subsidized claqueurs. If there is to be a dies iræ, a judgment day for their republican friends, as they affect to believe, for doing work in which they are participating, it would be only natural that a slice of that day of judgment should be allotted to them.

I cannot express in words my indignation at the unrepublican and unfair conduct of the majority of the republican party, and especially of their members on the joint commission. I shall always feel that the true name in full of R. B. Hayes is Returning Board Hayes; that the true name in full of W. A. Wheeler is Wells Anderson Wheeler, and associating these persons with these names will not beget much respect and veneration with me, and I think with very many, for them, no matter what stations they may fill.

Of one republican Senator and one republican Representative on that commission some fairness was expected. They have disappointed that expectation. The heat of partisanship has warped their judgments. Of Miller, Strong, and Bradley not only was fairness and impartiality expected, but no presumption ran against that expectation. They too have fallen beneath the Juggernaut of partisanship.

The Florida, Louisiana, and Oregon decisions will stand as another tower of Babel, reared to circumvent, not only the express will of a large majority of the American people, but also the eternal principles of justice and right.

The projectors of the first Babel and their work have disappeared from the memory of man and the face of earth, and are recalled only to be ridiculed and despised, and so it will be, and even now is, with the three I have named. Their usefulness is gone, their action is not above suspicion. In trying to cloak the rascalities of Wells, Anderson, and their associates, and to elevate Hayes to the Presidency by fraud, they have pulled themselves down to a plane on which judges cannot stand and command the respect of the people.

But of what use is it to waste indignation and words on dead men? It is to live men I would and do address myself. I ask again why will any portion of the democratic party ally themselves to men who seek to subvert our Constitution and Republic?

No member of the democratic party can certainly be intimidated by radical republican frothings about the Army. No democrat can possibly think that the republican party would attempt to count Hayes in and install him as President if this House should refuse to join in that count, and that if they should so attempt they could effect anything. The wicked flee when no man pursueth, and our radical republican brethren, not more courageous than ordinary mortals, in a righteous cause would not be too eager to invoke war and strife because the Louisiana returning board cannot dictate who shall be President after the 4th of March next. To me the path of duty is plain and clear.

Republican finesse, duplicity, and cunning have so obscured the just claims of Mr. Tilden to the Presidency as to give pretext to that party to hamper and embarrass his administration, and to deny with some plausibility his right to exercise the duties of that office. If he be not allowed to assume that office on the 4th of March next, then there will thenceforth be a vacancy, and if there be no provision to fill that vacancy we should legislate to that end, and we should also legislate to have as soon as possible another election for President and Vice-President, for this is the only manner in which peace and rest can be brought to the country. No man with a tainted claim to the Presidency, such as is Mr. Hayes's, could quiet the public pulse or restore business to its wonted channels. Conservative republicans know this, and I believe if the democrats of this House stop the farce of counting and pass the bills I have mentioned they will have the co-operation of enough republicans in the Senate to pass the bills in that body also. If the radical republicans refuse to unite in such legislation the responsibility will rest with them, and I believe the conservatives of that party, rather than have an interregnum, will say that Tilden was justly elected and should be inaugurated, and should they so say he will be inaugurated and act as President for the next four years.

Mr. BALLOU. Mr. Speaker, my colleague has made so clear a statement as to the condition of the electoral vote of Rhode island objected to that it is not necessary perhaps for me to say anything in addition.

It was a remark of Judge Story that the best law was common sense, and if there was any State in this Union which was disposed and took every possible means to be technically legal and absolutely strict in relation to her electoral vote it was the State of Rhode Island.

It is true there was some doubt concerning one of the electors; but Governor Lippitt immediately sought the opinion of the supreme court, and that court responding that there was some doubt, he, on the reception of that opinion, called the Legislature together and they elected William S. Slater as an elector. Mr. Corliss resigned, and then the electors themselves elected William S. Slater, the same man who had been previously elected by the Legislature, to fill the vacancy.

Now, after the State of Rhode Island has chosen her electors by a majority of 5,000 she stands here to-day and asks, as she has the right to demand, that her electoral vote shall be counted for Hayes and Wheeler. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I ask for a vote on the pending resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHITE. I waive any right I may have to be heard on this question, and call for a vote.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move the House do now proceed to vote on the pending question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read first the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] and next the substitute offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. EAMES.]

The CLERK. Mr. O'BRIEN'S resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of William S. Slater as elector for the State of Rhode Island should not be counted, because said Slater was not appointed or elected elector for said State in such manner as its Legislature had directed.

Mr. EAMES'S substitute is as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of William S. Slater, as the elector for the State of Rhode Island be counted, the objections thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The substitute was agreed to; and then the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the Senate be notified of the action of the House in reference to the electoral vote of the State of Rhode Island, objected to, and that the House is now ready to meet the Senate in joint meeting and continue the count of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President.

Mr. KNOTT. I move as a substitute for that the following. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I understood a motion was made that the Senate be notified of the decision, and that this House is now ready to meet that body in joint session. I offer what I send up to the Clerk's desk as a substitute for that motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Clerk of this House notify the Senate of the decision of the House in the case of the State of Rhode Island, and that the House of Representatives will meet the Senate in this Hall at ten o'clock to-morrow morning to proceed with the counting of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The question on the substitute was submitted to the House.

Mr. MCCRARY. I rise to a point of order. The bill under which we are acting provides in the conclusion of the first section that when the two Houses have voted they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the questions submitted.

Mr. LANE. The point of order comes too late. The House has divided and the question has been taken for and against.

Mr. WALLING. The House has divided on the amendment, and it is too late to make objection now. The vote was taken before the objection was raised.

Mr. MCCRARY. I refer to the clause of the first section that when the two Houses have voted they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the questions submitted. That is all that can be done. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is equivalent to a motion for another recess, which is not in order under another provision of the electoral bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman state that he rose in time?

Mr. MCCRARY. I did rise in time, and made a zealous effort to be heard by the Chair in objection to the reception of the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky, but the confusion was so great that I could not be heard.

Mr. WALLING. I rise to a point of order, that the vote was taken on both sides before the gentleman rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought so.

Mr. CLYMER. I chanced to be on this side of the House near the gentleman from Iowa, and heard his objection.

Mr. OLIVER. I rose and addressed the Chair, making the same point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RUSK. I made objection and did not withdraw it.

Mr. HANCOCK. I also rose at the same time and tried to make myself heard and think I would have been if there had not been so much confusion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair of course accepts the statement of gentlemen, that they rose in time to make objection.

Mr. CONGER. I rose and objected in my place to that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the law does bear the construction which the gentleman from Iowa puts upon it, that when the two Houses have voted they shall immediately again meet. The Senate has notified the House of its action in the case of the Rhode Island elector and that it is ready to meet this House in joint meeting. The House has voted on the same question, and the only remaining duty under the law is for the two Houses to meet immediately. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is therefore ruled out.

The motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, was then adopted.

At six o'clock p. m. the Doorkeeper announced its Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall preceded by its Sergeant-at-Arms and headed by its President pro tempore and its Secretary, the members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate took his seat as Presiding Officer of the joint meeting of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying a chair upon his left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint meeting of Congress for counting the electoral vote resumes its session. The two Houses having separately determined upon the objection to the certificate from the State of Rhode Island, the Secretary of the Senate will read the resolution adopted by the Senate.

The Secretary of the Senate read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of William S. Slater be counted with the other votes of the electors of Rhode Island, notwithstanding the objections made thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House of Representatives will now read the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives read the resolution adopted by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of William S. Slater, as an elector of the State of Rhode Island, be counted, the objections to the contrary thereto notwithstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The two Houses having concurred in an affirmative vote not to reject the vote of Rhode Island, that vote will be counted. The tellers will announce the vote of Rhode Island.

Mr. STONE, (one of the tellers.) The State of Rhode Island casts four votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President, and four votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice-President of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Having opened the certificate from the State of South Carolina, received by messenger, the Chair hands it to the tellers to be read in the presence and hearing of the two Houses. The Chair also hands to the tellers the corresponding certificate received by mail.

Senator ALLISON (one of the tellers) read the certificate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Another certificate from the State of South Carolina has been received by messenger and also by mail. The Chair hands it to the tellers to be read in the presence and hearing of the two Houses.

Mr. STONE (one of the tellers) read the certificates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there objections to the certificates from the State of South Carolina?

Mr. COCHRANE. On behalf of the Senators and Representatives whose names are thereto attached, I submit the following objections to the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes of the State of South Carolina cast by C. C. Bowen and others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary of the Senate will read the objections.

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

The undersigned, Senators of the United States and Members of the House of Representatives, object to the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes of the State of South Carolina cast by C. C. Bowen, D. Winsmith, T. B. Johnson, Timothy Hurley, W. B. Nash, Wilson Cook, W. B. Meyers, on the following grounds:

I.

For that no legal election was held in the State of South Carolina for presidential electors, the General Assembly of that State not having provided, as required by article 8, section 3, of the constitution thereof, for the registration of persons entitled to vote, without which registration no valid or legal election could be held.

II.

For that there was not existing in the State of South Carolina on the 1st day of January, 1876, nor at any time thereafter up to and including the 10th day of December, 1876, a republican form of government such as is guaranteed by the Constitution to every State in the Union.

III.

For that the Federal Government prior to and during the election on the 7th day of November, 1876, without authority of law, stationed in various parts of the said State of South Carolina at or near the polling-places detachments of the Army of the United States, by whose presence the full exercise of the right of suffrage was prevented and by reason whereof no legal or free election was or could be had.

IV.

For that at the several polling-places in the said State there were stationed deputy marshals of the United States, appointed under the provisions of sections 2021 and 2022 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provisions were unconstitutional and void. That the said deputy marshals, exceeding over one thousand in number, by their unlawful and arbitrary action in obedience to the improper and illegal instructions received by them from the Department of Justice, so interfered with the full and free exercise of the right of suffrage by the duly qualified voters of the said State of South Carolina that a fair election could not be and was not held in the said State of South Carolina on the said 7th day of November, 1876.

V.

For that there was not from the 1st day of January, 1876, up to and including the 10th day of December, 1876, at any time, a State government in the State of South Carolina, except a pretended government set up in violation of law and of the Constitution of the United States by Federal authority and sustained by Federal troops.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the certificates from the State of South Carolina?

Senator PATTERSON. I submit, on behalf of the Senators and Representatives whose names are attached thereto, the following objections to the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes of South Carolina cast by Theodore G. Barker and others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House will read the objections.

The Clerk read the objections as follows:

The undersigned Senators and members of the House of Representatives of the United States object to the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes of the State of South Carolina, cast by Theodore G. Barker, Samuel McGowan, John W. Harrington, John I. Ingram, William Wallace, John B. Erwin, and Robert Aldrich, and by each of them, and to the list of votes by them and each of them signed and certified as given for President of the United States and for Vice-President of the United States, for the following reasons:

I.

The said Theodore G. Barker, Samuel McGowan, John W. Harrington, John I. Ingram, William Wallace, John B. Erwin, and Robert Aldrich were not, nor was either of them, appointed an elector of President and Vice-President of the United States for the State of South Carolina.

II.

The said papers have not annexed to them a certificate of the governor of South Carolina as required to be made and annexed by sections 136 and 138 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

III.

The said papers have not annexed to them a list of the names of the said Theodore G. Barker, Samuel McGowan, John W. Harrington, John I. Ingram, William Wallace, John B. Erwin, and Robert Aldrich as electors, to which the seal of the State of South Carolina was affixed by the secretary of state, and signed by the governor and secretary as required by the general laws of South Carolina.

IV.

For that C. C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnston, Timothy Hurley, William B. Nash, Wilson Cook, and William F. Myers were duly appointed electors of President and Vice-President of the United States for the State of South Carolina, and as such electors, at the time and place prescribed by law, cast their votes for Rutherford B. Hayes for President of the United States and for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States, and the lists of votes signed, certified, and transmitted by such electors to the President of the Senate are the only true and lawful lists of votes for President and Vice-President of the United States.

V.

That the said C. C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnston, Timothy Hurley, William B. Nash, Wilson Cook, and William F. Myers received the highest number of all the votes cast for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States by the qualified voters of the State of South Carolina at the election held in said State on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, and the proper officers of the State of South Carolina duly canvassed said votes, and made and certified according to law and under the great seal of the State of South Carolina, and delivered to said C. C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnston, Timothy Hurley, William B. Nash, Wilson Cook, and William F. Myers lists of the electors of President and Vice-President of the United States elected by the qualified voters of said State at said election, and showing that said C. C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnston, Timothy Hurley, William B. Nash, Wilson Cook, and William F. Myers were the persons having the highest number of votes of said qualified voters at such election and were elected, which certificate is dated the 6th day of December A. D. 1876, and which has been read before the two Houses of Congress, by reason of all which said Bowen, Winsmith, Johnston, Hurley, Nash, Cook, and Myers were the lawful electors of President and Vice-President of the United States for the State of South Carolina.

VI.

That the lists of votes cast by the said C. C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnston, Timothy Hurley, William B. Nash, Wilson Cook, and William F. Myers for President of the United States and for Vice-President of the United States have annexed to them a certificate of the governor of the State of South Carolina, required to be made by sections 136 and 138 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

VII.

That said lists of votes have annexed to them a list of the names of the said C. C. Bowen, John Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnston, Timothy Hurley, William B. Nash, Wilson Cook, and William F. Myers as electors, to which the seal of the State of South Carolina was affixed by the secretary of state, and signed by the governor and secretary as required by the general laws of South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the certificates of the State of South Carolina?

There were no further objections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The certificates objected to, together with the objections, will be submitted to the commission for its judgment and decision. The Senate will now retire to its Chamber.

The Senate accordingly retired to its Chamber.

Mr. WALLING. I move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion the Chair desires to lay certain matters before the House.

EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATING COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a statement from the Sergeant-at-Arms of expenses of investigating committees of the House, with accompanying vouchers; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the statement of the Sergeant-at-Arms be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want the vouchers to be also printed?

Mr. CONGER. No, sir.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

OFFICE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1877.

To the House of Representatives:

As required by law I herewith submit a statement of money paid out for expenditures, with accompanying vouchers of the committees of the House to investigate the recent elections for President and Vice-President of the United States in the States of South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana, and in the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, and Philadelphia, as follows, to wit:

South Carolina	$14,520 06
Florida	10,679 82
Louisiana	33,242 00
New York, &c	4,656 08
Total	63,097 96

JOHN G. THOMPSON,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MILLIKEN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for the remainder of the session, on account of important business.

THEODORE B. HOOK.

On motion of Mr. BAGBY, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Theodore B. Hook, there being no adverse report thereon.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSOURI RIVER.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of chief engineer on the improvement of the Missouri River opposite Nebraska City; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ARMS, ETC., FURNISHED BY THE STATES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report on the bill (H. R. No. 449) for the relief of States for arms and ordnance stores furnished the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REMOVAL OF POST AT FORT GARLAND.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting recommendation of an appropriation of $40,000 for the removal of post of Fort Garland; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JOHN W. DODD & CO.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the chief of ordnance on bill for the relief of John W. Dodd & Co., of Indianapolis; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

GEORGE D. WISE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of Quartermaster-General in case of George D. Wise, late captain and assistant quartermaster western gunboat flotilla; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

METRIC SYSTEM OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 25, 1877, information as to the feasibility of substituting the metric system of weights and measures in the assessment and collection of duties in the customs service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

MILITARY ROAD IN ARIZONA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report on military road between Camp Verd and Sunset crossing, in Arizona; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of contingent expenses of the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, as directed by section 193 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask unanimous consent for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HOPKINS,] who is too unwell to be here to-day, to have printed in the RECORD as a part of the debate some remarks touching the Pennsylvania electoral question.

There was no objection and the leave was granted.

HOMESTEAD LAW.

Mr. STANTON, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of 272 citizens of Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, asking for the passage of the bill introduced by Hon. N. P. BANKS at the last session to extend the provision of the homestead act, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The petition is as follows:

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We the undersigned laboring men, mechanics, and citizens of the United States, beg leave to call your attention to the terrible sufferings of our fellow-citizens in the mining, manufacturing, and thickly populated districts of the country, growing out of the want of employment and the means of subsistence. Year after year, since 1865, the demand and price for labor have steadily diminished, until to-day there is an army of 2,000,000 of men unemployed in the country, who, with their families, are destitute of the means of subsistence, unable to obtain work at any price, perishing of cold, wasting away of hunger and disease, and barely subsisting on a charity which the paralyzed condition of the business of the country can but illy afford. The condition of these poor men and their families may be imagined but cannot be described. The appalling pictures of destitution among the laboring classes which the daily press presents are, we assure you, not overdrawn. Thousands are actually starving to death and perishing of cold, while the thieves, murderers, and all other criminals are justly given protection from both cold and hunger, and, as a natural consequence, the people are becoming terribly demoralized. Crime is fearfully on the increase. The jails and almshouses are full to overflowing, while begging, heretofore unknown among us, is being reduced to a science. Sheriffs, constables, policemen, and police justices are the only ones among us who do a thriving business.

The condition of affairs may be briefly summed up as follows: Those men and women now vainly seeking work must be supported as honest laborers, contributing to the wealth of the Nation, or as paupers or criminals. In the former case they are honest, law-abiding citizens, ready at all times to make any sacrifice, no matter how great, to maintain the supremacy of the Government, while in either of the other conditions they become a burden and a curse to society. We believe that this deplorable state of affairs has been brought upon us by too many of our people leaving the farms and seeking employment in the mines and factories, overcrowding those industries, while the agricultural interest has not kept pace, causing an overplus of manufactured goods in proportion to the amount of agricultural products—believing, as we do, many of these now out of employment would gladly settle upon the Government lands but that we lack the means to either move on the land or to procure the food necessary to sustain life until a crop could be raised.

The bill introduced in the House of Representatives, during the last session of Congress, by Hon. N. P. BANKS, of Massachusetts, should it become a law, would provide those anxious to settle on the Government lands with the means; and, at the same time, the Government would be amply secured against loss at the hands of dishonest settlers who might avail themselves of its benefits. We feel that this is due to the people, that the welfare of the country demands it.

We therefore respectfully petition your honorable bodies to at once give the force of law to the bill referred to above, and your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

Mr. WALLING. I now insist on my motion that the House take a recesss until to-morrow at ten o'clock a. m.

Mr. RUSK. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that we have a session this evening for the consideration of pension bills. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. RUSK. I hope then that the motion for a recess will be voted down, and that we shall devote this evening to pension bills.

The question was taken on Mr. WALLING'S motion, and it was agreed to.

And the House accordingly (at six o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) took a recess until ten o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled at 10 o'clock a. m., (Tuesday, February 27.)

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. REAGAN. The Committee on Commerce have prepared the river and harbor bill. I do not want to debate it all, but to present the bill and let the House act upon it, so that if they accept it it may be passed, and if not, it may be defeated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must insist upon that bill being considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 2382) granting the right of way to the Hot Springs Railroad Company over the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas, with amendments; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SARGENT, Mr. WINDOM, and Mr. WITHERS managers of the conference on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SARGENT, Mr. CRAGIN, and Mr. WALLACE managers of the conference on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to take the floor for the purpose of moving to suspend the rules, but I suppose I cannot do that pending the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that he understands that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] wishes to move to suspend the rules and pass what is known as the river and harbor appropriation bill. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Texas if that is what he desires.

Mr. REAGAN. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. That manifestly cannot be done now.

The SPEAKER. In the present condition of the public business the Chair feels obligated by every means in his power to hasten the consideration of the appropriation bills. He thinks, however, that from the fact that the sundry civil appropriation bill has already been partially considered, it should have the preference over the proposition of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.] In due time the Chair will give the gentleman from Texas an opportunity to test the sense of the House on the proposition to suspend the rules and pass the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Of course I acquiesce in the suggestion of the Chair as being very proper. I desire to state to members, however, that this year the river and harbor appropriation bill contains items amounting to about two and a half million of dollars, embracing the leading and most important works of improvement, and the bill has been very carefully considered and prepared.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. HOLMAN, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BUCKNER in the chair.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole and resumes the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. The pending question is upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] on the last clause of the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations; which clause will now be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $375,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated to pay the amount due to mail contractors for mail service performed in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Tennessee, and Virginia in the years 1859, 1860, 1861, and before said States respectively engaged in war against the United States; and the provisions of section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable to the payments herein authorized: Provided, That any such claims which have been paid by the Confederate States government shall not be again paid.

Mr. ATKINS. As the House is very thin this morning, and as there are several paragraphs of the bill which were passed over by unanimous consent before this point of order was raised, I would suggest that we now go back and take up and dispose of the clauses thus passed over and leave this item to be considered, as it is the last part of the bill. I asked consent of the gentleman from Michigan the other day to do so, and he gave that consent. I see that he is now in his seat, and I trust there will be no objection to going back and taking up the clauses which have been passed over and disposing of them, by which time the attendance in the House will be larger.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is all right; go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. CONGER. That leaves the point of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. That leaves the point of order pending, to be afterward disposed of.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I ask consent to recur to the first paragraph of the bill, that relating to public printing and binding, for the purpose of making a correction which I think will meet with no opposition. I move to amend the paragraph by changing the clause relating to the debates and the proceedings of Congress so as to read as follows:

For printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates of Congress, $694,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe that is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I also ask consent to submit an amendment to come in after the paragraph relating to public printing and binding, and which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all public documents already printed or ordered to be printed by the present Congress shall be credited to the present members of said Congress and Delegates, and subject to their orders for the period of nine months after the expiration of their terms as Members and Delegates; and that public documents already printed or ordered to be printed may pass through the mails upon the frank of Members and Delegates of the present Congress, in compliance with laws now in force regarding the transmission of public documents through the mails, during the said period of nine months after their terms as Members and Delegates.

Mr. O'NEILL. Does that apply to any other documents than those which are already free in the mails?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. It does not change the law at all; leaves it as it now stands.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that this amendment only continues the right of present Members and Delegates in relation to documents for nine months after their terms have expired.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. That is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Before we pass from this part of the bill, I desire to offer an amendment to come in after the clause appropriating $105,000 for the printing of the Post-Office Department. I send the proviso to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That $2,000 of that sum may be disbursed under the direction and supervision of the Postmaster-General for compiling a history of the Post-Office Department from its origin to the present time, including a catalogue of the Postmasters-General; with a brief account of their services, the history of the reduction of postage to its present rates, ocean postage, international postage, railway-mail service, appliances for the use, security, and celerity of the mails, and such other matters as will show the progress of our national postal system.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. This question of order has already been disposed of.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I ask that a telegram from the Postmaster-General be read.

The CHAIRMAN. This matter has been disposed of heretofore by the Chair on a point of order. It is ruled out of order.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I ask to be heard one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir, on the point of order. We have come back to this paragraph, and now it is open to amendment. Two amendments have already been made to it, and it is open therefore to all other amendments. I ask, therefore, that the telegram from the Postmaster-General be read and that this amendment be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that because other amendments have been permitted by unanimous consent this amendment is admissible when objection is made.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Unanimous consent was not asked for the other amendments.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman might have the telegram read as part of his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes there is no objection to the telegram being read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February, 1877.

Hon. W. TOWNSEND:

I am willing that $2,000 of the $105,000 should be appropriated for the compilation of a history of the Post-Office Department, to be disbursed under the advice and authority of the Postmaster-General.

JAS. N. TYNER.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the telegram just read, I might very properly move to reduce this appropriation; for it is manifestly $2,000 too much. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. The Postmaster-General consents to this use of $2,000 of this appropriation. There is not to-day in the Post-Office Department a history of that Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. We do not want any.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no law authorizing this compilation, and therefore the Chair rules the amendment out of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For survey of public lands and private land claims, $50,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not necessary to read the remainder of this paragraph, which has already been read. I ask unanimous consent that $50,000 be struck out and $150,000 inserted. It is true that this is a very large appropriation——

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is an amendment of the gentleman from California to insert $150,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Committee on Appropriations, in conceding this large increase, do so with the hope that in view of the very heavy increase of the appropriations in this bill the Committee of the Whole will consent that there be no further increase of the appropriations and that the bill be allowed to stand as it is.

Mr. WALLING. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$150,000" and inserting "$250,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. The amendment has already been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that it has been disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought it was disposed of by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I withdraw my proposition. I supposed there would be no objection to it. No person has named any higher sum until this moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question was upon the amendment of the gentleman from California to increase this appropriation to $150,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; and I stated that the Committee on Appropriations asked the House to resist any further increase of appropriations on this bill, the amount of which has been already heavily increased.

Mr. WALLING. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$150,000" and inserting "$250,000." If there is any propriety in continuing in offices our surveyor-general and carrying on the surveys of the public lands, we must appropriate money enough to do it efficiently. The amount appropriated by this bill as originally introduced is not enough to pay the incidental expenses of these offices. We are every year losing more by millions for want of surveys of timber land in the Territories than we are gaining by this species of legislation. It is bad economy. The amendment I have offered should be adopted and also a further one which I shall offer, providing that the timber lands of the country shall be first surveyed under the provisions of this bill and then offered for sale. Otherwise we lose all that is valuable in these lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is strange that the gentleman from Ohio, a member of the Committee on Public Lands, has not been willing to pay a little attention to the course of legislation on this subject. It has been stated time and again, and I think with the general consent of the House, that the appropriation made for the surveyors-general was with the view of closing up these offices. I understand that the proposition will be submitted by the gentleman from Oregon to abolish the office of surveyor-general, which is manifestly an unnecessary office.

As to the public lands permit me to say a word. These lands are now being exhausted rapidly enough. If there is anything desirable, it is to save the timber lands of the country, the destruction of which is so materially affecting our climate and will interfere largely with our future industries. Instead of being eager to facilitate this system of speculation, enabling a few men to amass fortunes by buying at an insignificant sum the public lands of the country, I think gentlemen can afford to delay a little measures which will facilitate the making of imperial fortunes out of these timber lands, which ought to be saved instead of being destroyed.

I know it is answered to this that even now the timber on these public lands is being stolen; but I know also that the laws in force are ample to prevent this spoliation, which is going on to a very slight degree. The pressure upon the gentleman from Ohio and others to throw open these timber lands to speculation grows out of the fact that the gentlemen who are desiring to make fortunes out of these lands and to exhaust the timber of the country are not now able to get at the lands out of which they wish to amass fortunes.

Mr. WALLING rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. WALLING. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I disclaim any pressure upon me from any source whatever of any other interest in this matter except the interest of the public. I state to the gentleman from Indiana that the effect of the remarks he makes and the course of policy which he pursues is simply to turn the timber land of the country over to the speculators and thieves. Already millions of acres of the public lands have been stripped of their timber by those who had no right to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to know how that could be done if we do not survey them.

Mr. WALLING. I say in no court of justice can a man give away his property without first providing for the payment of his debts, and so long as this Government is in debt it has no right to give away its property.

Now, I was traveling last summer up the Sierras, which were denuded of their timber. I stopped by the side of a flume, where twenty or thirty men were engaged in floating down wood and lumber, and I asked them where they got it from. They said they got it from the public lands. I further asked by what authority they took it from the public lands, and they replied: "We have no authority." "But have you not timber agents here?" "Yes, we have timber agents here, and they once in a while come around, but they are friends of ours." "What is the capacity of this flume of yours?" "Seven hundred cords of wood a day and ten thousand feet of timber from the public lands every day." One of the gentleman's former colleagues in Congress, Mr. Hendricks, some twenty years ago made a report to the Secretary of the Interior on this very subject. From that day to this $154,000 have come into the public Treasury from the sale of timber, while it cost us more than $700,000 to keep up these timber agents, and at the same time $20,000,000 will not cover the aggregate loss to the Government in that time. I therefore believe the true policy is to survey these lands and offer them for sale.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have noticed for several years the fearful pressure to get at these timber lands by getting them surveyed and putting them into the market. I think $150,000 of appropriation for survey of the public lands is ample and ought not to be increased.

Mr. WALLING. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment to strike out the last word.

The question recurred on Mr. WALLING'S amendment to the amendment to increase the appropriation to $250,000.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PAGE'S amendment was then adopted increasing the appropriation to $150,000.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and a message from the Senate by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, notified the House that that body insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4187) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WEST, Mr. HAMLIN, and Mr. BOGY as managers at said conference on its part.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEELE. I move an amendment, which I believe meets with the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and it will come in at the end of the provision in reference to public lands.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveying the eastern boundary of Wyoming Territory, estimated length one hundred and thirty-nine miles, being that part of the one hundred and fourth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich lying between the forty-third and forty-fifth degrees of north latitude, and being the boundary between the Territories of Wyoming and Dakota, $7,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is a necessary appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLE. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

And this proviso shall not be so construed as to retain such an interest in said lands as shall prevent the States from selling the same for taxes; and if sold by the States for taxes, then the cost of surveying and selecting said lands shall be paid to the United States by the States, and upon such payments the title of said lands shall be perfect and complete in the States so paying said costs, it being the intention of this proviso that all taxes assessed after the passage of this act upon lands granted to any railroad company by the United States shall be valid as against any claim or title remaining in the United States in or to such lands on account of the non-payment of such costs and fees.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the first clause of that amendment may be read again. I think it is a good provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does the gentleman want his amendment to come in?

Mr. RIDDLE. At the end of the last proviso.

My object in offering this amendment is to enable the States within whose limits land grants to railroad companies have been made to collect the taxes assessed by the States on those lands. In order to show the necessity of the amendment and the proviso I shall ask the Clerk to read a portion of the remarks made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARVEY] on the 14th of February.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that will not be read. We all understand the question. I ask that the proposition may be read again. If it be as I understand it I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. RIDDLE. I believe I have a right to have those remarks read.

The CHAIRMAN. They can be read in the gentleman's time.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the acts of Congress donating these lands to railroad companies do not provide that in case of their not being sold within a certain time they shall revert to the General Government.

Mr. RIDDLE. No, sir. It is in order to have that point understood that I wish the remarks of Senator HARVEY read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To secure railway connection with the Pacific coast Congress granted to several corporations lands greater in extent than some of the States of this Union, besides the other aid extended: and these companies proceeded to defraud the States within which their grants lie of the taxes due them, and it is done in this way: the law requires that the companies shall pay the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying the lands granted; but to avoid the payment of taxes the companies neglect to pay the costs required, thus holding the land in such a condition that even though so held for years for purposes of speculation, they cannot be taxed, for the reason that the Supreme Court has decided upon appeal and upon the plea of the companies that while the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying remains unpaid the Government holds such an interest in the land that it cannot permit it to be sold for taxes, because the interest of the Government in the costs yet due from the companies might be lost, and the same rule applies to such lands when the companies have sold or mortgaged them without paying those costs, thus not only wronging the States by avoiding the payment of taxes on the lands they yet hold, but enabling their vendees to further escape the payment of taxes upon the value of improvements made by them upon the lands, making such immunity an inducement to purchasers to pay a high price for the lands, thus banking, as it were, upon the benefits of a legal subterfuge and perpetrating a great outrage upon the States and local municipal organizations, as well as upon all property-holders who pay their taxes honestly and promptly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have reserved the point of order on the amendment, and I ask that it may be again reported, so that we may ascertain whether it is a proper amendment or not. If it accomplishes the object of taxing these lands and saving the interests of the Government, I am in favor of that. Let it be reported again.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were ayes 70.

Before the negative vote was counted,

Mr. WALLING said: There is some doubt about the effect of that amendment. I ask to have it reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. The committee is now dividing.

The negative vote being taken, there were noes 14.

Mr. LANE. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the point of order that a quorum has not voted will not be made, but that it will be agreed that a vote may be taken on this proposition in the House.

Mr. LANE. I agree to that.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. The other day there was a discussion with regard to the ventilation of the House and I offered an amendment which was adopted. I desire now to correct the phraseology of that amendment and ask unanimous consent that that which I now offer be accepted in place of the amendment already adopted.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Provided, however, That a sum not exceeding $33,000 of this appropriation may be used for the improvement of the heating and ventilating of the House of Representatives to be expended by the Architect of the Capitol in accordance with the report of the board of United States officers convened by the request of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and that said board of officers be requested to advise the Architect in the premises, and that hereafter the subject of ventilating and heating the House of Representatives be placed under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the change made upon the amendment as already adopted?

Mr. HARRISON. The words "in accordance with the report submitted by the board of United States officers," &c., are inserted.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no objection to that.

By unanimous consent the amendment as now read was substituted for that heretofore adopted.

Mr. WIGGINTON. I offer the following amendment:

Add at the end of the paragraph—

And on and after the 30th day of June, A. D. 1878, the office of the surveyors-general for the several States and Territories shall be abolished, and the business and records of the several surveyors-general's offices shall be transferred to the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States; and thereafter all surveys of public lands shall be made under the control and management of the said commissioner.

Mr. PAGE. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state what is his point of order.

Mr. PAGE. My point of order is, that it is new legislation; that it changes existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is new legislation, and changes existing law. That is clear. But it is germane to the bill, and it retrenches expenditures by abolishing a large number of offices. I therefore submit that it comes within the meaning of the one hundred and twentieth rule of the House.

Mr. PAGE. I do not agree with the gentleman from Indiana, that this will be a saving of a dollar of money. If the amendment should be adopted it would be impossible for the people of the western States, particularly of the mining States and Territories, to transact their business under the existing laws regulating the survey and disposal of mining lands. I hope therefore the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. WIGGINTON. I submit that it will not be more difficult, and that it will be much less expensive, for the people in the mining States and Territories to have their surveys made if these offices are abolished. The offices of surveyors-general, with rents, &c., have cost the Government of the United States during the past year over $136,000, and we have appropriated but $150,000 to expend in surveys. I say there is no good reason for continuing these offices after the 30th of June, 1878.

Mr. PAGE. Under the mining acts of 1866 and 1872 the surveyors-general of California, and I think of all the mining States and Territories, are required to appoint a deputy mineral surveyor for the survey of tracts of land in small quantities, ranging from a half to five or ten acres of ground.

Every survey has to be platted, four different plats, and they have to make a report to the surveyor-general of the State or Territory where the lands exist, and it would be impossible for persons in the mining States and Territories to make report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for every one of these surveys.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is discussing the merits of the amendment, and not the point of order.

Mr. PAGE. Let me say a word further. It would be far better to do away with the registers and receivers of the land offices in the States where these lands lie than to do away with the office of surveyor-general.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say a word upon the point of order. There is no question but that this amendment is subject to the point of order, unless it is in the line of retrenchment and economy. It does not appear on the face of the proposition or from any direct conclusion that can be drawn from the proposition, that this would be in the line of economy. Now it is evident to my mind that it would lead to further expense, and I might almost say that it would be a very shiftless and extravagant way of squandering money, not only the money of the Government but the money of the people. It would require them to visit Washington every time there was a dispute about pre-emption or homstead, or anything of that kind. It would unquestionably be far more expensive than the present system, and would lead to extravagance and expense on the part of the Government. But if such considerations could by any possibility be allowed to enter the minds of members here regarding the interests of citizens—I do not know that it would be in order to allude to that—you would do a wrong to the citizens by abolishing those offices and compelling the business to be done, which generally has to be done in person, at the Land Office in Washington.

Now I am somewhat familiar with this question of surveys, and it seems to me that with the little salaries given to the surveyors-gene-eral—$1,500 as the highest and $1,000 as the lowest for each in that region of the United States where the wild lands exist—that this office, both on the ground of economy and for the interests of the citizen, should not be attacked in this way on an appropriation bill. If the Chair pleases, there should be something on the face of the amendment that would indicate—without going abroad to inquire—direct, positive, and sufficient economy and retrenchment to warrant the violation of our rule, and I desire to say in addition that, at a former session, I think the last session, the Chair held distinctly that this same proposition was liable to the point of order.

Mr. LANE. I do not think that this proposition was ever submitted to the Chair at all.

Mr. PAGE. The Speaker of this House has universally ruled that where it did not appear on the face of the amendment that it did reduce expenditures, the amendment was not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will so decide; he has no doubt in sustaining the point of order, and ruling the amendment out or order.

Mr. BELFORD. I offer the following amendment to come in at the end of the first paragraph:

For survey of the boundary line between Colorado and Utah, being so much of the 32d meridian of longitude west from Washington Observatory as lies between the 37th and 41st degrees of north latitude, at a rate not exceeding $70 per linear mile, estimated distance 280 miles, $19,600. This appropriation to be available at once.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was considered by the Committee on Appropriations and we did not deem it necessary to make the appropriation at this time.

Mr. BELFORD. I believe I have the floor and I desire to be heard. Some other gentleman has a right to get in a word now and then, besides the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BELFORD. I understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to say that the Committee on Appropriations did not deem this appropriation advisable at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have made the point of order that this appropriation is not provided for by law.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. BELFORD. I understand that the Chair admitted a similar amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. FENN. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "second" before the word "irrigable" in the seventh line to the close of the sixteenth line, and insert the following:

"Timber lands required for agricultural, mining, and mechanical purposes; third, such other lands as the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may approve. The price of such surveys except timber lands shall not exceed $10 per mile for standard lines, $7 for township lines, and $6 for section lines; and that for timbered lands the price shall not exceed $10 per mile for township lines, $8 for section lines, and $13 for standard lines, and the starting point for such surveys may be established by triangulation from points established by the geographical survey of the Territories.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to make the point of order on that amendment, as it changes the present law, unless the Committee on Public Lands have considered this proposition. The point of order is that the law now in force prescribes a different mode in regard to the survey of public lands that may be irrigated. This proposition changes that law in this, that it provides secondly for survey of timber lands. That is a change of the law as it now stands, but I do not desire to press the point of order if the amendment has been considered by the Committee on Public Lands; otherwise I shall have to do so.

Mr. FENN. I will state in answer to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that this amendment has not had the consideration of the Committee on Public Lands as a body, but it has been submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and several other members of the committee, and I will give my reason why the amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman admit that it will be a change of existing law?

Mr. FENN. I admit that it will be a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair must rule it out. [Laughter.]

Mr. FENN. Well, I will not prevaricate on the question. I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the gentleman has not asked much of this House and is one of the representatives from the Territories, I would suggest to him that he will accomplish his object, which is to secure the survey of timber lands, by including the words "and timber lands" in the first class of lands to be surveyed; that is, to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no lands shall be surveyed under this appropriation except, first, those adapted to agriculture without artificial irrigation and timber lands, &c.

Mr. FENN. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me if the gentleman will consent to increase the price to be paid for surveying these lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah, I suspected that there was a purpose to increase the price of surveying. I will consent to the amendment I have indicated, but not to increasing the cost of surveying.

Mr. FENN. Very well, I will accept the amendment, believing that some time in the future Congress will conclude that there is a little difference between what it costs to survey timber lands and to survey open prairie lands.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the change suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will not be made. I think the timber lands should by no means be the first to be surveyed. As I understand, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] proposes to include timber lands first in the enumeration.

Mr. SAYLER. The Committee on Public Lands have had this whole subject of timber lands under consideration, and if they get an opportunity they will report a well-matured bill upon the subject. I think it is very doubtful legislation to place matters of this importance upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I offered an amendment the other day in relation to a military telegraph in Texas. I am satisfied, from information recently received, that there is no necessity for that amendment. I have an assurance from the Department that full justice will be done that portion of the country without the amendment, and I therefore desire to withdraw it.

There was no objection, and the amendment was accordingly withdrawn.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to move an amendment, to come in at the end of the paragraph relating to survey of public lands.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveying public lands in Florida, amount due to Marcellus A. Williams, deputy surveyor, for surveys executed by him under contract of the 13th day of December, A. D. 1873, $795.59, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the public Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I regret that I have to make a point of order upon that amendment; but my friend must see that if this claim is allowed to come in all the claims of this class must be admitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JACOBS. I move to amend by striking out the last sentence of the paragraph and inserting that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The sentence proposed to be stricken out was the following:

The cost of such surveys shall not exceed $10 per mile for standard lines, (and the starting point for said survey may be established by triangulation,) $7 for township, and $6 for section lines, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow for the survey of standard lines in heavily timbered land a sum not exceeding $13 per mile.

The amendment proposed to be inserted in lieu thereof was as follows:

The cost of such surveys shall not exceed $13 per mile for standard lines in heavily timbered lands, (and the starting point of such surveys may be established by triangulation,) $10 for township lines, and $9 for section lines in heavy timbered lands, $7 for township and $6 for section lines in prairie or open lands, and $10 per mile for standard lines in prairie or open lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. That amendment proposes to change existing law, and therefore I must make a point of order upon it.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the gentleman if the law as it now stands upon this subject was not inserted in an appropriation bill?

Mr. BELFORD. Of course it was.

Mr. HOLMAN. The last sundry civil appropriation bill by independent legislation fixed the compensation for the survey of public lands with reference to the system of triangulation and the fixing of geodetic points. The point of order that I make on the proposed amendment is that while it changes existing law it is not in the interest of economy, whereas the provision as it now stands on the statute-book, although a change of the then existing law, was in the interest of economy.

Mr. PAGE. Prior to the first session of this Congress the law provided for either $14 or $16 per linear mile for the survey of timber lands.

Mr. BELFORD. It was $15 per mile.

Mr. PAGE. The Committee on Appropriations recommended the change which was made in the appropriation bill passed at the last session. If that committee then had the power to regulate the price of the survey of the public lands or the amount to be paid per mile by a clause in an appropriation bill, it has now equally the right to increase that price.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be proper to change the law if in the interest of economy and retrenchment; not otherwise.

Mr. PAGE. It is in the interest of justice and right. I do not think the point of order will hold good. The appropriation bill of last year changed the existing law and this amendment proposes to change that law.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, an amendment changing an existing law is not in order unless it is in the interest of economy or retrenchment. It is conceded that this amendment is not in that interest, and therefore it is out of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Geological and geographical surveys:

For the continuation of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, by Professor F. V. Hayden, $50,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "$50,000" and inserting "$75,000." This is the oldest geological and geographical survey that has been authorized by the Government. It has received the fostering care of the nation for eight or ten years past, receiving from time to time appropriations of $75,000 to $85,000. As was very well stated the other day by one of my colleagues from Pennsylvania, this matter came before the Committee on Public Lands of the last Congress, when it was thoroughly examined; and it was unanimously the opinion of the committee that this enterprise should continue to receive the care and support of the Government.

In the limited time during which this survey has been carried on, it has done a great work in the exploration of our western territory. Professor Hayden has in that time surveyed partially Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Montana, Idaho, and Utah. He has brought to public notice vast tracts of land hitherto unknown, some of them valuable for their deposits of gold, silver, iron, quicksilver, and copper; and he has pointed out to people who wish to emigrate from the thickly settled, densely populated portions of the country suitable tracts of the public land on which they may settle.

This survey has received the commendation of all the scientific societies of the country and has also become well known to the learned societies of Europe. So well established is its character, so highly is it thought of by those learned societies that they have given it universal commendation; and Professor Hayden is now the recipient of the honor of more than twenty-five memberships of learned societies of Europe and America.

This survey is valuable in every direction. It has not of late years received that adequate support which it deserves; and there are now on hand, waiting an appropriation, several volumes ready for publication. Already some forty-one publications connected with this survey have been issued, publications of the greatest value which are eagerly sought for not only in this country but throughout the world.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask that by unanimous consent all debate on this paragraph cease.

Several MEMBERS. O, no.

Mr. BANKS. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will let us have a little more time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise in order that the House may close debate. Gentlemen must see that if this bill is not put through within the next hour or two it cannot get through at this session.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I hope we shall have opportunity to be heard.

Mr. BANKS. Let us have fifteen or twenty minutes.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, there were—ayes 91, noes 42. No quorum voting.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I call for tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman want to force an extra session of Congress?

Mr. BANKS. We only ask fifteen minutes; a vote by tellers and the rising of the committee will take almost that much time.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BANKS and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 42.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CLYMER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BUCKNER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the paragraphs in regard to explorations or surveys be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. BANKS. Say fifteen minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I modify my motion, so as to close debate on these paragraphs in fifteen minutes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph in relation to Major Powell.

Mr. HOLMAN. This motion will not cut off amendments.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HOLMAN, the House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. BUCKNER in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. BANKS. I hope that the committee will agree to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] It is substantially for the publication of the results of surveys completed within the last two years, and not yet published, embracing seven Territories—Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, and Dakota. These surveys are important, and the report of them includes information of great value in relation to all these Territories, their geology, topography, mineralogy, irrigable lands, the mountain structures (so far as they concern drainage, &c.) and the climatic conditions of that large section of the continent. The Government has expended liberal and large sums of money for the purpose of obtaining by careful and exact scientific surveys this information that is indispensable to a knowledge and settlement of the country. How unwise it is to get it at such cost unless we publish it? All that is required to print the surveys that have been completed in the last two years in relation to these seven Territories and embracing all these important features that I have enumerated is the small amount proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Twenty-five thousand dollars can well be appropriated, even in this period of industrial and financial depression, which aids so directly the development of the material wealth of the Republic.

I will not take up the time of the committee further, Mr. Chairman, but express the hope that the committee will vote for this amendment.

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Chairman, the discussion this morning only illustrates the propriety of the remark I made the other day, that we ought to have a bureau of surveys. The increased appropriation for the general survey of the Territories seems to me to have been wise, but that survey is far less desirable than these particular surveys which are now before the House. It is well known that we have not an acre of arable land west of the one hundredth parallel, except a little in the Northwest, which can be brought under cultivation except by engineering appliances, for the reason that there is less than twenty-four inches rain-fall in all this region. Hence one thing we need to know is what part of this vast territory can be brought under cultivation by irrigation.

Besides that, there is a large portion of valuable mineral lands, as we know, besides valuable coal-fields, valuable timber lands, and also vast regions of pasturage.

Now, in order to know where these lands lie, what these lands are, and how valuable they are, we need these particular surveys which Professor Hayden and Major Powell are conducting. I hope the increased appropriations offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] for Professor Hayden, and to be offered as I understand by unanimous vote of the Committee on Public Lands for Major Powell, will be voted by this committee. It is indispensable we should have this in order that we may know exactly what the territory is and in order we may bring it into use.

Mr. BELFORD. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will prevail, and that nothing will be done to embarrass the carrying forward of these surveys in the West. With the exception of last year, the usual appropriation made has been $75,000. The survey now has an organization of learned scientists, and any legislation impairing its efficiency would be especially detrimental to the State I have the honor to represent. I am familiar with the work of this survey, as much of its labors have been performed in Colorado, and I am justified in declaring that the results of these surveys have added infinitely more to the revenues of the Government by stimulating immigration and settlement in that region than three times the amount appropriated.

Every country of Europe that enjoys a permanent and stable government has its geological surveys, continues them for years, and prizes the work done. In France the first survey was organized in 1811, in Great Britain in 1835, and both countries have continued them to the present day. In Germany prior to the formation of the present empire every one of the small states which now constitute the empire had its own geological survey, which even now, in spite of the consolidation, is carried on by a separate bureau.

The practical results obtained by surveys of this kind are dependent somewhat upon the character of the country explored and upon the standard of the work.

One of the greatest and most inexhaustible sources of revenue for a country is its mineral wealth. This has been duly recognized in foreign countries, and the control over mineral and kindred deposits has been exercised and retained by the Government. In order to prevent the useless waste of money and time in "prospecting," especial attention is given by the members of surveys to the mineral resources and very valuable results have been obtained. It has been estimated by the late Professor Jukes, formerly in charge of the English geological survey, that no less than £150,000 have been uselessly expended there in the search for coal. Had good and reliable geological maps, accompanied by the necessary sections, been on hand, much of this would have been saved. With the aid of these, even a man ignorant of geological laws could have determined with a considerable degree of accuracy the existence or absence of valuable minerals at any one given locality. While on the one hand a saving is thus effected, on the other absolute gains to the State and community may result from discoveries made.

Taking the case of the United States, where thousands of square miles are as yet unexplored and are owned by the Government, it seems absolutely necessary that we should follow the example of older countries, and in justice to the Government and to the people have these examinations made. The unknown wealth of our western country in precious metals, coal, salt, &c., can much sooner be brought to light by the aid of a well-organized survey than otherwise; and again, regions of doubtful value can be examined and their merits or demerits be made known to those who otherwise would waste time and money on them. This is but one of the practical features of a geological survey. Another is that touching agricultural interests. It is well known how much depends upon a knowledge of the character of the soil which we propose to cultivate. A geological map, accompanied by a faithful report, will invariably afford valuable suggestions as to the information desired. Professor Lesley, one of the veteran geologists of the United States, says a geological survey "is designed to teach all, every farmer, every citizen, what and where are his stuffs for livelihood."

In a thickly settled country geological investigations can be made more readily and at a smaller expense than in an unsettled one. Wherever mineral deposits in large or small quantities exist in the former, they will be comparatively well known, and it then devolves upon the survey to determine their horizontal and vertical extent. In an entirely unknown district the responsibility is much greater. By his own exertions the geologist must find these deposits and by publishing their existence confer a benefit upon his government and people.

A question of importance is, how shall such surveys be carried on, and by whom?

Here again we may perhaps best inquire into what has been done in countries of much older civilization than the United States. In all of them the control of surveys is vested in the central government. Competent men are appointed to take charge of the work and submit their reports and all other results to those authorized to receive them. One advantage the geologists of those countries have that have mainly been under military rule for so long a time is that they are supplied with maps prepared for military purposes reduced from the large scale maps belonging to the land offices. Professors of universities and others of recognized ability in some instances are intrusted with carrying out the work.

These surveys are the avant-coureurs or pioneers of our western civilization. They push forward into our vast public domain; explore the valleys, parks, cañons, and mountains, and by their examinations, as presented in their annual reports, geological and mineralogical maps, we are informed of our mineral deposits; and our agricultural, grazing, and irrigable lands are described, altitudes made known, botany reported upon, and incidental to this our whole natural history is given, all of which aggregate to us a knowledge incalculable in its importance.

Mr. MONROE. I move to strike out the last two words of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] for the sake of calling the attention of the committee to one or two points in favor of these explorations which have not yet been presented.

I wish to make mention of one fact which has lately been presented to the American public as illustrating the great importance of perfectly accurate and thorough surveys of all our Territories at an early period.

It is well known to many members of the House that the great State of New York lately, through its Legislature, organized a company to resurvey that whole State. It was found that all the old surveys were inaccurate, and a gentleman of great intelligence from the State of New York with whom I had the pleasure of conversing the other day told me that there was great doubt whether there was a single county line or a single township line in the whole State which was strictly correct, and hence the act for a new survey of the State for the sake of accuracy. The surveyors have recently been fixing the corners of some counties. They found the old surveys very inaccurate. Many ludicrous blunders have occurred and some oppression has been suffered in taxation in that State in consequence of those errors. Railroads, for instance, I am told in some cases have submitted to the injustice of paying taxes twice over in different townships because the boundary between the townships was not clearly ascertained. Other wrong and confusion have occurred in consequence of these inaccuracies.

Now, what we need in order to prevent evils like this is to have our new Territories surveyed in the manner in which the Hayden party are surveying, by triangulation and by astronomical observation. A party like this of Hayden's begin by establishing a few prominent points, such as mountain peaks. Their exact locality is fixed by astronomical observation. Then with base lines determined in this way, they proceed to survey the territory by triangulation, fixing the locality of all prominent points. All subsequent surveys of the public lands then can be made from these points so established.

I was told by this gentleman from New York that it would perhaps cost the State of New York $5,000,000 at this late day to have an exactly thorough survey of that State—one which could be trusted.

Just one word more. I want to call the attention of this committee, and think it but a simple act of justice to do so, to the excellent reputation of Professor Hayden, the head of this survey, in regard to economy in the expenditure of the public moneys. I want to call the attention of my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to that fact. He is probably aware of the fact that Professor Hayden is regarded by the Department as being exceedingly particular in regard to the manner in which every dollar is spent. He is a strict constructionist of the law, and makes it a matter of conscience that not one cent of the money appropriated to his party shall be expended otherwise than according to the spirit and the letter of the law.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to allow me a minute to explain.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has explained well and fully already. I wish to say that these surveys commenced a few years ago with an appropriation of $5,000. A gentleman by the name of J. Ross Browne commenced this system with an appropriation of $5,000, and as the natural result of entering upon this species of expenditure, we have now appropriated by this bill the sum of $108,000 for surveys which may be performed this year, or postponed to next year, or the year after, without any injury to the public interests whatever; and yet gentlemen are seeking to increase the amount of this appropriation.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Is not a portion of this appropriation used for the publication of the works in regard to the results of the expedition?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing that they shall use as much of the $50,000 as they wish. But I assert, in the the present condition of our affairs—in the present condition of the taxation of our country, the oppressions resting on the shoulders of labor, the arduousness of the struggle to pass through this crisis in the financial affairs of the country—the appropriation of large sums of money for purposes which may be postponed as well as not is actually cruel and oppressive and entirely unjustifiable. I think the appropriations recommended by the Committee on Appropriations—$50,000 for Professor Hayden, $20,000 for Lieutenant Wheeler, $20,000 for Major Powell, and $18,000 for Major Elliott—are very ample. And yet, although these appropriations have now swelled to the enormous proportions I have stated, an additional $25,000 is asked for.

It should be remembered also, that many of these are duplicate surveys, going over the same ground. I ask gentlemen to be satisfied with a moderate appropriation, at least until these surveys shall be placed under some common head so that these expenditures may be intelligently applied, instead of being applied in going over the same ground. I now ask that the amendment offered may be read, as I desire to make a modification of it.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask him one question? I ask him, is it possible to revive the financial affairs of this country by strangling the efforts of its people to increase the development of its material resources?

Mr. HOLMAN. This is not for the benefit of the people at all, as the gentleman knows. It is for the benefit of the shrewd adventurers who avail themselves of the information afforded by these surveys. The real pioneers and frontiersmen are left behind while speculators get ahead. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$50,000" and insert "$75,000" in the first paragraph under the head "geological and geographical surveys."

Mr. WALLING. I ask the Clerk to report the paragraph as it will be read if thus amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the continuation of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, by Professor F. V. Hayden, $75,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed by the House for debate on this paragraph has expired.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania; there were—ayes 86, noes 55.

Mr. HOLMAN. A quorum has not voted. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN, and Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 97, noes 53.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I give notice that I will ask for a vote on this amendment in the House.

The Clerk read the following amendment:

For the completion of the geographical and geological survey of the Rocky Mountain region, including the preparation and publication of maps, charts, and other illustrations necessary for the reports of said survey, by J. W. Powell, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. STEVENSON. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out "$20,000" and insert "$50,000."

I think sufficient has already been said on this subject to render unnecessary any further argument.

The question being taken on Mr. STEVENSON'S amendment, there were—ayes, 72, noes 49.

Mr. HOLMAN. A quorum has not voted. I shall not make that point, but shall ask for a vote in the House.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the bill is now completed; but there is still pending the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] on the last paragraph of the bill. The Clerk will read that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $375,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated to pay the amount due to mail contractors for mail service performed in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Tennessee, and Virginia, in the years 1859, 1860, 1861, and before said States respectively engaged in war against the United States; and the provisions of section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable to the payments herein authorized: Provided, That any such claims which have been paid by the Confederate States government shall not be again paid.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I wish to offer an amendment to the last paragraph.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that the point of order is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan is pending.

Mr. CONGER. If gentlemen wish to offer a substitute for this paragraph which may not be liable to the same objections, I am willing to withdraw the point of order for the present until the substitute is read. I do not, however, withdraw it entirely.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I offer the following amendment:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Principal Chief Syrd R. Welch and C. H. Tayler, as authorized and requested by act of the council of the eastern band of the Cherokee Indians, passed October 4, 1876, their actual and necessary expenses and $4 per diem each, for services as representatives from said band, the same to be paid from any funds under the control of said Secretary belonging to said band of Cherokee Indians: Provided further, That this appropriation be made available at once.

Mr. HOLMAN. That amendment is not germane to the paragraph upon which the question of order was raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it is not germane to the paragraph.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I understood that the gentleman from Michigan had withdrawn the point of order, and this is simply an amendment to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was withdrawn by the gentleman from Michigan on the supposition that there would be a substitute offered for the paragraph.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Does the Chair rule that I cannot at any time offer the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules no such thing. The Chair rules that the amendment is not germane to this paragraph.

Mr. COX. I desire to offer an amendment to the last paragraph, to come in at the end of it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order unless it is intended to perfect the paragraph.

Mr. COX. I think it will perfect a very imperfect bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is now considering the last paragraph in the bill, and is waiting for an amendment to be offered to perfect that paragraph.

Mr. CONGER. I understood that some gentleman intended to offer a substitute for this paragraph which perhaps would relieve it of the objection which exists to it. I heard that intimated by some gentleman. If it is not the case, I presume the Chair will allow the point of order to be renewed.

The CHAIRMAN. The clause is now before the committee; the gentleman withdrew the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did the gentleman from Michigan withdraw the point of order finally?

Mr. CONGER. I withdrew the point of order in order that the substitute might be offered which would remove the objections to the clause.

Mr. HOLMAN. But no substitute is offered.

Mr. PIPER. I raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PIPER. The point of order is, that this clause changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] was that there is no existing law authorizing this appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to be heard upon that question. I regret, sir, that after ten years since our civil strife has closed an objection of this character should have come from any section or party of this Union, and especially is it a matter of regret that it should come from a member of my own party.

Sir, there is no page of English history which its historians have written with more pain, which its moralists have contemplated with more disapprobation, which its statesmen have regretted more keenly, than that sort of legislation known as bills of attainder, bills of pains and penalties.

Mr. PIPER. I would inquire if the gentleman from Georgia is speaking to the merits of this question or to the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope I may be allowed to proceed.

Mr. PIPER. I object to the gentleman proceeding to argue the merits of the case.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think I shall be able to show that what I am now saying is applicable to the point of order.

Mr. PIPER. The point of order is a very clear one and needs no argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will do it.

Mr. PIPER. I object to the gentleman proceeding to argue the merits of the case.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from California has objected frequently, and I hope he will be satisfied now; and I think I shall be able to show that what I am saying is pertinent to the point of order.

During our revolutionary struggle there was scarcely a single one of the States but which had passed bills of attainder. Property had been confiscated and rights destroyed under sweeping legislation, by which the parties involved were denied the right of trial by jury, denied the right of trial at all; and ere five years had elapsed after the close of the struggle which gave birth to all these animosities and hates, our fathers were enabled to rise up in a spirit of patriotism and a spirit of liberality and throw off these prejudices and return to healthy and wholesome legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that he would prefer to hear him upon the question of order rather than upon the merits of the case.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the Chair will permit me, I think I shall make what I am saying pertinent to the point of order before I get through. I am willing to stop if the Chairman will not take my statement to that effect.

Sir, when our fathers came to adopt the Constitution they expressly enacted this provision:

That no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed.

They put an inhibition against Congress enacting any legislation which was in the nature of bills of attainder or ex post facto laws. Now, sir, what is the clause of the existing law? The language is as follows:

SEC. 3480. It shall be unlawful for any officer to pay any account, claim, or demand against the United States which accrued or existed prior to the 13th day of April, 1861, in favor of any person who promoted, encouraged, or in any manner sustained the late rebellion, or in favor of any person who during such rebellion was not known to be opposed thereto, and distinctly in favor of its suppression.

The claim here is a claim for services rendered by persons in carrying the mails of the United States. It is conceded on all hands that the services were rendered and that the right of the parties to payment has accrued.

Mr. BANNING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. I will.

Mr. BANNING. Is this claim for carrying the mails in Confederate States after secession?

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all; these claims originated before there was any thought of secession.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question that bears on the merits of the proposition and not on the point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly I will.

Mr. HOLMAN. My question is this: These mail contractors were paid and are paid still by drafts on the several postmasters on their route. Is the gentleman able to state what loss the Government sustained by reason of the failure to pay these drafts by the postmasters on the respective routes? In other words, how much of the money in the hands of the postmasters and which was subject to be applied to the payment of these contractors was lost in consequence of the contractors not receiving their drafts and not presenting them for payment?

Mr. BLOUNT. If there was any fault on the part of the postmasters, certainly the contractors should not be punished for that. I did not intend, however, to turn aside from the point of order and discuss the merits of the proposition itself.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question in the line just suggested by the question of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN?]

Mr. BLOUNT. I would have no objection myself, but my friend must see the disposition of the Chair to get rid of this point of order, and if I allow these interruptions I will be stopped.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the merits of the question are not now in controversy at all; the question before the committee is whether there is any law of Congress now in force which would authorize this appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. So I understand, and I was addressing myself to that question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Produce the law.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will do so in my own way, if you please. I was first stating what were the facts.

Mr. WALLING. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me now. I will be willing to answer any question when we reach the discussion upon the merits of this proposition. The gentleman must see that the Chairman as well as members of the committee are impatient of delay.

I say that as a matter of fact it is admitted that this is a debt due from the Government of the United States. The very clause in the Revised Statutes which has been cited for the purpose of showing that this provision is out of order recognizes that very fact. It cannot escape or avoid the force and effect of the Constitution, but it simply says to the officers of the United States, you shall not pay these debts. Had it not been for that provision of the Revised Statutes, these debts might have been paid out of some fund. This provision restrains the officers of the Government from paying to citizens what are their just dues. The law, therefore, is in the nature of a bill of attainder or of pains and penalties. Chief-Justice Story says:

Bills of attainder, as they are technically called, are such special acts of the Legislature as inflict capital punishment upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offenses, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. If an act inflicts a milder degree of punishment than death, it is called a bill of pains and penalties. But in the sense of the Constitution it seems that bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties; for the Supreme Court have said: "A bill of attainder may affect the life of an individual, or may confiscate his property, or both."

Then he goes on to discuss this matter at large; but I will not take up the time of the Committee of the Whole by reading what he says upon it. He concludes by saying:

The injustice and iniquity of such acts, in general, constitute an irresistible argument against the existence of the power. In a free government it would be intolerable; and in the hands of a reigning faction it might be, and probably would be, abused to the ruin and death of the most virtuous citizens. Bills of this sort have been most usually passed in England in times of rebellion, or of gross subserviency to the Crown, or of violent political excitements; periods in which all nations are most liable (as well the free as the enslaved) to forget their duties and to trample upon the rights and liberties of others.

I will not take up the time of the committee by referring to the decision in Wallace, in relation to attorneys who were prohibited by law from practicing in the Federal courts. The decision is quite familiar to you, and it is simply necessary for me to state that it is there held that such a law is in the nature of a bill of pains and penalties, and as such obnoxious to the Constitution of the United States which provides that no such legislation should be had.

The Chair will also remember that in the State of Missouri there were provisions requiring that clergymen and priests should subscribe an oath that they had not taken up arms against the Government of the United States. In 4 Wallace that question comes up, and it is held that those provisions are inimical to the Constitution of the United States and therefore void.

In this case it is admitted that these sums of money are due to these persons. There is nothing in the way of their payment except the statute of the United States requiring that the officers of the Government shall not pay them. That statute, therefore, is inimical to the provision of the Constitution to which I have referred. The Constitution itself declares that it shall not be in the power of Congress to pass any bill of pains and penalties. If that be true, and if the Constitution and the laws passed in pursuance thereof are the laws referred to by our rules, then I insist that this point of order does not apply against this provision, that the Constitution cannot be defeated in that way. It is an axiomatic proposition that this very law itself is in opposition to the Constitution. Therefore it is the bounden duty of the Chair to so rule.

I had hoped that ten years after our civil strife had closed we would have reached a period when no man would invoke anything to embarrass legislation which springs out of a period of strife and of heat, and is always discarded when passions subside and the better feelings of the human heart rule.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HANCOCK. I wish to submit a few observations upon the point of order, which, as I understand, is that there is no pre-existing law authorizing this appropriation. I respectfully submit that this is a mistake. There are pre-existing laws authorizing the payment of all these different sums of money. The laws in force at the time the contracts were entered into under which these services were performed were ample to meet the requirements of the rule. They authorized the appropriation of money sufficient to pay the indebtedness of the Government arising under the contracts.

The law which has been referred to by some members as constituting a bar to an appropriation by Congress is not, as I conceive, of that character. That law, which I have not now at hand, but the substance of which I recollect very well, (it is section 3480 of the Revised Statutes,) is no inhibition upon the action of Congress with reference to these claims or any of like character. The full scope and object of that law was simply to prescribe a rule for the government of the accounting officers in disbursements of money that might possibly have been appropriated for the liquidation of claims of this character. The act provides that no claims originating prior to the war——

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this subject is certainly very well understood. It has been discussed in the House half a dozen times. As the hour of twelve o'clock is at hand I will, if the gentleman gives way, move that the committee rise.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. BUCKNER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. The hour of twelve o'clock having arrived, the Chair decides that a new legislative day begins.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: Protest of citizens of Philadelphia against submitting to the decision of the electoral commission, because of its injustice and unfairness, to the committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Also, the petition of citizens of Pennsylvania for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BLAND: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Saint James to Swiss, Missouri, to the same committee.

By Mr. CABELL: The petition of citizens of Pittsylvania County, Virginia, for cheap telegraphy, to the same committee.

By Mr. CRAPO: The petition of Alexander H. Corey and others, of Westford, Massachusetts, for cheap telegraphy, to the same committee.

By Mr. CROUNSE: The petition of J. H. Eddy and others, of Nebraska, that settlers on the public lands may have the time of their residence on claims as pre-emptors credited, when converting their occupation into one under the homestead law, to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. DUNNELL: Memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, asking for the amendment of the tree-culture act, to the same committee.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, that the time in which applications for pensions may be made be extended two years, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EGBERT: The petition of citizens of Youngsville, Pennsylvania, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FELTON: The petition of citizens of Georgia, for a post-route from Villa Rica, to Draketown, Georgia, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of citizens of Georgia, for a post-route from Rome, Georgia, via Mellville, Foster's Store, and Alpine, to Valley Head, Alabama, to the same committee.

By Mr. FULLER: Joint resolution of the Legislature of Indiana, asking that the names of John H. Killgore, George W. Johnson, and Owen Johnson, late members of Company A, Fortieth Regiment Indiana Veteran Volunteer Infantry, be restored to their original places upon the rolls of the Army, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HUBBELL: The petition of M. O. Williams, E. P. Wightman, and 26 other residents of Evart, Michigan, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HUMPHREYS: A joint resolution of the Legislature of Indiana, that the names of John H. Killgore, George W. Johnson, and Owen Johnson, late of Company A, Fortieth Regiment Indiana Veteran Volunteer Infantry, be restored to their original places upon the rolls of the Army, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LORD: The petition of Charles M. Kinney, J. M. Butler, and other citizens of New York, for the repeal of the check-stamp tax, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of H. D. Talcott, J. M. Butler, and other citizens of Oneida County, New York, for the repeal of the bank-tax laws, to the same committee.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of Emma Jean Clark, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of citizens of Marion County, California, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. O'NEIL: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, favoring the opening of negotiations looking to the abolition of the payment of light-dues in the ports of the Kingdom of Great Britain, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, asking for the organization of a national department to be called the department of commerce, to the same committee.

Also, resolutions of the select and common councils of Philadelphia, requesting such action as may be necessary to have the original chart of the Declaration of Independence preserved in Independence Hall, to the Committee on the Centennial Celebration.

Also, the petition of John D. Yerkes, for an increase of his pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina: Resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina, asking for such legislation as will secure an honest and just adjustment of the affairs of the Freedman's Savings Bank, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RUSK: Two petitions, one from citizens of La Crosse and and Jackson Counties, Minnesota, for a post-route from West Salem to Melrose; the other from citizens of Monroe and Jackson Counties, Minnesota, for a post-route from Melrose to Sparta, Minnesota, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of citizens of Bergen, Wisconsin, for cheap telegraphy, to the same committee.

By Mr. SAYLER: The petition of Henry Birch and other creditors of the District of Columbia, for a final settlement of their claims, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SPRINGER: The petition of citizens of Illinois, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. STRAIT: A joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, for an amendment to the act of Congress approved March 13, 1874, in relation to growing timber on western prairies, to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. WALSH: The petition of B. Brenner and other citizens of Washington County, Maryland, who feel aggrieved at the action of the electoral commission in refusing to take testimony concerning the frauds of the Louisiana and Florida returning boards, urging that the House exert every legal and constitutional means to defeat the consummation of the contemplated fraud, to the committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the electoral vote for President and Vice-President.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 27, 1877—10 a. m.

The recess having expired, the Senate resumed its session.

DRAINAGE OF TIBER CREEK VALLEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting a report of the engineer in charge of public works, made in obedience to the resolution of the Senate of June 8, 1876, relative to the drainage of Tiber Creek Valley, in the city of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WEST, Mr. HAMLIN, and Mr. BOGY the conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4187) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MERRIMON (at ten o'clock and fifteen minutes a. m.) presented the petition of Henry Birch and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, praying the passage of a law in order to give them relief as creditors; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MERRIMON, (at ten o'clock and forty-five minutes a. m.) I beg leave to present a concurrent resolution passed by the Legislature of North Carolina, urging Congress to pass some measure providing for the efficient and faithful administration of the affairs of the Freedman's Savings Bank, and to the end that whatever may be due the creditors of that bank shall be paid at as early a day as possible. The resolution is in the interest of the colored people of my State. I ask that it lie on the table.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest whether it is competent for the Senate to do anything of that kind now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WEST in the chair.) It is competent now, while the commission is in session.

Mr. WRIGHT. Was it not the understanding that there should be no legislative business transacted this morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is merely the presentation of a petition.

Mr. MERRIMON. I understood a while ago that such business is in order. I presented a memorial half an hour ago.

Mr. DAVIS. My understanding is, as the Senator from Iowa has suggested, that there should be no legislative business transacted before twelve o'clock. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MCDONALD] gave notice that he would call up at a certain hour the resolutions of the House in regard to the death of his former colleague, the late Speaker of the House, but it was distinctly announced by the Chair that there would be legislative business transacted. Of course, there is no objection to the presentation of a petition except this: If a petition may be offered to which there can be no objection, a bill could be called up and passed with the same propriety.

Mr. MERRIMON. The regular occupant of the chair a half hour ago admitted it to be in order to present petitions and memorials. I presented a petition then and there was no objection made to its reception. I can see no harm coming to the Senate or the public from the course of action pursued by the Chair.

Mr. DAVIS. I beg the Senator from North Carolina to remember that if he has a right to present a petition to which no one has any objection, he would also have a right to call up a bill and pass it to which many might have an objection who are now absent from the Senate. That is the only question I see in the reception of the resolution. Of conrse no one has any objection to it in any other view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia object to the reception of the memorial?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not specially object to this paper, but I give notice now that I shall object to all legislative business before twelve o'clock unless it is understood that we are to have legislative business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The memorial will lie on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAWES, (at ten o'clock and fifty-five minutes a. m.) I ask leave to present an amendment to an appropriation bill for the purpose of having it printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would prefer the Senator from Massachusetts to defer his request. It was the understanding that there should be no legislative business between the hours of ten and twelve. The Senator can present his amendment at any time after twelve o'clock.

Mr. DAWES. If it will not interfere with what has been assigned for this morning I should like to have the amendment printed, unless the understanding of the Senate is such that it would not be proper to have it done. I do not know what that understanding was.

Mr. WITHERS. I will call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the RECORD, in which the following proceedings occur:

Mr SARGENT. I suggest, then, that there shall be no legislative business between ten and twelve o'clock. ["Agreed."]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will then be the understanding that there will be no legislative business to-morrow until twelve o'clock.

Mr. DAWES. As this amendment would be considered legislative business I shall withhold it for the present.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SPEAKER KERR.

Mr. MCDONALD, (at eleven o'clock and four minutes a. m.) I desire to call up the resolutions of the House of Representatives in honor of the late Speaker, MICHAEL C. KERR, for present consideration. I ask that the resolutions be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions of the House of Representatives, as follows:

Resolved, That the sad announcement of the death of MICHAEL C. KERR, late member from the State of Indiana and Speaker of this House, is received by us in the deepest sorrow and profoundest regret; and that in his untimely decease the House of Representatives of the United States has lost an impartial, competent, and noble presiding officer, a faithful and patriotic member.

Resolved, That in testimony of our respect for the memory of the deceased Speaker, his chair be draped in mourning during the unfinished term of the Forty-fourth Congress, and as a further evidence of our continuing esteem for the dead, the officers and members of this House will wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.

Resolved, That the Senate be informed of the death of the late Speaker by forwarding to that body a copy of these resolutions, and that the Clerk transmit a copy of the same to the afflicted family of the illustrious dead.

Mr. MCDONALD. Mr. President, it has not occurred before in our history that upon the records of the same Congress have been placed resolutions of respect to the memories of the presiding officers of the two Houses. Just before the opening of the first session of the present Congress, and while many of its members were on their way to attend its sittings, the country was startled by the news of the death of the Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate, and before they had all reached their homes at the close of the session, another national loss had been sustained in the death of the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

In uniting with the House in doing honor to the memory of its late chief officer, those of us who had the good fortune to know him well can bear witness to the great loss our country sustained, taken as he was in the meridian of life and in the midst of his labors, and also of that great bereavement suffered by his family and his friends; for while by his laborious and faithful discharge of the public duties intrusted to him and his unbending devotion to principle he had made for himself a position in the front rank of the public men of his country, his kind and gentle nature had enshrined him the idol of the social and domestic circle in which he moved, and when death removed him from it a void was left that can never be filled.

MICHAEL C. KERR was a native of the State of Pennsylvania, and was born at Titusville, in that State, March 15, 1827, but about the time he had attained his majority he left his native State and cast his fortunes in the then great West, and after completing his legal studies, by graduating in the law department of the Louisville University, began the practice of his profession in the city of New Albany, in the State of Indiana, in 1852, and from that time until his death he was a beloved and honored citizen of that State and city. He was soon called into public life, first in the line of his profession, and gave promise of attaining to its highest honors, but in a short time was elected to represent the county of Floyd in the Legislature of the State, and made his first appearance in political life in January, 1857, when he took his seat in that body. My acquaintance was formed with him during that session and it grew into a friendship that increased in warmth and strength to the day of his death. His studious habits and close attention to the duties of his position marked him at that early day as one of the rising young men of the State.

In the fall of 1864 he was elected a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress from his district and continued to serve in that body, with the exception of the Forty-third Congress, until the close of his life, having been elected its Speaker at the beginning of the present Congress. It was in this service that he became known to the people of the whole country and established for himself a national reputation, and it was in the laborious discharge of the duties which devolved upon him as one of the active and leading members of that body that a constitution not naturally strong was impaired and the seeds of disease planted which brought him to an untimely grave.

Mr. KERR was naturally a student, and his mind was well stored with solid and substantial facts, especially relating to the science of government and political economy; but after he had turned his attention to politics he studied with great care the political history of his country that he might better understand the frame-work and structure of the Government, and especially those elementary principles which underlie that structure. In his public life as an actor he always, and under all circumstances, asserted his convictions; few men possessed a moral courage equal to him and none superior, and no apprehensions of the loss of popular favor could induce him to stifle his conviction or compromise his principles. Indeed it may well be said that his expressed political principles were at all times but the reflex of his convictions. Not naturally a fluent speaker, yet by study and practice he became a ready and strong debater, and at times his earnestness, almost unconsciously to himself, grew into eloquence; but his constant aim was to convince the judgment of his hearers and never to influence their action by appeals to their passions or their prejudices.

But his highest qualities were exhibited in that sublime courage with which he combated the steady approach of death, and the calmness with which he looked forward to the fatal hour. Anxious to live, and yet with a painful consciousness that his days were numbered and that no mortal hand could pluck out the fatal arrow that Death had planted in his system, he seemed to rise above all fear and to move forward on the path of duty with a courage and fortitude that never for one moment faltered. He seemed to be constantly saying to himself, "I should not fear, nor yet should I wish for my last day to come; and until it does come I must not be idle nor waste my time in vain regrets." And so, Mr. President, he lived and so he died—died working on to the close of his life.

His was the true courage, "not the brutal force of vulgar heroes but the firm resolve of virtue and of reason." He filled every station to which he was called, public and private, with honor. He honored the city in which he lived, and his name is there cherished as a household word. He honored the district which had conferred upon him its highest favors, and his memory will be long held in reverence by his people. He honored the State of his adoption, and it will preserve his name upon the roll of its most illustrious citizens. He honored the high place to which he was called by the representatives of the whole people, and for that we this day place his name "in memoriam" upon the records of the Congress of the nation, there to remain for all time; but we cannot restore to his family and friends the light and life that went out from them when he was called from their midst.

Mr. President, I send to the desk resolutions for adoption by the Senate. I will state that the resolution in regard to adjournment is not now to be put.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, it is fitting that we of Pennsylvania should second these resolutions and bring our tribute to the worth and the character of one of the sons of her soil. MICHAEL C. KERR was a type of the race from which he sprang. The physical form and mental characteristics of the man both proclaimed that he was one of those who trace their lineage and their ancestry to the hills of Scotland. The valleys and hills of Central, Southern, and Western Pennsylvania were largely peopled by them. The habits of life and the modes of thought of that race have become deeply graven upon whole masses of our people, and have in turn impressed themselves upon every section of the Republic. Wherever this people have planted themselves within our borders there are found prosperous settlements, happy homes, and peaceful communities. Indomitable energy, an iron will, economical habits, purity of character, a hatred of shams and devotion to truth, invariably marked the best specimens of the race, and nature was only true to herself when she stamped these qualities indelibly upon the late Speaker of the House of Representatives. A blameless life, intelligent and honest performance of high public duties, the respect of all who knew him, and the warm attachments of his party to his fortunes as a safe and prudent leader, marked his public career. As I learned to know him no trait in his character was so clearly defined as his hatred to all hypocrisy, his earnest devotion to truth. He seemed to recognize this as the chief part of every virtue. The political maxim "that those who know not how to dissemble know not how to rule" found no believer in him. The saying of the ancient Greek, "it was for slaves to lie and for freemen to speak truth," was much nearer his political creed and practice. Vigorous in speech, logical in argument, industrious in research, and courteous in debate, it is not strange that he should come to be recognized as a leader in the Forty-first, Forty-second, and Forty-fourth Congresses, nor is it surprising that with his purity of character and party record he should be chosen to the high place in which death found him.

Standing at his open grave we acquire a profound sense of the fleeting character of earthly honors and of the brittleness of the thread that suspends us over the dread unknown. To-day it is life, with its glittering trifles, its busy cares, its choicest gifts; to-morrow, death, the grave, eternity.

To us who stand where he stood—dedicated to the public service—the record of this man's life and death is an example, clear, well defined, and luminous.

It is the proud record of an honest public servant.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, in this country the highest type of American manhood and in the very forefront of the nobility of mankind may be found, not infrequently, those who in early professional life leave their homes in New England and other States and identify themselves with the ever alive, adventurous, and stirring people of the great and growing West. The young lawyer in this grand new arena, with prairies boundless, landscapes unsurpassed, all the experiences of an extensive practice, the friction, conflict, and yet esprit de corps found in court terms and court-room, circuit-court life, circuit-court travel, circuit-court acquaintance, and by his early participation in political and all the contests of a frontier and new life, such a person, I say, finds in all education and instruction, and soon becomes the highest type of the western and American statesman, lawyer, and citizen. For in all these things there are inspiring and elevating influences. The experiences may in many instances be hard and unusually severe, but the young disciple of the law thereby passes "through the rough brake," and thus he is the more likely to "come out tried and true." He may be poor, but his poverty is his stimulant; he may have trials, but these are for his purification; he meets with reverses, but such buffetings make him even more a power in his new home; he meets with strong opposition, and this but makes his will-power still more a power; and thus each day he gives renewed evidence of that true worth, that genuine virtue which tells upon the destinies of senates, the commons, the people, and the nation, and which oft is

> Sooner found in lowly sheds,
> With smoky rafters,
> Than in tapestried halls and
> Court of princes.

To this class belonged MICHAEL C. KERR, the true lawyer, the earnest prosecutor of the pleas of the State, the careful legislator, the painstaking reporter of the decisions of the highest tribunal of his adopted State, the modest and dignified Representative in the Congress of the nation, the impartial and able presiding officer of that body where he was for years among its leaders; the man of iron will, uncorruptible integrity, a noble specimen of the true American statesman. He represented, and well, the State which I am but too proud to acknowledge as that of my birth, the land of my early struggles with poverty, the State which by its kindly legislation afforded to myself as well as others the means for an education which might otherwise have been unattainable, the State to which I shall ever refer with the gratitude of a child, and to his memory, as the chosen of the people, I would assist at this time in paying some humble tribute.

It was said of the deceased that he seemed to have little special fitness for public life; and yet that he not only never attempted the arts of the demagogue, but loathed them in his inmost soul; that he loved his profession, the law, and sought its honors; that his opinions in committee and elsewhere were those of the jurist, and not of the politician, and that so strong was his will and so absolute were his convictions that it was impossible for him to trim or play the time-server. Now, Mr. President, if such a man had not special fitness, entitling him to the highest places in public life, then my ideas of the true statesman are sadly at fault. The arts of the demagogue are not those of the statesman, nor do they ever fit a man for that work which leads to the upbuilding of humanity and the highest interest of our common country. In proportion as the man in public life loathes such arts, he becomes safe and wise in legislation and entitled to confidence in places of the highest trust. And so firmly impressed am I with the great conservative influence of the true lawyer, so often have I been led to bear witness to the worth and value of the able and thoughtful jurist in matters of public concern, and so highly do I prize the man who stands by his convictions, not to be turned aside by the motives influencing the trimmer and time-server, that I accept such men as having admirable fitness for public life, a fitness which leads almost necessarily to true greatness, a fitness which places its possessor in the front rank of the profession and the highest statesmanship.

The life and character of MICHAEL C. KERR bear witness that he had this fitness and belonged to this class. In proportion as we shall have such men we shall have judicious legislation and added security to our country and its institutions. We need to cast out all demagogues, all trimmers and time-servers, all acting for policy, all merely expediency legislators, all letting out or taking in sail to catch the popular breeze, all trembling, uneasy hands with fingers upon the public pulse, all whose courage shall be measured by the stock market or the persistence of a lobby, and install in their places those who know their duty and do it, who, defying all opposition, move unflinchingly to the fulfillment of every trust, and who, when the end is reached, the result attained, feel that they have stood by the cause of their country, their God, and truth.

When the true man dies the world should indeed mourn. For such the Senate, the nation, and the friends of good government mourn to-day. He succeeded in life because those who knew him had confidence in his integrity and uprightness. He won distinction because he industriously studied our institutions and fearlessly and courageously maintained his views upon all questions demanding his attention. He took the highest rank because he marched in a straight line to his conclusions, ever exhibiting judicial fairness and the most unquestioned candor. He made friends because he had great goodness of heart, because to those who knew him best he was warm-hearted, kindly, and affectionate. He was the peer of the noblest of those around him because with good natural ability he had energy indomitable, perseverance unflinching, convictions the most abiding, and ever sought to make honest inquiry for truth.

One so panoplied and so endowed could not but succeed. The world owes such men victory, and whether the debt is paid grudgingly or otherwise it will be extorted, and it were idle to attempt to withhold it. Wife, children, friends, parties, the nation, should ever be proud of one so gifted and rejoice in his triumphs. That we may be led to cherish his virtues, give encouragement to all to emulate his example, and enrich our own hearts by the memory of his many and varied attainments and excellences, it is meet that we should pause in our pressing duties and look, as we now do, upon his new-made grave, cast thereon our garlands of good-will, esteem, affection, love, and renew our assurance of profound sympathy and condolence for the members of the stricken household who this day most deeply mourn his loss.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I never knew a man to whom indiscriminate eulogy would have been more distasteful and repulsive than the straightforward, single-minded gentleman whose death I now rise to deplore. Power will ever have its parasites, who cling to it, not to aid it but to suck from it their discreditable sustenance. What the courtier is to the monarchy the demagogue is to popular government.

MICHAEL C. KERR could never have been either.

> He would not have flattered Neptune for his trident,
> Or Jove for his power to thunder.

He would have told the truth as he knew it, despite the frowns of a king, and with equal fidelity would he tell it to the people even when threatening and excited by misapprehension and urged to harm by "false prophets." Mr. KERR was one of the quiet workers of Congress, who, remote from public view in those places where the real labors of legislation are performed, did his duty in steady, painstaking conscientiousness.

The incense of popular applause was not needed to urge him to his work. But whether in the full gaze of the public or in the seclusion of the committee-room, he was faithfully occupied in the performance of his duty,

> As ever in the great Taskmaster's eye.

Thus his fame burned with a steady luster; and as his reputation rose its base broadened upon the substantial qualities of honesty, fidelity, and sterling intellectual capacities. Although a vigorous and impressive debater, his gifts were not showy but solid, and he forced his delicate physique unsparingly to make these gifts most useful to his fellow-men—

> Sure the eternal Master found
> His single talent well employed.

I served here in Congress with Mr. KERR during years of anxious and critical interest. We were members of a weak minority, and during our association never entered upon a contest in these halls of legislation without plainly discerning at the end of the struggle defeat awaiting us. This habitual defeat, while it did not diminish the ardor of Mr. KERR in pursuit of duty, yet wore upon his physical health, and it may be said without exaggeration that his labors in behalf of the public caused his premature death.

One feature of the pulmonary disease under which Mr. KERR sank is a hopefulness on the part of the sufferer deluding him into a belief in his recovery, even to the last faint effort of expiring nature. In such a condition of health he went into the high place of Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States with the hand of death resting upon him, unknown to him, but unhappily visible to those who surrounded him. His fine mental powers shone undiminished, and the man within was high-toned and true-hearted as ever.

I well remember calling upon him at his lodgings in this city, as he lay faint and gasping for breath upon his couch, and when that fell spirit of slander, "which loves a shining mark," had aimed its relentless and poisoned arrows at his reputation, I took his wasted hand in mine and uttered a few words in reference to the shameless and futile assault, dictated by the unscrupulousness of partisan malignity. His answer was a sad smile as his honest eyes looked into mine, and a pressure of the hand responded to the unquestioning confidence I felt and had expressed that these dishonest missiles of political assault would shiver themselves against the granite base of integrity upon which his life was built. He lived to see his slanderers promptly rebuked by the unanimous report of the committee appointed by the House to investigate the charges, condemning his accusers and exonerating him from even the suspicion of misconduct. This report was sustained by the unanimous vote of the House, and the voice of honest men of all parties in every part of the Republic. The closer the scrutiny the more the moral worth of the man became apparent. His death was a loss to his country; his example should be cherished, and the memory of his life and character be embalmed in the affection and respect of the American people.

Mr. BOOTH. Mr. President, the conditions of American life change so rapidly that representative types of American character are not likely to be reproduced. Franklin, Samuel Adams, Washington, Jackson, Clay, Lincoln, will have no historical parallels. The race of western pioneers will soon be as extinct as the Puritans, and will have no successor.

Modern life, so abounding in the use of tools, machinery, and intellectual aids, is not favorable to the formation of individuality of character, and native individuality must be strong to survive the repressive influence of custom and conventionalism. The character of MICHAEL C. KERR was so strongly marked that a stranger meeting him on the street would have received a distinct impression of the man.

His public career needs little reference from me. It was not my fortune to know him personally until the last year of his life—when the shadow of the dark valley was already upon him. How he struggled with pain and disease; how his iron will supplied the place of physical strength, and forced his tired body to bear the burdens of his great office until his breath grew too short for utterance and his feet too weary to bear their load, is known to us all.

The fortitude, endurance, courage, patience which he evinced in this struggle were typical of his character. He knew that death would conquer, but he fought for every inch of time. He had never counted the odds in any contest and he would not even when the grim monster was his antagonist. Life with him was so earnest that even sickness brought no respite from labor and responsibility.

Almost the whole of his manhood was spent in public office, and he died poor in worldly goods—as most men do who devote themselves to the public service. He was careful in all the details of his duties. He never spared himself, and nothing was so minute as to escape his conscientious attention; nothing which pertained to duty was insignificant in his eyes.

His purposes were so intense that I think his life was serious even to sadness. Pursuing his own line of thought, amusements and society had little attraction for him. He was fond of general literature, but disciplined his taste even in that to make it tributary to the main purpose of his life. He was slow in forming his opinions, but once formed they were a part of his life. No one can penetrate the inner life of another and realize the long preparation, the conflict of doubt, the struggle of intellect, the throes of thought which precede the opinion so positive in utterance, or the decision that seems instant as lightning when occasion comes.

In the discharge of his public duties Mr. KERR was never moved by the pleadings of immediate special interests, however powerful or plausible, to neglect or betray the interests of the people from whose loins he sprang, whose burdens he respected. He would not yield to the solicitings of friendship, the blandishments of flattery or the temptations of interest. He was almost destitute of imagination, and had little enthusiasm, but his intense earnestness gave to his utterances a fervor that had the semblance of both. He never sought the easy way of doing, but instinctively took hold of the heavy end. Life with him meant work, not dalliance; duty, not pleasure.

With his opinions on the great questions that culminated in and grew out of our civil war, I differed, toto cœlo. They are differences I gladly forget at his grave. Cannot we all now allow these differences to be buried in the grave of the past? Can we not regard the conflict through which we have passed as an inevitable event of history which no statesmanship could avert, and respect its awful loss of life as a common sorrow, a sacrifice which fate had decreed to liberty and union?

If we cannot, if strife must perpetuate itself and passion harden into hatred, the sun of our national existence which rose upon so fair a morn will be hidden by clouds and go down in tempests.

In times of great political excitement like these, the man who dies in public station falls like the soldier in the heat of battle, when the lines close, comrades press forward, and the fight goes on. In the distant home something passes from the life of love which was most dear to it, and which nothing that is or shall be can ever replace. We miss the voice that was strong in debate; others the tones that were tender with love. A manly presence has gone from our midst; the footsteps that gladdened a home have gone down to the grave.

The tribute of respect which we pay seems formal from oft repetition; there is a sorrow which is speechless, a grief which is tearless.

Thus through life every heart must bear its own sorrow, its own grief, its own precious memory, sanctuaried from the eye of curiosity, where the voice of sympathy cannot reach, and the touch of healing cannot come.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I have known Mr. KERR since 1861. Our personal relations were never intimate. We were never thrown together in any way. I met him from time to time and have been familiar with his political history and reputation.

We lived in a State somewhat distinguished of late years for the bitterness of its political contests. While he and I were on different sides yet our personal relations were always good, and I now take pleasure in bearing testimony to his memory.

The character of Mr. KERR for integrity has never been impeached. Some charges that were recently made against him since he was Speaker of the House of Representatives were not believed at all by his political antagonists. I can say that the republicans of Indiana did not believe these charges. I did not, and it may be said that Mr. KERR's character for integrity has never been impeached or suspected. I take pleasure in bearing testimony to his high character as an honest man. Mr. KERR has always been regarded as occupying a higher plane of politics than most politicians. He has been regarded as a man who was devoted to principle and who pursued principles to their logical results. Intellectually he was very able; a man of fine ability. He was a student. He has always been regarded as laborious. Especially was he a student of political economy. He was much better acquainted with the principles of political economy than most men in public life. He has made them his study for years. He was always regarded as a student, with a fine knowledge of general literature and of history, but especially a student in all those branches of knowledge relating to politics and the Constitution of his country. His name will be remembered with pride and with affection in Indiana. He was one of her most highly favored and gifted sons and it gives me satisfaction to bear testimony to his patriotism. I believe he was a devout lover of his country and went for that which he believed was for the best. I have always given him credit for his integrity, for his patriotism, and for love of his country, and the strongest testimony which I can bear to the character of Mr. KERR is to say that he was regarded by men of all parties in Indiana as an honest man, an able man, a patriotic man, and that his death was mourned by all his neighbors and by all who knew him without distinction of party.

In some respects he was a remarkable man. His ability was not of the common order and as was said by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] it was more solid than it was showy, with a great power of analysis and with great capacity for labor. But few public men have died who have left behind them a clearer or a better record than MICHAEL C. KERR, and he died possessing the esteem of good men without distinction of party.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will now report the resolutions offered by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MCDONALD.]

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with profound sensibility the sad announcement of the death of Hon. MICHAEL C. KERR, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Indiana, and Speaker of that House.

Resolved, That as a mark of the respect entertained by the members of the Senate for the high character, pure patriotism, and eminent public services of the late Speaker of the House of Representatives they will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

PRAYER.

At twelve o'clock m. prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

JOURNAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate continues in session. The Secretary will read the Journal of yesterday.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RATES OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

I have the honor to return herewith Senate bill No. 234, entitled, "An act to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and leg." Under existing law, soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg are entitled to draw a monthly pension of $18. The object of the bill is to allow them $18 per month for each of these disabilities, or $36 in all. It is returned simply for an amendment of the title which usually agrees with its provisions. When this shall have been done I will very gladly give it my approval.

U. S. GRANT.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that by unanimous consent the title of this bill, which, by inadvertence, was sent to the House for concurrence as at the rate of $37 a month, be changed to $36, which is the rate established in the body of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this correction? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SARGENT. The bill is passed now, I suppose, and ready for the signature of the President without further action?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is passed, and will now go to the President as corrected.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, accompanied by a copy of the preliminary report of Major John M. Wilson, Corps of Engineers, upon the construction of the canal around the Cascades of the Columbia River, Oregon, with an approximate estimate of the cost of the work; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WHYTE presented the petition of Morris B. Slosson, of Baltimore, Maryland, formerly of Battery H, First Pennsylvania Reserve Light Artillery, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of T. M. Harris, of Wheeling, West Virginia, and 34 others, praying an amendment of the pension laws so as to allow arrears of pensions; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of George W. Atkinson and others, of Charlestown, West Virginia, praying an amendment of the pension laws so as to allow arrears of pensions; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented papers in relation to the claim of John W. Athey, of Mineral County, West Virginia, for compensation for transportation of the mails in Virginia in the years 1861 and 1862; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHARON presented the petition of D. B. Immel & Co., and others, bankers in the State of Nevada, praying the repeal of all taxes by the General Government on deposits, circulation, and capital of banks; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, requesting her Representatives and directing her Senators to use their influence to secure the annexation of the southern portion of the Territory of Utah to the State of Nevada; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. CONKLING presented resolutions of the Board of Trade of Buffalo, New York, favoring the erection of a light-house and fog-signal on Stannard's Rock, Lake Michigan; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONOVER presented a petition of a large number of prominent citizens of the District of Columbia, praying to be allowed the use of the Rotunda of the Capitol for the purpose of holding the usual inauguration ball therein in March, 1877; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WALLACE presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, in favor of the establishment of a new executive department of the Government, to be called the department of commerce; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, in favor of Congress taking steps to secure American commerce immunity from the payment of light-dues to ports of Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of 130 citizens of Potter County, Pennsylvania, praying for a repeal of the limitation upon filing pension claims and an amendment of the pension laws so as to allow arrears of pensions; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Bridget Muldoon, of the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, legatee of Samuel Higgins, late fireman in the United States Navy, praying for payment of prize-money awarded for the capture of the ram Albemarle; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BOGY presented a petition of letter-carriers of Saint Louis, Missouri, praying the passage of the bill of the House providing for the restoration of the salaries of letter-carriers to their former grades; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Texas County, Missouri, praying for cheap telegraphic communication, and for the transfer of the telegraph business to the superintendence of the Post-Office Department; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WINDOM presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, directing her Senators and requesting her Representatives in Congress to oppose the passage of House bill No. 394, relating to pensioners; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the establishment of a post-route from Lake Park to Crookston, in the State of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MCDONALD. I present the petition of Fisk Mills, sculptor, &c., praying the correction of Report No. 515, made August 2, 1876, on the bill (S. No. 511) to compensate Fisk Mills for the plaster model of General Rawlins. I move that it be filed with the report made August 15, 1876.

The motion was agreed to.

SETTLERS ON LANDS DEVASTATED BY GRASSHOPPERS.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back the bill (S. No. 1063) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands. I am very certain that no Senator will be opposed to it and I should like very much to put it on its passage as I shall be compelled to be out of the Senate during the morning hour nearly all the rest of the time. It is simply for the relief of settlers on lands devastated by grasshoppers, giving them one year longer during which they may be absent from their lands if again devastated by that scourge.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1063) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments: In lines 6 and 7, to strike out "1876" and insert "1877;" in line 8, to strike out "July, 1877" and insert "October, 1878;" in line 12, to strike out "1877" and insert "1878;" in line 14, to strike out "1878" and insert "1879;" so as to read:

That it shall be lawful for homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands or pre-emption settlers on Indian reservations, where crops were destroyed or seriously injured by grasshoppers in the year 1877, to leave and be absent from said lands until the 1st day of October, 1878, under such rules and regulations as to proof of the same as the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall prescribe; and where such grasshoppers shall re-appear in 1879, to the like destruction or injury of crops, the right to leave and be absent as aforesaid shall continue to July 1, 1879; and during such absence no adverse rights shall attach to said lands, such settlers being allowed to resume and perfect their settlement as though no such absence had occurred.

SEC. 2. That the time for making final proof and payment by pre-emptors whose crops have been destroyed or injured as aforesaid is hereby extended for one year arfter the expiration of the term of absence provided for in the first section of this act; and all the rights and privileges extended by this act to homestead and pre-emption settlers shall apply to and include the settlers under an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on western prairies," approved March 3, 1873, and the acts amendatory thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY REGISTER FOR 1877.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 500 copies of the Army Register for 1877 be printed for the use of the Senate.

NAVY REGISTER FOR 1877.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 500 copies of the Navy Register for 1877 be printed for the use of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1876.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to whom was referred a resolution of the House of Representatives to print 300,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1876, have instructed me to report back the same without recommendation.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution. It is a House concurrent resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. I think we had better go through with the morning business.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think there will be no objection to this resolution. It provides for printing the usual number of agricultural reports heretofore authorized for publication.

Mr. INGALLS. It would undoubtedly occasion debate. We had better go through the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution cannot be considered at this time.

ELI TEEGARDEN.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1197) for the relief of Eli Teegarden, to report it without amendment, and as it only involves the sum of $50 and it would cost the party infinitely more trouble to get it if the bill does not pass now, and as it is perfectly just and recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, being a balance due which cannot be paid unless appropriated by Congress, I ask that the bill be put on its passage now. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending it. The Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] remembers the case very well. I think the Senate ought to act upon it now and dispose of the bill at once. The matter is too small to put the man to any trouble again, and it is perfectly just and ought to pass.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Eli Teegarden, of California, $50.34, being the amount of a balance due him March 31, 1875, on his account as receiver of public moneys at the land office at Marysville, California.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2601) authorizing the Commissioner of Pensions to issue a land warrant to Thomas Hunter, a soldier of the war of 1812, in lieu of one lost, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2114) to give parties contestant time to file on or enter lands under the pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture acts after the contest shall have been finally decided, reported it without amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1055) to provide for the free distribution of public documents already printed or ordered to be printed, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was agreed to.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3370) to amend the statutes in relation to damages for infringement of patents, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1255) for the relief of Henry Voelter, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I am instructed by the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1262) to cure defects in certain letters-patent for inventions and designs, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill and the amendment of the committee, which was to insert at the end of the bill the following:

That the assistant commissioner shall, when directed by the Commissioner, hear and determine all matters heretofore appealable to the Commissioner in person, and that in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Commissioner his duties shall devolve upon the assistant commissioner until a successor be appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.

Mr. WITHERS. Is the bill just reported from committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. WADLEIGH. The bill, in the first place, simply legalizes the acts of the Acting Commissioner of Patents, and the amendment confers upon him the authority to act in the absence of the Commissioner, or when there is none, a provision which the Revised Statutes does not now provide for.

Mr. CONKLING. Was it ever provided before the Revised Statutes were published?

Mr. WADLEIGH. I do not know whether it was or not. It certainly is not provided now.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not like to object to this bill. I should be glad however to understand it better than I do before it is acted upon. If in order, I make one observation to the Senator from New Hampshire to account for my remarks. There are I believe few officers in this Government whose functions are more important than those of the Commissioner of Patents. I do not believe there is a patent lawyer in this country too good, or a man whose time is too valuable to be devoted to the duties of that office. Indeed, I think that if an increase of salary or anything else could insure always the presence there of a man thoroughly instructed as a lawyer and a mechanic, it would be an excellent investment. The bill, if I understand it, proposes to commit to whoever may be Acting Commissioner for the time being, during the temporary absence of the Commissioner——

Mr. WADLEIGH. To the asistsant commissioner.

Mr. CONKLING. The assistant commissioner, whoever may be an assistant commissioner for the time being. The bill proposes to commit to him the right to hear all questions, some of them very large questions, large in principle and large in effect, which may be heard by the Commissioner of Patents. I am not prepared to say at this moment that this is not wise; but the bill being reported, and on the moment action being asked, I suggest to the Senator that it would be well to let it lie until we can look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in the nature of an objection.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I have no objection to let the bill lie over until to-morrow morning, and then I shall call it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4418) to pay William L. Scruggs, late minister at Bogota, from October 10 to November 21, 1876, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1149) to authorize the purchase of a site for a public building at Denver, Colorado, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 969) for the relief of Charles H. Johnson, late first lieutenant of the Fifteenth Michigan Infantry, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of James O. Thompson praying to be relieved of disability to prosecute a claim for pension in consequence of being dismissed the service of the Army of the United States, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1286) to remove the disabilities of James O. Thompson, late captain Company I, Seventeenth Maine Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) authorizing the issue of clothing to Private Patrick Noonan, Company G, Fifth United States Infantry, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) authorizing the issue of clothing to Private Francis Hegner, Company F, Seventh Cavalry, and Private John C. Collins, Company G, Seventh Cavalry, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 177) authorizing the issue of clothing to Sergeant Herman Theune, Company I, Twenty-third United States Infantry, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 175) authorizing the issue of clothing to Company A, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1048) to establish the Territory of the Black Hills and to provide a temporary government therefor, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1249) granting the right of way through the public lands to the Golden, Georgetown and Central Railroad Company, reported it with amendments.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent that the report from the Committee on Printing for additional numbers of the Agricultural report be considered now. It is very short, and no one can object to the printing of the Agricultural report, I reckon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the majority of the committee are opposed to it.

Mr. DAVIS. The resolution has just been reported from the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution cannot be considered at this time.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 298) granting a pension to William C. Edmondson, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3319) granting a pension to Lemuel L. Lawrence, late second lieutenant of Company B, in the Sixth Illinois Cavalry Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4117) for the relief of Colonel Frank L. Woolford, late of the First Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, of certain disabilities, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 470) for the relief of John S. Wood, late a first lieutenant in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1003) to restore Benjamin P. Runkle to the retired list of the Army, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2019) for the relief of Edwin Morgan, late captain of Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, reported it without amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1216) to provide for the preparation and publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. No. 4692) establishing post-roads; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 1231) for the relief of the board of trustees of the Antietam national cemetery;

A bill (H. R. No. 1947) granting to the city of Stevens Point, Wisconsin, a certain piece of land;

A bill (H. R. No. 2197) for the relief of Henry B. Kelly, of Louisiana, from political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment;

A bill (H. R. No. 3093) for the relief of the legal representatives of Zachariah B. Washburn, deceased; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3566) to authorize the board of trustees of the city of Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, to enter and purchase for the use of said city certain public lands.

STATUE OF LIBERTY IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 196) authorizing the President to designate and set apart a site for the colossal statue of "Liberty enlightening the world," and to provide for the permanent maintenance and preservation thereof, to report it without amendment. As this is a matter entirely of courtesy to a number of patriotic Frenchmen and citizens of this country, I ask the Senate to act upon it at once. It costs no money.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREDERICK HINKEL.

Mr. EATON. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of Frederick Hinkel, of New York, praying to be absolved from his allegiance as a citizen of the United States, to report a joint resolution to that effect. We report favorably as far as the petition is concerned, but ask that the bill (S. No. 1196) to absolve Frederick Hinkel from his allegiance as a citizen of the United States of America be indefinitely postponed and a resolution submitted in its place shall pass. I hope there will be no objection to it, as it obtained the unanimous consent of the committee, and that it shall be acted upon at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be postponed indefinitely and the joint resolution considered at the present time, if there be no objection.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 32) providing for the renunciation of the naturalization of Frederick Hinkel, was read twice by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that an official notification from the government of the North German Empire of the employment of Mr. Frederick Hinkel in the consular or diplomatic service of that government, accompanied by a renunciation in writing by Hinkel of his naturalization in the United States, may be accepted by the President as evidence of a renunciation of such naturalization equivalent in effect to the residence of two years in his former country without intent to return to the United States, provided for in the fourth article of the treaty of February 22, 1868, between the United States and the North German Confederation.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1287) to establish a post-route in the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 33) authorizing the official publication of the decisions of the Interior Department relating to the public lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred the Committee on Public Lands.

J. L. M. CURRY.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask leave to introduce a bill to remove the political disabilities of J. L. M. Curry, of Virginia. The case was presented to the Committee on the Judiciary and reported against for want of a petition. The petition has now been furnished, and I have it here. I had an interview with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, who told me that I could call up the bill, and I have his consent in regard to action upon it at this time. I ask the present consideration of the bill. A petition from the party accompanies it.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1285) to remove the political disabilities of J. L. M. Curry, of Virginia; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not wish to antagonize my friend from Virginia, but it is certainly most unusual to introduce a bill and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Iowa objects, the bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not think the Senator will object if he listens to an explanation which I will make. Some time ago I received a letter from Mr. Curry asking me to have his political disabilities removed. I supposed that was sufficient, and I presented that letter as a petition for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary. When the matter came before the committee, they did not consider it to be a sufficient petition, and the committee asked to be discharged from the further consideration of it. I wrote to Mr. Curry and received his petition, which I present with the bill. I then went to the chairman of the committee [Mr. EDMUNDS] and showed him the petition, and obtained his consent to introduce this bill and to say that Mr. Curry's case had been before the committee, and the only objection was the want of a petition, and he would have no objection to its passage. I trust the Senator from Iowa will make no objection.

Mr. WRIGHT. Do I understand that the chairman of the committee has examined this case and has no objection to it and consents that the bill be passed?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do, sir.

Mr. WRIGHT. Of course the Senator will understand that when we reported back upon the letter we were not required to examine anything beyond what was before us, and any question that may be outside of that of course has never come before the committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The chairman of the committee gave me permission to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. If the chairman of the committee has examined this matter and it is satisfactory to him, I shall not object.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I showed the petition to him and obtained his consent to the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. He has no objection to the passage of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, sir.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state in addition that a petition from Mr. Curry was sent to the Forty-third Congress, and the bill passed both Houses of Congress, but failed for want of time in being transmitted to the President.

Mr. WRIGHT. I only wish to enter my protest against passing the bill; but if the chairman of the committee has given his consent, knowing how careful he is and how particular on this subject, I shall make no objection.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the case.

By unanimous consent the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. BURNSIDE it was Ordered, That Hannah L. Lloyd have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers accompanying Senate bill 824.

On motion of Mr. HITCHCOCK it was Ordered, That Jesse L. Fort be allowed to withdraw papers in relation to his claim for depredations by Indians, on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate.

MONEYS DUE THE DOMINICAN GOVERNMENT.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate any communication received by him demanding the payment of moneys claimed to be now due the Dominican government from the Government of the United States.

AMENDMENTS TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COOPER, Mr. DAWES, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. INGALLS, Mr. McDONALD, Mr. MITCHELL, and Mr. WEST submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. GORDON presented the credentials of John T. Morgan, elected by the Legislature of the State of Alabama a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1877; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. OGLESBY presented the credentials of David Davis, elected by the Legislature of the State of Illinois a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1877; which were read and ordered to be filed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. No. 1539) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River from some feasible point in Buffalo County, in the State of Wisconsin, to some feasible point in Winona County, in the State of Minnesota, be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

BUILDING FOR THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

Mr. HOWE. I ask the Senate to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 1231. I want to get the views of the Senate upon the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. What is it about?

Mr. HOWE. It is to provide for additional accommodations for the Library of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to make a report from a committee.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator will have opportunity to do that after the bill is taken up.

Mr. BLAINE. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if the idea is to put the bill on its passage?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it be reported for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. MORRILL. I must say that I object to this proposition; not that I object to any proposition for a public library, but I would object most strenuously against a proposition of absolute ruin to the architectural beauty of this building, and merely providing, as it would, for a temporary accommodation of the library, going to the extent only of a few years, when it will become as necessary for us to have a public library building as it is to-day.

Mr. HOWE. I had not a doubt but what the Senator from Vermont would object to the passage of this bill. I suppose he does not object to the consideration of it. Other Senators will object to the passage of the bill, but every Senator here, I think, will agree that some provision should be made for the accommodation of the Library of Congress; and no provision can possibly be made until you lay some plan before the Senate. If the Senate does not like the plan that is first proposed, some one will propose a better one. After several years of industrious effort the committee has come to the conclusion that it is impossible for them to invent, and probably impossible for the Almighty himself to design a plan that would be satisfactory to everybody in the Senate. I am not sure but it would be impossible for Him to design a plan that would be satisfactory to the majority, but that is the question we want to solve. The committee has submitted several plans heretofore differing from this. Now, they propose to try this, to hear what the Senate shall say about it, and will be extremely glad to hear all other and all better suggestions than this.

I simply ask, now, that the bill shall be taken up and that the Senate shall say what they please about this bill, and make such better suggestions as they can. That is all I want.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind the Senator that there is unfinished business which will follow at the conclusion of the morning hour.

Mr. HOWE. Then that would cut us off at one o'clock.

Mr. SARGENT. It will be impossible to have this bill considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be temporarily laid aside.

REPORT ON CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SARGENT. I submit the report of the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress on Chinese immigration, which I ask to have printed with the testimony.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed under the rule. Is there objection to having it printed with the testimony? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, while I agree in great part with what is contained in the very able report of the Senator from California, yet I do not altogether concur in the views which have been taken in regard to the evidence, and I desire to present my views upon the subject. During the last two months I have absolutely been unable to find time to review the evidence and to prepare anything in the form of a report. I ask leave to file my views, as soon as I can prepare them, which will be perhaps two or three days after the end of the session. I am not able to do it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Indiana filing his views in regard to this matter? The Chair hears none.

SUSAN P. VANCE.

Mr. MORTON. There is a small bill here which I desire to have passed, if possible, to which I think there is no objection. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2833) for the relief of Susan P. Vance, as I am compelled to leave here in a few minutes, and perhaps cannot get back very soon.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It appropriates $2,640, to pay Susan P. Vance for property of her late husband, Morgan Vance, of Kentucky, taken and used by the United States troops during the war of the rebellion, including the use and occupation of a lot of land at Lexington, Kentucky, and the timber and fencing taken therefrom.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. CONKLING. Is there a report from the Committee on Claims?

Mr. WRIGHT. There is a report in the case.

Mr. CONKLING. I merely ask if the bill is reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WRIGHT. It is.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. WOOD.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. No. 470) for the relief of John S. Wood, late a first lieutenant in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry. It is of special merit. I think there will be no objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to cause to be furnished to John S. Wood, late a first lieutenant in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, an honorable discharge from the service, on account of wounds received in action, of the same date as the date of the discharge of his company, and the Paymaster-General to pay him a sum equal to the emoluments of a first lieutenant of cavalry, from the date of his muster-in to the service as such until the muster-out of Company I of the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, deducting therefrom such sum or sums as he may have received on account of such services for the same period.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF DESERT LANDS.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4261) to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objections.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. SARGENT. There is a report in the case, which I ask to have read.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the report reaches the desk, I ask the Secretary to read again that part of the bill which prescribes the time where three years appear. It is about third way from the end of the bill I think.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That it shall be lawful for any citizen of the United States, or any person of requisite age "who may be entitled to become a citizen, and who has filed his declaration to become such," to file a declaration with the register and the receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated, that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same within the period of three years thereafter.

Mr. CONKLING. Just read on from there.

The Chief Clerk continued to read the bill, as follows:

Said declaration shall describe particularly said section of land if surveyed, and, if unsurveyed, shall describe the same as nearly as possible without a survey. At any time within the period of three years after filing said declaration, upon making satisfactory proof of the reclamation of said tract of land in the manner aforesaid, and upon the payment to the receiver of the sum of $1.25 per acre for a tract of land not exceeding six hundred and forty acres to any one person, a patent for the same shall be issued to him.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I object to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Colorado objects to the present consideration of the bill the question will be submitted to the Senate. Does the Senator object to the motion to proceed to its consideration?

Mr. CHAFFEE. I object to the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado objects to the motion, and the bill cannot be considered at this time.

Mr. SARGENT. I give notice that I shall call the bill up again soon.

A. W. PLYMALE.

Mr. HEREFORD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4301) for the relief of A. W. Plymale, of West Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to direct the pension agent at Wheeling, West Virginia, to issue duplicate check No. 18776, for $1,052, in favor of A. W. Plymale, for one lost in the mail on or about July 1, 1876, if the Secretary of the Interior be satisfied that the same has not been paid; but A. W. Plymale shall first execute a bond, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, to hold the United States harmless against the double payment of such check.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. C. C. SNIFFEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 993) for the relief of the late Admiral Charles Wilkes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 667) for the relief of William Wheeler Hubbell, and to make just compensation for the past making, or use, or vending of his patent explosive shell, fuses, and percussion-exploders by the United States. I am aware that it would be hard to dispose of this bill in the morning hour, but I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that it may be considered at this time. I think it will not go beyond the morning hour more than ten minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired and the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business. The Secretary will report the railroad bill by its title, after which the Chair can entertain a motion to postpone.

The Chief Clerk read the title of the bill (S. No. 984) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act.

LLOYD J. BEALL.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 4149) to remove the political disabilities of Lloyd J. Beall, of Virginia, was postponed indefinitely, and I wish to make a brief explanation. The committee reported against the bill upon the ground that Mr. Beall was a defaulter to the Government. Mr. Beall was very much distressed when he saw that report, and came here to the city and went to the Treasury Department. The result was that the Secretary of War and the Third Auditor of the Treasury, upon re-examining the accounts, found that there had been a mistake, and that, so far from being a defaulter, Mr. Beall was in fact a creditor of the United States. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I now desire to have the bill passed at this time.

Mr. WEST. Let it be taken up subject to a call for the regular order.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the unfinished business is pending, and that the Senate will consider other motions subject to a call for the regular order. The Senator from Virginia moves the present consideration of the bill which he has named.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4149) to remove the political disabilities of Lloyd J. Beall, of Virginia.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I wish to remark is that this and many other cases have arisen out of the unfortunate exposure of these Treasury accounts. This is not the only case where great injustice has been done to honest men throughout the United States by the statement unforeseen to them and the exposal of their accounts. I do not know but that this is one of those cases.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, sir; this case happened in this way: The Judiciary Committee addressed a letter to the Department to know whether this man's accounts were square, and they found that he was a defaulter; but the Department upon examining the matter found out their mistake. I send to the desk a letter from the Department, which I desire to have read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the letter being read. It ought to be read if there is any misapprehension about the case.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask the Secretary to read the letter of the Secretary of War first.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 24, 1877.

SIR: Referring to my letter to you of the 17th instant, transmitting a list of ten officers of the Army, with dates of the resignation of their commissions, and other data, comprised in the list given in your letter of the 9th instant asking for the information, I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter from the Third Auditor of the Treasury, from which it will be seen that L'oyd J. Beall, late paymaster United States Army, is not indebted to the Government.

The Auditor's letter explains how the error occurred.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

Hon. G. F. EDMUNDS,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1877.

SIR: In the matter of the letter of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate referred by you to this office on the 13th instant for a report as to the condition of the official accounts of certain parties therein mentioned, who were formerly officers in the United States Army, a report was made that Lloyd J. Beall, paymaster, was indebted to the United States in the sum of $100.89, I have now to inform you that on a re-examination it is found that by a clerical error the indebtedness of Lloyd Beall was reported as being that of Lloyd J. Beall, whose accounts are balanced on the books of this office. Be good enough to inform the Judiciary Committee of the foregoing facts, in order that the error may be rectified.

Very respectfully, &c.,

HORACE AUSTIN, Auditor,
Per A. M. GANGEWER,
Deputy Auditor.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
United States Army.

True copy.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand from the Senator from Virginia that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has had this matter brought to his attention and that he concurs that this injustice, apparently, done by a former report, should be corrected, and that he has no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The letters which have been read were delivered to me by the chairman himself. He brought them to me.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING AT AUSTIN, TEXAS.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the courtesy of the Senator in charge of the bill before the Senate, the Senator from Louisiana, to be allowed to call up House bill No. 4657 for present consideration.

Mr. WEST. I will yield subject to a call for the regular order.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4657) to provide a building for the use of the United States district and circuit courts, the post-office, and internal-revenue officers, at Austin, Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be constructed a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults, at Austin, Texas, for the accommodation of the circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, and internal-revenue officers, at a cost not exceeding $100,000, including cost of site.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

Mr. WEST. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 4261. I will suggest to my friend from Louisiana that this be done subject to a call for the regular order.

Mr. WEST. I should like to consult with my friend from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] on the subject.

Mr. WRIGHT. The railroad bill is the pending order. It is very manifest that it is being antagonized by other bills, and I feel like insisting upon either pressing that bill or having it disposed of. I think the Senate had better determine whether it proposes to proceed with the consideration of this bill until it concludes it, or whether it proposes to lay it aside, and I think as good a way as any is to insist that the bill be proceeded with.

Mr. SARGENT. Then I move that it be laid aside in order to take up House bill No. 4261.

Mr. MORRILL. I would amend the motion. It is obvious that if we were to have all the time remaining of the present session, we could hardly properly dispatch the business that is pending before the Senate in the way of general appropriation bills. This bill has been before the Senate long enough to convince all parties that no bill can be passed here that will be likely to be satisfactory to the majority of the Senate without further and long consideration. I therefore move to lay the railroad bill upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] moves to postpone the present and all prior orders for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill which he has named. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] moves to lay the railroad bill on the table, which has priority.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 22, noes 18.

Mr. WEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend from Vermont will allow me, I suggest that he substitute for his motion a motion to postpone the bill until the first Monday of December.

Mr. MORRILL. I accept that suggestion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the better motion would be to postpone the bill until the first Monday of December next or the second Monday of December next.

Mr. WEST. Is that motion debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable.

Mr. MORRILL. O, well, do not debate it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont modifies his motion so as to postpone the consideration of the railroad bill until the first Monday of December.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course this is a debatable motion.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think there is any disposition to debate it. My only purpose is to give an opportunity to the Senate to transact business that is of primary importance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall vote for either motion.

Mr. CONKLING. This subject has been urged upon the attention of the Senate as not only important but important now, as a measure the value of which consisted considerably at least in the diligence with which it was perfected. It has been discussed very generally until I think it is better understood than the subject ever was before or is likely to be again, without a tedious repetition of a discussion fully traversed already. I ask then why it is that now, in place of a vote upon the bill or a disposition of it in some way or other, it is proposed to postpone it until the next session, when several Senators now here will have disappeared, and several Senators will have come in their places by whom afresh and anew all this subject is to be studied.

I said some time ago when it was proposed to introduce this subject to the Senate, that I could not see the pressing urgency which attached to it in respect of time. I suggested then that it might stand until the next session; that it might be taken up then and disposed of in the long session; but those who had it in charge said, "No, it is all-important that it shall be done at once;" and I heard a bewildering statement some time ago made by one of the Senators from Ohio of the amount of money that would be saved by acting upon the measure now.

Having debated it, I think almost as much as it is susceptible of debate—and it seems to me that the indefinite expansibility of matter has received fresh illustration from the debate that has happened already—it is now proposed to drop it, to the end that at a future time it may be taken up afresh and all the topics connected with it traversed anew. Unless there is some special reason for this, I feel bound to vote no, to the end that we may come to a vote upon the merits of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt the Senator from New York, who is a member of the Judiciary Committee which reported this bill, had a better opportunity to examine it than many other Senators or than I have had. I did not examine the railroad bill until within the last two or three weeks, when I became strongly impressed that it was a subject of too great importance to pass at the present session of Congress, when the minds of many Senators are occupied with the excitement of the presidential election. Besides, there are three or four members of the commission, two of them distinguished members of the Judiciary Committee, one of whom reported this bill and the other the chairman of the committee, who are more familiar with this subject than probably any other Senators, because it has been their duty to study it, and they are opposed to the bill directly before the Senate as a substitute for the bill from the Committee on the Judiciary. The amount involved is $75,000,000. The amount issued to these two railroads and the amount of interest already accrued are $75,000,000. There has been some diversity of opinion as to the facts and as to the ability of these companies to pay the amount stipulated for. One proposition requires them to pay one sum and another proposition requires them to pay a much larger sum. Since I discussed this matter the other day I have obtained new information. I have found that I underrated instead of overrated these estimates, as shown by a report of a later date than I had in my possession at that time. No injury can result to these two great railroads by this postponement, that I can conceive. This subject is too large and too great in magnitude to be discussed at the present session. It has not been mastered by any means, and it seems to me that it ought to be postponed until the next session of Congress. That a settlement ought to be made with these railroad companies and that they ought to be required to make provision for the ultimate payment of their debt to the Government is agreed on all hands. As to the amount that they ought to pay and as to their ability to pay, there is great uncertainty and all the facts have not yet been presented. Indeed the last report of these two railroad companies has not yet been laid on our tables.

Under these circumstances, it seems to me, in dealing with a grave matter involving larger sums than probably any other proposition pending before Congress, that it is right to take a little time. The remarks made by the Senator from New York are perfectly correct that neither party would be injured by the delay, nor is there any pressing necessity for action upon the bill at this time. The advantage of the motion now made, instead of the motion to lay the bill on the table, is that it will keep the bill in its place on the record and it can be called up under the charge of the very gentleman who reported the bill.

Mr. WEST. The Senator forgets that this Congress expires before the time named.

Mr. SHERMAN. That makes no difference; the Senate is a perpetual body, and the motion is allowable here, although it would not be in the other House. As the Senate is a perpetual body we can continue the debate on this bill in its exact condition at the next session, by a motion to postpone now.

Mr. CONKLING. One or two suggestions made by the Senator from Ohio surprised me. He says in conclusion that he concurs with me. I do not know that I quite made the suggestion that nobody suffers from delay. The two members of the Judiciary Committee to whom the Senator refers as absent, insisted strenuously that the interests of the Government suffered seriously, continuedly, repeatedly, from delay; that not a day should be lost in making sure the rights of the Government. The colleague of the Senator from Ohio, one of those to whom he refers, with an animation which the Senate has not forgotten, urged upon us the duty of an early disposition of this question. The other Senator to whom he refers has done the same thing. Now the Senator from Ohio says that there is and was no urgency about this matter; that the two, and if I mistake not the three weeks which have virtually been devoted to this bill might just as well as not have been given to some of the other bills which, although less important, are urgent, and which will go down and be lost by the expiration of the session. We were told that all those bills should yield to the dominance of this, because of its exceptional urgency; and when it has been considered so fully, and the session has been virtually worn out by its consideration, we are told that there never was any particular use for considering the bill at this time; that all the while it might just as well have gone over to a future session.

The Senator says also that since the debate began, or since it ceased the last time, he has looked at some data which before he had not seen, and he has learned more about the measure. My honorable friend has not undergone all the experience of his distinguished years of service without knowing that his remark might be applied to every bill of any moment considered by the Senate. There is no time when it is true in respect of any subject, that there is nothing more which it is possible to learn. It was Mrs. Siddons, I believe, who said that she had played the tragedy of Macbeth oftener than any other, and that she never played it without reading it afresh, and that she never read it without learning something new in regard to it.

I repeat, there is no bill or subject in respect of which theoretically every member of the Senate by perseverance might not for an indefinite length of time continue to add to his sum of information in regard to it; but it is a part of the infirmity of legislative proceedings, as of judicial proceedings, that there must some time or other be an end of controversy. I insist, after what has occurred, it is wise that the rights of the Government should be fixed and fixed as far and as fully as we have the right and the power to fix them, and that the persons concerned on the other side should be dismissed from these Halls and should go and attend to the care and preservation, and should have use, of the property involved.

Therefore, after hearing what has been said so well by the Senator from Ohio I must still believe that the economical thing in respect of time and duty of the Senate is, if possible, to get a vote upon this subject and to see whether we cannot agree upon something which will protect the interests of the Government and will put an end to this controversy, which in one form or another has been going on here so long.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] who brought in this bill from the Committee on the Judiciary, and who had it in charge, was placed upon the commission as will be remembered, and he is now confined to his chamber by sickness. When appointed to the commission he left the bill in my charge. I think the Senate will bear me witness that I have omitted no opportunity to press this bill upon the attention of the Senate. We have been interrupted time and time again by the action of the two Houses in counting the vote. We have been here sometimes for hours and sometimes for days almost, unable to do anything. It has been some ten days or two weeks since this bill was last before the Senate, its consideration being interrupted as the Senate knows and for causes that I need not state. The bill is now before the Senate again. My friend from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] and myself have been constant in seeing that it should never at any time lose its place. Every day before the Senate would adjourn we would see that this bill was laid before the Senate; every morning we would call it up again. Every time that we have had a legislative day we have had this bill before the Senate.

I am as anxious to pass this bill as any member of the Senate. It must be remembered that we have now four days and a little more of this session left. We have but two of the appropriation bills passed. These appropriation bills have to be considered. There is an immense Calendar. If the Senate think that they can go on and consider this bill and pass it at this session and get action in the House, then I insist that they shall proceed with it. I propose to stand by the bill; but I cannot shut my eyes to the actual facts around me and fail to see where we are as compared with where we were when we were pressing this bill before. I believed then, as I believe yet, that it is important that the bill should pass, but I do not propose to contend against the fates nor against the actual condition of things before us. If the Senate thinks it is possible to proceed to the consideration of this bill and get it passed at this session and have action in the House, then let us proceed with it. If not, then I confess that I cannot see the necessity of taking up any time in its consideration when we have an immense Calendar here with many measures which ought to be considered. The appropriation bills are crowding us every moment, and they at least will take precedence of the railroad bill whenever they are reached.

Again, we know we are not through with the count yet. How long that will take we cannot tell. If we are to go on and consider this bill with the hope of getting it through, then I am in favor of standing by it. I propose to stand by it anyhow; but I do not wish any person to suggest here that there has been a failure to consider this bill or a lack of diligence in bringing it to the attention of the Senate. We have brought it to the attention of the Senate every moment that we possibly could. We have believed that it was important, and believe it is important yet. Whether we can succeed in getting the action of the Senate and of the House is a question the Senate must decide.

Mr. WEST. With respect to the allusions which have been made by the Senator from Iowa to the appropriation bills, the Senate will bear in mind, and the Senator knows, that this bill has always been allowed to be displaced to enable us to consider appropriation bills. There being no appropriation bill now before the Senate, surely the Senate can proceed, without prejudice to the public business, with the measure in question, as I hope it will.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I confess my astonishment at any argument brought in here for the purpose of continuing this bill before the Senate. As the Senator from Iowa has observed, there are but four days left of this session. Now unless there are parties here who desire to have an extra session of Congress, it seems to me we ought to clear the decks of every regular appropriation bill and also of many other bills which various Senators deem important to their constituents that are now pending and which have been placed upon the Calendar. It is quite obvious from the discussion that has taken place that no bills and no amendments proposed as a substitute for any of these railroad bills can be passed upon without many and radical amendments. The votes in the Senate already show that any bill brought up here for final passage will be radically amended and will consume not only to-day but to-morrow. This bill could not possibly be gotten through with in less than two or three days, if we had the time. I therefore hope, while it may be regarded as important that some action should be had, and I so regard it, that there will be a universal consent to postpone this bill until the next session.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to say one thing more, and I ask the attention of the Senate to what I now state. I have information since I last addressed the Senate that the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] who is confined to his house by illness and who had this bill in charge, is himself of the opinion that it would be better for the bill to go over and that he gives his consent that it shall be done. Representing him as I do on this floor, taking his place in charge of the bill, and he having expressed that wish, I concur in that course and agree to the proposition made by the Senator from Vermont, as I understand him, to postpone the bill until the 1st day of December following. Understanding that to be the wish of the Senator who had the bill in charge I make no objection to the proposition.

Mr. WEST. The Senate will bear in mind that the question before the Senate is not exactly upon the bill that has been reported by the Senator from Ohio, but it is upon the substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON,] with various amendments. There is no appropriation bill or public legislation of half the consequence that now presses upon the attention of the Senate. These appeals to the Senate to avoid an extra session upon the ground that this bill will interfere with appropriation bills are not timely. There are no appropriation bills ready, and this bill has always been waived in their favor, and it will be again, so far as I am concerned. Let us proceed to the consideration of this bill at once and settle it one way or the other without any more talk about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to postpone the bill until the first Monday in December.

Mr. HARVEY. I shall vote against the postponement of this bill, not because I entertain any admiration for the bill reported by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] or the substitute reported by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. WEST,] but because I have an amendment pending to that substitute that I want to have acted upon. If the bill is postponed until next session, I am quite sure I shall not be here and I am not sure that there will be any one here who will care particularly for the amendment. I desire therefore to have a vote on it; and I shall vote against a postponement for that reason.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on postponing this bill until the first Monday in December.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 22, noes 26.

Mr. MORRILL. Let us have the yeas and nays. We may as well have them.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I shall vote to postpone this bill for what appears to me to be two reasons which seem to me good. One is that it seems to me our experience already with this bill has demonstrated beyond all possibility of doubt that you cannot get the bill through the Senate during the present session. Another fact seems equally clear, and that is that it would not do anybody in the world the slightest good to get it through the Senate, because it would stop between the Houses and fall with the end of this Congress.

Now, in the few hours which between this and the 4th of March we can devote to legislation, some good things might be done that would help somebody, and I do not think the friends of this project ought to keep it right here stopping everything. I think I know just enough about this proposition to know that it does not benefit the railroad companies nor the United States at all to have it passed this session, even if it could be passed this session; that every public and every private interest would just as well be conserved by passing it next session as by passing it this. That is a third reason why it seems to me this bill should be postponed for the present. Let us take hold of some chores which we can accomplish in hours rather than lift at this which we cannot move by any possibility during the remaining hours of the session.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bailey, Bogy, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Hereford, Howe, Johnston, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Wadleigh, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Barnum, Blaine, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Claytor., Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Kelly, Mitchell, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Teller, West, and Windom—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Dennis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Logan, Morton, Oglesby, Ransom, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, and Wallace—18.

So the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4693) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States in respect to vacancies in the office of President and Vice-President; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SALE OF DESERT LANDS.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4261) to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that it shall be lawful for any citizen of the United States, or any person of requisite age who may be entitled to become a citizen, and who has filed his declaration to become such, to file a declaration with the register and the receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon it, within the period of three years thereafter, which declaration shall describe particularly the section of land if surveyed, and if unsurveyed shall describe it as nearly as possible without a survey. At any time within the period of three years after filing the declaration, upon making satisfactory proof of the reclamation of the tract of land, and upon the payment to the receiver of the sum of $1.25 per acre for a tract of land not exceeding six hundred and forty acres to any one person, a patent for it is to be issued to him.

Section 2 provides that all lands, exclusive of timber lands and mineral lands, which will not, without irrigation, produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed desert lands within the meaning of the act.

Section 3 provides that the act shall only apply to and take effect in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, and Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. This bill certainly ought not to pass by default.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not wish that. I ask that the report of the Committee on Public Lands be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BOOTH from the Committee on Public Lands on the 8th instant:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred House bill No. 4261, submit the following report:

There are extensive regions of country in the States and Territories named in the bill where there is not sufficient rain-fall to render the cultivation of the soil possible without irrigation. In other words, large portions of the country from the Rocky Mountains west are deserts, but it has been ascertained that by irrigation these desert lands can be made exceedingly productive. The subject of irrigating these lands has attracted the attention of the Interior Department and Congress for many years, and various schemes have been proposed to Congress and to the States interested to secure aid for that purpose, but Congress has hitherto wisely, as we believe, refused to aid any of these projects further than to provide for examinations and reports upon the subject. In 1873 a joint resolution was passed providing for the appointment of a commission to make a report upon irrigation in California. That commission consisted of General Alexander, Professor Davidson, and Major Mendell. The report, which the commission submitted in 1874, (Executive Document No. 290, Forty-third Congress, first session,) contains much valuable information on the subject. The Agricultural Department has also collected much information, showing the value and importance of irrigation. But it is unnecessary to multiply arguments in favor of irrigation. The fact that worthless deserts can be made useful and productive by this means is sufficient to establish its desirability. Legislation on this subject has not been delayed because it was not necessary, but because of the great diversity of opinion as to what the legislation ought to be and to what extent the general and local governments should aid and control the same.

Your committee believe that the whole subject should be left, as far as practicable, to private enterprise, and that the Government should interfere as little as possible with the subject. It is certainly best to give the people an opportunity in the first instance, and when they have failed to utilize both the water and the land it is time enough to call for Government aid or legislative control, but it is necessary that the people have an opportunity to acquire title to the lands before private enterprise will undertake a reclamation of these deserts.

Experience has shown that the homestead and pre-emption laws afford no means of acquiring title to desert lands. Those laws require settlement and occupation as a prerequisite. Neither settlement nor occupation is possible without water. Irrigation must precede the settlement. But this is expensive, and settlers upon the public lands are unwilling to construct the necessary ditches and canals to irrigate lands to which they have no title and no certainty of obtaining title.

It has been suggested that these lands be sold in large quantities in order to induce private capital to undertake the work of their reclamation. Your committee fear that any system of sale whereby the title would pass before irrigation would encourage speculation without inducing settlement. The bill provides for the sale of a section of land to any person who will first irrigate the same, at the usual price of $1.25 an acre. A more liberal policy has been suggested of granting lands, after irrigation, without any money consideration. But the committee believe that when these lands are irrigated they will be of sufficient value to enable the purchaser to pay the Government price paid for other public lands. Besides, the quantity allowed will be an additional inducement to settlers to undertake the work of irrigation. At all events, it will be time enough to make donations of these lands when it is ascertained that settlers are unwilling to purchase them. It is believed that by far the larger portion of the lands bordering on the streams, where sufficient moisture exists for cultivation and where irrigation is cheap and easy, have been appropriated; but the provisions of this bill will enable settlers by combined effort to construct more extensive works and reclaim a class of lands that are now absolutely worthless. The committee recommend the bill with more confidence than they would be willing to express if its principles were entirely new.

In 1875 an act was passed substantially the same in its provisions, but confined in its operations to a single county in California east of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and commonly known as the Lassen County bill. We are informed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office that no complaints have been made of the operation of this law. On the contrary, it is represented that settlers are availing themselves of its provisions, and that a large amount of otherwise worthless land is being fitted for cultivation.

Your committee believe that no further legislation is necessary to regulate the use of water for purposes of irrigation than already exists. A system has already grown up in the States and Territories included in the bill created by custom and legislation and sanctioned by the courts, which recognizes priority of appropriation as the rule governing the right to the use of water, and limits such appropriation to the water actually used, leaving the surplus free to other appropriators, and thus avoiding waste and preventing monopoly. Congress, after full consideration of this subject in 1866, sanctioned the local laws in the following language:

"Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed; but whenever any person, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage."—United States Revised Statutes, section 2339.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I think the argument of the committee is ample and complete, and I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate by useless discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. Under the provisions of this bill, which is constructed with remarkable ingenuity, it is possible for a single individual to acquire an exclusive possessory title to all the lands that come within the description that is mentioned in the bill, within any one or all of the States and Territories mentioned therein, to which there is not already an existing title, either possessory or actual. It declares that "any citizen of the United States, or any person of requisite age who may be entitled to become a citizen and who has filed his declarations to become such," may "file a declaration with the register and the receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated, that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same, within the period of three years thereafter."

The Senate will observe that there is no limitation whatever upon the number of times the same individual may file this declaration, provided he declares that his purpose is to reclaim the land within the period of three years thereafter. That is to say, if to-day, in the State of California, or Nevada, or Oregon, or in any of the Territories named in the last section of the bill, a man goes to the local land office and declares that he intends to reclaim a section of land within the period of three years thereafter, that land then becomes reserved and is not open to any settlement or claim by a subsequent claimant. On the following day, he can repeat the same experiment. On the day succeeding that, he can again repeat it; and there is absolutely, under this bill, no limitation whatever to the quantity of land that a single individual may reserve in the public domain simply by declaring his intention to reclaim it within the period of three years. There is no limitation whatever requiring him to perform any labor upon it; there is no punishment imposed upon him if he refuses to perform labor upon it. Therefore it seems to me that, if this bill is to pass, it certainly ought to be protected in some way, so that one individual may not obtain a possessory and exclusive title to all the unoccupied portion of the public domain in any one of these States or Territories.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know but that the ingenuity of my friend may have discovered something valuable in the eyes of the Senate. Certainly it is not the intention of the bill that any person shall enter more than one section. I do not think a fair and proper construction of it would allow any person to enter more than one section under its provision. It provides that a single person, who is by law entitled to enter lands, may enter a tract of desert land not exceeding one section. That is all the power that is given by it, and it is certainly intended to be confined to that. I doubt if there would be any construction given to it by the Land Office that would entitle a person to enter exceeding one section.

I will add that this bill, as the committee say in their able report, is simply a copy of one with a wider application to certain States and Territories, which has been in operation for several years past in the State of California, in the county of Lassen, and no such question as that suggested by my friend from Kansas arose there at all. No one ever supposed he was entitled to enter more than a single section of land, and no one ever has applied for or entered more than a single section of land.

Mr. CONKLING. Is that act named in the bill?

Mr. SARGENT. It is named in the report. It is the act of 1875.

Mr. CONKLING. An act of Congress?

Mr. SARGENT. An act of Congress. In fact it is in hæc verbæ the same law.

Mr. CONKLING. Is the page given upon which the act referred to may be found?

Mr. SARGENT. It is section 2339 of the Revised Statutes. In 1875 that bill was passed as an experiment, and we were pretty careful in examining its provisions and had some doubt as to its propriety. I remember it led to discussion in both Houses. The result of the bill, however, was entirely satisfactory, both to the Land Office and to the people of the country. There never has been an attempt made to evade its provisions; there never has been a claim by any one that he was entitled to enter more than the statute in good faith allowed him to have, that is to say, a section of land. It is impossible to induce a person to go upon absolutely desert land for a mere quarter of a section; no one would do it. A man could not live upon it, to begin with; and there would not be enough of it left, after he had put his expensive works of irrigation upon it, to compensate him for the outlay. That is very well understood, and therefore we have made it "a section" of land.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Mr. President, I am opposed to the passage of this bill, first, because it introduces an innovation into the land system of the United States which, in my judgment, is already sufficiently complicated without this bill. As has been said by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] all the land situated in any of the States and Territories named under this act becomes desert land. The mere declaration being filed, without any other proof, without oath by any person, be he responsible or irresponsible, that no agricultural crops can be raised upon a certain tract of land without water, has the effect of making that land, under the second section of this bill, desert land. It seems to me that any such power as that, delegated to a single individual, would be dangerous to introduce into our land system.

It will be noticed that all that is required is the simple declaration, not under oath; and no proof is required that the land is non-mineral. The land may be coal land; it may be placer land, it may be quartz-mining land; it may be timber land, and no proof is required except the simple declaration of a single individual. It seems to me, if the Senate is going to pass a bill of this kind, that certain amendments should be made to it; but I am of the opinion that the bill should not be passed at all. Five or six individuals can locate as many miles square of land as they may select in any valley of any State or Territory named in the third section of this bill, and hold that land for three years without doing any work at all. There is nothing in the bill to prevent them from filing another declaration, at the end of another three years, and in that way they can exclude this land from location for all time, thus preventing bona fide settlers from occupying and purchasing it under our present system. I think the bill should be carefully considered by every Senator before it is passed.

I move to amend in the sixth line of the first section by inserting after the word "declaration" the words "under oath;" so that it shall read, "shall file a declaration under oath," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, the Commissioner of the General Land Office has, for two or three years past and in the last report he made, recommended some action to be taken by Congress to dispose of these desert lands. They are now mere worthless waste lands; they produce nothing; and it seems to me that any reclamation of them, even though it should be in very large bodies, would be a benefit to the country. It is impossible to reclaim them in small tracts. It is necessary to introduce water for them at a very great expense, and when that is done they become exceedingly fertile. For this reason, that they may add to the value of the public domain, it strikes me that something should be done to reclaim them from their desert condition. It not only adds to the common wealth, but this bill provides that, even after they shall be reclaimed, they shall be paid for at the rate of one dollar and a quarter per acre. That is the amount that is now paid for public lands even of the best character.

So far as regards the defects that have been suggested to exist in the bill, I think they are more imaginary than real. It is said that one person may reclaim more than one section of land. I should be willing, so far as I am concerned, that he should reclaim a dozen or fifty sections rather than that they should remain as they now are. But I do not think any one is entitled under the provisions of this bill to reclaim more than he is authorized to enter by the language of the bill itself; that is, one section. There is no authority given to him, after having once received the benefit of the law, to make a second application; and without some authority of that kind he cannot do it. If this bill should pass or some bill of this kind become a law, instead of having a great desert extending from the Sierra Nevadas almost to the western boundaries of Nebraska, we shall have some places reclaimed from their desert condition and we shall have productive lands instead of a barren waste.

For the reasons suggested in the report, which is substantially the recommendations of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, I think the bill is one that ought to commend itself to every Senator.

Reference has been made to the operation of a similar law in Lassen County, California. It worked well there, as I have been told. Lands that were absolutely worthless have become valuable. And so it may be with many thousands of acres that may become of great value but which now no one cares about settling on and no one can make a living on. This only proposes to reclaim land that will not now produce a crop of any kind without irrigation. Certainly there can be no objection to that, to making the desert "blossom as the rose," where it produces nothing at all now. It is reclaiming from absolute desolation lands that never will be reclaimed unless it is done under some measure of this kind.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following amendment to come in at the end of section 1:

Provided, That no person shall be permitted to acquire title to more than one section under this act.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not know that I am hostile at all to the general spirit and purpose of this bill; but there are some things about it that I should like to make inquiries in regard to of the Senator from California, who has it in charge.

We have in many respects the most perfect land system, I think, of any country in the world. We certainly have a most admirable land system. Our system of surveys is so simple in itself that each and every person knows without any lengthy description what is his land and where it is located. While it does occur very frequently that persons pass upon unsurveyed land and acquire a possessory title before the lands are surveyed, yet when the lands come to be surveyed they accommodate themselves to the surveyed lines, and thus having possession they get the advantage and are the better able to obtain title to the land.

But under this bill, as I understand it, a person is authorized to go upon unsurveyed, as well as surveyed lands, and as a consequence though the lands may not be surveyed for years, if the three years expire he can succeed in getting a title to his land without reference to the lines as they shall be subsequently settled by survey. I do not think we ought to introduce any system the effect of which shall be to give irregular lines with reference to our public lands. If the privilege is to be given to persons to go upon unsurveyed lands, at least the title ought not to pass until the lands are surveyed, and then the lines should accommodate themselves to the actual surveys made. If we introduce any other rule than that, we shall disturb largely the harmony of our public land system.

It is true that this bill provides for an entry where the lands are surveyed, and then, of course, the party is to accommodate himself to the survey; but if they are not, it is impossible that he should do so. He cannot do it because he cannot tell where the lines may be. When you come to run the lines, it seems to me, you will be found in inextricable and interminable difficulty with reference to our land system. I suggest, therefore, that while I have not any antagonism to the general purpose of this bill, it seems to me there would be great difficulty if you allow persons to go on these lands before they are surveyed, and especially where, as under this bill, they may obtain title and obtain their patents from the United States before the lands are surveyed at all. I understand this bill to provide that they may obtain a patent even before the lands are surveyed. I do not see how under our land system you can very well do that. How can you provide for a grant by patent unless you have the lines surveyed? You must have the lines surveyed, or must have some metes and bounds or some monuments. In some way or other there must be something to which the patent can refer when you come to the description of the land. If I am mistaken in this, of course the objection I make falls to the ground; but as I understand the bill, it contemplates that the patent can be issued before the land shall be surveyed at all. I suggest this difficulty as it occurs to me to the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Iowa is unquestionably aware that the condition of the States and Territories west of the Rocky Mountains is very different from that of those east of the Rocky Mountains. A great many circumstances are exceptional, and we have had exceptional legislation to provide for those cases. You cannot deal with desert lands in the same manner that you would deal with ordinary agricultural lands where a man wants but a small quantity and can take them under the general pre-emption laws. You cannot deal with mining claims the way you do with agricultural lands. You cannot deal in that way with a country that is dotted over with Spanish grants which were laid out from fifty to twenty-five years ago, and which have no regard whatever to any system of subsequent surveys. Your surveying system is necessarily broken up by all these circumstances.

Now, with reference to mining claims, we allow a man to enter a body of placer mining claims and get his title before any survey, in advance of any survey; and sometimes under those laws a man takes one hundred and fifty acres, sometimes twenty-five acres, varying in size according to the amount of land which the company that originally owned the land were allowed to take up under the mining laws. The survey is made running around courses and distances and described as such a survey would be described when the patent was issued, and if ever afterward the land in the neighborhood is surveyed it stops at the boundary of that mining claim in the same manner that it would at a lake or land that was not to be surveyed. It is the same thing with regard to the Spanish grant, which may extend for nine leagues or down to a league and a half or half a league laid right upon the face of the country. When your surveys come you stop at the boundary of that Spanish grant which has already been patented, already been surveyed, and is here on the books of the Land Office, an interruption of surveys.

In the State of California these Spanish grants are very numerous indeed, especially down through the southern valley counties, and our system of public land surveys is exceedingly fragmentary. Now, this exception with regard to Spanish grants, with regard to Indian reservations, with regard to mining claims, arose from the necessity of the case. Pretty much the same necessity exists with reference to desert lands. These desert lands are in the great, broad valley followed by the Central and Union Pacific Railroads, and stretching out like fingers among the interrupting hills, following sometimes a thread, sometimes broadening out into a space of miles. It would be a very expensive system for the Government to carry on its surveys over the mountains, sometimes arising to be absolutely impassable, and to follow the little threads out through the valleys. It is very much better that the surveys be made by detached portions and for detached communities.

Now, we hope as the result of this bill (and we have some reason to hope it from what we have observed in Lassen County where these peculiarities have existed) that communities will grow up in places where there is now absolutely a desert and where a sheep cannot be supported upon five acres of land, where the country simply lies bleaching and burning in the sun. We know by experiment that water produces fine crops upon these lands, that all the elements of soil are there except moisture. They need moisture in order to make them fertile.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. SARGENT. With pleasure.

Mr. MORRILL. I see in the first section of the bill it provides that any party who may be entitled to become a citizen and has filed a declaration to become such, may register with the officers of the land district "in which any desert land is situated" a declaration that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same, within the period of three years. Now I desire to ask the Senator from California if this will not allow any such party to locate upon a stream, and not have more than forty feet wide and a thousand feet long, if six hundred and forty acres, or a section, shall be no more than that? Will it not allow a party thereafter to go on and monopolize the water privileges so as to sell out to others who might buy land adjacent if they could only have the privilege of water to irrigate it?

Mr. SARGENT. I think it would have exactly the opposite effect.

Mr. MORRILL. Is any power, so far as this bill goes, given to any party to locate the land in any such shape as he may please?

Mr. SARGENT. Under the mining law it could be said that possibly a man might take a strip one inch wide and forty miles long across the country; but it is absurd and contrary to his interest to do anything of the kind; and it cannot be for the interest of these persons to do anything of the kind here suggested. If it were their interest the object of the bill is to prevent that consequence. For instance, we have found the great difficulty in reference to our watercourses has been—I suppose it is hardly fair to call it a vacant interest, but a roaming interest—the cattle-men go under a fictitious compliance with the terms of the pre-emption law and take their land along the margin of the streams, and then there is no possibility of getting water to the back country at all. I want to provide so that persons in the back country may go above such a person, for instance, on Humboldt River, and take the water out and conduct it on to the back lands. These persons by having the front can control the back country. Under the operation of this bill we make it an object for persons to go into the back country and reclaim that and take the water from the stream and carry it back on to regions which now are desolate and must remain desolate as long as we require that persons shall settle upon lands as a pre-requisite for a title.

Mr. MORRILL. Then if the object is to prevent the very thing which I have suggested, would it not be well to provide that this land shall be taken in squares?

Mr. SARGENT. How will you do then in case a valley narrows to a certain point? Will you require a man to take rugged rocks and pay for them at the rate of one dollar and a quarter an acre, which you get for land that he cannot possibly utilize for any purpose whatever?

Mr. MORRILL. It would not be a very large sum.

Mr. SARGENT. It might be. We might provide that it should be entered in a compact body.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill does not limit the minimum amount which may be taken. A party may take ten acres and have it all a narrrow margin on a stream.

Mr. SARGENT. But a man is required to bring water on this land, and the idea would be perfectly ridiculous of a man running on the side of a stream a narrow piece of land scarcely wide enough to contain his ditch. I suppose the words " shall be taken in a compact body" might cover it; but the Senator says it shall be square. That might make the operation of the bill absolutely impossible except on the broad plains I first alluded to.

Mr. MORRILL. I only make the suggestion to perfect the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I am extremely anxious that the bill shall work well, I am anxious it shall answer the purpose I have in view, and I am very grateful for any suggestion that will tend toward perfecting the bill; but I would not like in following such suggestion to put it in such a shape as to destroy the object of the bill; and it seems to me to require it to be square would be impossible in many parts of the country where it ought to apply. I will look at that matter and see if some language can be used which will come near the point.

Mr. ALLISON. If I understand this bill, Mr. President, I am in favor of it; at least in favor of the general features of the bill. It proposes to authorize persons to enter upon and occupy desert lands and reclaim them by irrigation. If that is the purpose of the bill, I think it is a wise bill and should pass.

With all respect to my colleague, [Mr. WRIGHT,] who speaks of our perfect system of land surveys, I must say that a little observation some years ago in the Territory of Wyoming and a portion of the State of Nebraska convinced me that our present system of surveys is absolutely out of place there. You may travel one hundred, two hundred, or three hundred miles across that region of country and you will find only what are called within the terms of this bill waste lands, and they are not only waste lands, as provided in this bill, but they always will be waste lands. There can never be irrigation because there are no streams there to irrigate with. We have squandered hundreds of thousands of dollars in surveying by metes and bounds in small subdivisions this character of our public lands, and we have done so in the main for the purpose of enabling settlers here and there to secure a title to lands they have occupied for many years.

My belief is that if the general principle of this bill is maintained scattering settlers here and there can occupy lands that can be used for grazing purposes and for cattle-raising, &c., and secure a title; but if they are to wait until those lands are surveyed by the ordinary subdivisions now known under our public-land system, they ought to wait forever, because no Government ought ever to undertake to survey that class of lands in the ordinary methods now used for surveying public lands.

Therefore, if the object of this bill is to enable people to reclaim waste lands, I am in favor of it; but I do not quite understand the first section of the bill, and I call the attention of the Senators from California, either the one who reported this bill [Mr. BOOTH] or the Senator from California last up, [Mr. SARGENT,] to the ninth line. The party is to declare that he intends "to reclaim a tract of desert land not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same." That is a very general term, "conducting water upon the same." How and from whence? There are little streams all over the country. Is it proposed that water shall be conducted from these streams, or is a man here and there to pick out a spring and conduct small quantities of water from it upon these waste lands? I see my friend from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] laughs at that; but I think there ought to be some clearer definition with reference to this question of the method of irrigation. There is no proposition here even that this land shall be so irrigated as to produce agricultural crops.

Mr. SARGENT. What is it good for to anybody but for that?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what, I only want to know of my friend if it is sufficiently guarded in this respect. It may be very valuable for grazing purposes. There are very valuable tracts of land in Wyoming, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] knows, who passed through with me.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that it might be coal land.

Mr. ALLISON. It might be coal land or it might be valuable grazing land.

Mr. SARGENT. Mineral lands are excluded under the act.

Mr. ALLISON. But it might be grazing land, and it might be absolutely worthless for agricultural purposes. I know, as I think others here do, that as you pass along for two or three hundred miles, going north from Cheyenne, at distances of from fifteen to twenty miles, passing over hills, you come to beautiful little streams and springs. Under this bill, of course these springs and small streams can be located and patents can and will be issued under it, because parties can secure just a sufficient amount of irrigation to enable them to take up these valuable tracts of land, and they will buy them, of course, at a dollar and a quarter an acre. These lands are immensely valuable, because they are in the vast grazing regions that are without water and are only valuable for grazing purposes. I think there ought to be some clearer definition.

Perhaps my friend from California can explain to me so that I shall be satisfied. My idea is simply that there is not a sufficiently clear definition here as to what shall constitute irrigation under this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, there is practically very little desert land in this country. The term "desert land," as defined by this bill, is very delusive and does very great injustice to the section of country to which it is applied. Experience has shown that the region in the interior of this country, exclusive of timbered lands and mineral lands, which will not without irrigation produce some agricultural crop, will soon become, if it is not already, the most valuable portion of the unoccupied public domain. Land that contains all the chemical constituents necessary to produce vegetation, that by the application of water will produce vast crops, cannot properly be called desert land; and I believe it is the experience of the inhabitants of the new States of the West, Colorado, California, Nevada, and Oregon, that these tracts of country which have heretofore been regarded as desert lands simply by the application of water have become the most valuable portions of the public domain.

I am somewhat familiar with this species of agriculture in the State of Colorado. I know that there are vast regions of that country which up to a period within a very few years have been considered practically valueless for the purposes of cultivation, and that by the introduction of water through artificial means from the water-courses that penetrate that country they have been productive during the last few years of a very large percentage of the entire grain and vegetable products of that region.

Now, sir, it is certainly a very gross misnomer to call that land desert land. The increasing population of that country, drawn thither by the development of its mining resources, stimulates enterprise, and it draws there farmers who employ irrigation for the very purpose of rendering these lands productive; and this bill by simply allowing the withdrawal of these lands, soon to become the most valuable portions of the public domain, in indefinite quantities, is certainly, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] says, introducing an innovation in our land system, and one, as it seems to me, that is pregnant with the most dangerous possibilities.

Those who have traversed the interior region of this country know that land which is not at the present time susceptible of what is called cultivation has for countless generations supported innumerable herds of wild grazing animals, the bison, the elk, the moose, the antelope, to say nothing of the jack-rabbit and the prairie-dog, which are rapidly disappearing, and that it is no less to-day than before capable of sustaining a vast proportion of the animals that are necessary to supply the food for this country hereafter.

As was suggested by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] I think the system of land surveys in this country has been a very great mistake. I do not think for a space extending at least two hundred and fifty miles east of the Rocky Mountains there ought ever to have been a surveyor's instrument set. There never should have been a stake driven or a line run through that whole section of country extending from the British possessions down through that pastoral region to the Gulf of Mexico. It ought to have been reserved as public domain, to be used hereafter as the great pastoral region of this continent. It cannot, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] well observed, be used in small quantities for what may be called farm cultivation, but there are certain portions of it along the water-courses that can be by artificial irrigation made enormously productive, and it is these portions of this territory that are subjected to very serious inconvenience by the operations, as I believe, of this bill.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] well suggests that there is nothing in the terms of the bill that prevents the absorption of an entire river valley. All the fertile lands along a water-course can be practically reserved from the operations of the land laws of this country, even after they have been surveyed, by some claimant who may see fit to locate his claim along the borders of that stream.

Again, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] suggested when he was upon the floor, the definition of what shall constitute irrigation under this bill is certainly exceedingly defective. The only terms that are employed here are "by conducting water upon the same." It does not say whether that water shall be conducted from a neighboring river-course or whether it shall be hauled on by a water-wagon, or whether any means shall be employed to "conduct water upon the same." There is nothing whatever to prevent fraud and collusion, which, in my judgment, would be certain to ensue if this bill were to become a law.

The Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] has submitted an amendment to the first section of the bill intended to obviate the objection that I first suggested in regard to the quantity of land that might be acquired by one claimant under this act. His amendment provides in general terms that a party shall be authorized only to acquire a single section under the operations of this act. That amendment should be further amended by providing that no person shall be permitted either to reserve or to acquire, so that the operations of the bill may be confined exclusively to a single section by one individual.

Mr. SARGENT. I assent to that. That is the object of it. I ask that the Clerk make that modification.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the amendment of the Senator from California be so amended.

Mr. OGLESBY. I propose to offer an amendment in a moment that perhaps will cover it.

Mr. INGALLS. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Illinois; but I prefer, as I am on the floor, to offer my own amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. I hope it will be a good one.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to insert before the word "acquire" the words "either to reserve or." I now yield to the Senator from Illinois to submit his amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator allow me to offer an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California modifies his amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, the Committee on Public Lands have hitherto felt that the subject of our desert lands must attract the attention of Congress. It is already beginning to attract the attention of the public. I for one have felt for some time that it was a difficult question to deal with. Therefore the Committee on Public Lands since I have had the honor to be a part of it has brought forward no system on this subject. It has often been canvassed; there has been a good deal of reflection upon it; but we have not felt as a committee that the time had arrived yet, so far as knowledge on the subject was concerned and so far as any public demand went, to require of us to bring into this body a policy with reference to our desert lands. This bill, which the Senator from California introduced, I believe, early in the session, came before our committee, and I was, for one, willing that it might be tried as an experiment in the States of Oregon and California. The last section makes it apply to nearly all the Territories, and the committee agreed to let the bill remain as it is on that subject.

I do not suppose this bill is perfect, even in its application to California and Oregon. It is quite difficult to make a bill that would be, that would fit the subject. I apprehend the Senator from Kansas and other Senators upon this floor will not be astonished when the statement shall be made, and I think it can be verified by examination made in the Territories and States where the desert lands lie, that there are not exceeding 3 per cent. of what are called desert lands that can ever be redeemed by irrigation.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment? I wish him to explain what method of irrigation and what extent of irrigation are required by this bill in order to enable a man to secure his title?

Mr. OGLESBY. The only answer that I can make to that is that a person desiring to locate six hundred and forty acres of desert land would make out his application in the usual manner, describing the land where it was surveyed, and where it was not surveyed approximating as near an exact description as possible, and then proceed to some stream or river, and conduct the water by such aqueducts as he could invent and construct to lead the water to his ground for the purposes of irrigation alone.

While I was not particularly anxious to pass upon this subject at this session, I did consent to this bill being reported that it might come up here, because I supposed it would lead to discussion and reflection. I say again that of the portions of our mountain lands and our plain lands and mesa lands that are desert lands, not over 2 or 3 per cent. can ever be irrigated. The water is not there to irrigate them. They are non-irrigable lands, and must be treated in that sense, whether we regard them as pastoral lands or mineral lands or agricultural lands. My apprehension is (and I think it is founded upon just observation and figures) that not over 3 per cent. of them can ever be irrigated. I have studied the question somewhat, but I have not the figures before me to-day.

Now I propose to amend this bill so that it shall read:

That any person of requisite age who may be entitled to become a citizen and who has filed his declaration to become such may file a declaration with the register of the land district in which any desert land is situated—

Mark the expression, "in which any desert land is situated"— that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land, not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same, within the period of three years thereafter.

Then in line 10, after the word "thereafter," I propose this as an amendment, or something like it:

Provided, however, That the person so conducting water on or to any tract of desert land of 640 acres, shall not acquire any exclusive right to the use of the water conducted to said tract of desert land for the purpose of irrigating the same beyond what shall be actually necessary for redeeming and cultivating the same; but the same, and the water in all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water-supply, shall remain and be held for the use of the public for purposes of irrigation.

So that the person attempting to irrigate six hundred and forty acres would not get any exclusive right to the water which he may conduct to his tract of land for purposes of irrigation, and should not have the right to cut others off from tapping the lakes or tapping the streams or the rivers from which the water-supply might come; so as to leave it open not only to conduct the supply of water to his own tract, but that others may carry forward the same water that is carried to that tract, if there is to be more than sufficient, more than is necessary for the purpose of redeeming and cultivating that tract. I suggest that in the interest of all persons who may go into the business of irrigating desert land.

I have this notion on the subject, however, that whether these lands in the future are to be treated as pastoral lands or whether they are to be in some sense redeemed for agricultural purposes, any law on the subject ought to provide, not that a man may have six hundred and forty acres, but I would not object to his having a very large amount in excess of that. Six hundred and forty acres are of no account for pastoral purposes. In a desert country where the grass is exceedingly sparse, where it is scattered in bunches at great distances apart, I would not object to his having a much larger territory than six hundred and forty acres of land, provided he should not have a water front along any stream or around any lake which would cut off other persons desiring to occupy or redeem the land from the privileges of that stream; and any bill that may hereafter be brought in upon this subject, in my opinion, ought to provide for a frontage along the irrigable stream or streams sufficiently large to afford water for irrigation; not that one person may take a section or a number of sections and cover the front of a stream, but that others may approach to the stream and then extend indefinitely into the desert for pastoral purposes occupying large tracts of land.

What few desert lands there are in California are, I am led to believe, somewhat different from the general character of desert lands in the Territories. In the great interior basin, as we used to call it of California, and in all the Territories we know there are desert lands. The truth is that after we cross the one hundredth meridian, and I think after we cross the ninety-sixth or ninety-seventh, there is no land beyond that which can be called practically agricultural land, that is, land as farmers understand agricultural land, where the crops are produced by rain-fall. We leave the humid region and strike the arid region not far from the ninety-seventh meridian, and as to all beyond that, I am almost willing to say I could agree with the Senator from Kansas, or any other Senator, that much, very much more than the larger portion of all that land might have safely been left unsurveyed. What is the use of dividing a section of desert land into quarter sections and subdividing them into forty-acre tracts? Why go on to the desert anywhere where it cannot be irrigated and survey it into anything less than sections or even townships? It has been an expense that, I think, the Government will never reap any just return from. But that is a broad question. We are going to go into a policy about how we shall utilize the desert land; how we shall treat the desert land. I have thought and still feel that it is a subject which ought to receive very lengthy study, and that we ought to have the benefit of the experience, not only of travelers and occupants in the Territories, but of the scientific corps of the Government that have for years and years explored those regions.

I do not object to the bill before us and with the amendments proposed, but I should still be more heartily in favor of it if the Territories were all left off and it was proposed to try the experiment on Oregon and California. I offer the amendment which I have indicated, to come in after the word "thereafter," on line 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois submits an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "thereafter," in line 10, section 1, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That the person so conducting water on or to any one tract of desert land of six hundred and forty acres shall not acquire any exclusive right to the use of the water conducted to said tract of desert land for the purpose of irrigating the same beyond what shall be actually necessary for the purpose of redeeming and cultivating the same; but the same and the water in all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water-supply shall remain and be held for the use of the public for purposes of irrigation.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] answered somewhat the suggestions I made in reference to this bill. He and also my colleague [Mr. ALLISON] suggested, in response to what I said in reference to our system of land surveys, that the system is not perhaps so perfect as I seemed to suppose. I submit that their answer to my suggestion was, after all, no answer. They suggest that it is not advisable that we extend our system of surveys at present; but that our system of surveys in itself is the most perfect of any that we have ever had or can have, I think all will admit: a system of straight lines and looking to taking the land in compact form. That is all that I claimed or insisted upon with reference to our system of surveys.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] that it will be found in time that there is much misunderstanding and misconception in reference to our public lands in the so-called desert district. I can remember very well the time in my own State, as I doubt not you, sir, can in Michigan, when there were large portions of these States that are now so very fertile which were regarded as entirely unsusceptible to settlement or cultivation, and persons who traveled through them, accustomed as they had been to a timbered country and to a country where there was plenty of timber for fencing and for fuel and plenty of water, esteemed it impossible and reported that centuries would pass before portions of our State would be settled. I can remember very well hearing twenty years ago, with reference to the State of Kansas, that no portion of that State could be settled beyond fifty miles west of the Missouri River; that it was utterly impossible that you could ever cultivate those lands, because it would be impossible to obtain water or timber; and now we know that we have almost an empire in that State, and it is doubtful whether there is any portion of it that cannot be utimately settled. I remember I have heard the same thing of Colorado, and each year is but giving renewed evidence that lands which were regarded as entirely unsusceptible of settlement can be settled and improved and pay well and a large profit to those who settle upon them.

Now, with reference to the mineral lands and other lands to which the Senator from California referred, the point I insist upon is that the Government should never be called upon to make a patent for its lands until there has been a survey under the authority of the Government; that the Government should never be called upon or required to take surveys made by individuals who own the land or persons employed by them, but that the survey should be made under the direction and authority of the Government before the patent shall issue; and though it may be all right to allow settlers on these lands prior to their being surveyed, yet there should be a system by which the Government should have the lands surveyed before it gives title to them.

Again, in reference to this bill the suggestion made, that there is nothing here pointing out or establishing any rule under which there shall be the irrigation that is contemplated, I think is a most patent and very just one. Under the language of this bill if you once conduct water upon this land, then, though you may not touch it afterward and though you may not keep the water upon the land, if you conduct the water upon the land once, that is all-sufficient and you are entitled to a patent.

If the object of the bill is to promote settlement on these lands and their improvement, then the bill ought to be so amended as to provide that this water, once brought on the land, shall be continued there, and that the person in the occupation of it shall so conduct his enterprise as that there shall be reclamation in fact, and that it shall not be left to persons to go there for purposes of speculation or any other purpose than the honest purpose of securing this land and reclaiming it, so that they can bring water upon it and then desert it and say that they have brought the water on there and are entitled to their patents. I fear that, under the bill as it now stands, the construction of it will be that if a man once conducts the water upon it that is all that is required. I am sure the Senator from California does not intend that it shall have that construction, and I am very certain he will be quite willing to so amend the bill that it shall be carried out in its spirit and what he intends; that this land shall be reclaimed in fact and that the party shall not be allowed to merely bring the water upon the land and then for that act and for that alone be entitled to a patent for the land. If that is all that is required, merely to bring the water upon land, then I can see no necessity for having any such law as this. I do not see why a man cannot take the land at once, especially where it has been surveyed and brought into market, by paying the dollar and a quarter an acre or by pre-empting it, unless it is intended that he shall go in advance of survey and in advance of the land being brought into market, and that the person by reason of his diligence, and his enterprise, and his energy in bringing the water there and keeping it there and reclaiming the land in fact is then entitled to his patent. If this can be done and preserve the system at the same time, I shall have no objection to the bill.

I think the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is a very proper one, however, that the location ought to be made in as compact form as practicable. I understand the Senator from California does not object to that, and perhaps he has an amendment prepared to meet that view. I think it ought to be done. I think it ought also to have a provision so that there shall be no question as to what he shall do, that he shall do more than merely bring the water on the land in order to reclaim it.

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senator from Iowa would prepare and submit his amendment, it is very likely I should have no objection to it. I suppose he does not mean to provide that after the title shall have passed to the person he shall do certain things to the land, because that would not be operative at all. If he means that he shall in good faith act up to the time he gets his patent, I have no objection to it; but you cannot follow the title by anything running with the land, so to speak.

Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly not. I do not propose anything of that kind after he gets his title.

Mr. SARGENT. Then if the Senator will prepare his amendment, if it embraces the idea as I understand it, I think there will be no objection to it.

I should like to say that the necessity of this bill is that a person cannot go on the land until the water is put there; he cannot live there. The pre-emption and homestead laws require settlement of the individual with his family. He must live there bona fide in order to get any title at all. That on desert land is an actual impossibility. There was a case in the State of California where it was attempted by pre-emption to take up desert lands, and they fixed it in this way: the families actually lived upon the land while the fathers of the families and those doing the work went miles off, some twenty miles, if I am not mistaken, down to the border of a lake and there raised corn and some other articles in order to feed their families that staid on the desert land. Working so at a distance from their homes, upon the border of the lake, and raising nearly enough for the subsistence of their families, they managed to keep their families on the land, and so give a colorable appearance to a settlement until they could get their title under the pre-emption laws. But there was a good deal of suffering in the families; and they ought not to be required to go through such tedious, indirect methods in order to acquire a title to desert lands. The region now has been irrigated until it blossoms like the rose. I refer to Muscle Slough, near the Tulare Valley. It is one of the finest parts of our State; and the only way they could get a title under the laws was by putting their families in the midst of the desert and carrying them the food that they raised elsewhere, and so keeping them until such time as their possession could ripen under the United States laws into title; and then, having obtained the land, they went to work and brought the irrigation upon it, led the water upon it, which has made it a delightful home for themselves and their families. But that is a very indirect, expensive, and cruel process.

Now we propose by this bill that the parties shall have a right to have an exclusive right to buy the land for three years, provided they in good faith start to bring water to the land, and do bring the water to the land; and when they have satisfied the United States Land Office that they have brought the water there——

Mr. WEST. How much water?

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator asks how much water. Of course enough to make it an object for people to occupy the land. That is all. There is no object in taking desert lands unless a person can cultivate them. These desert lands yield richly, provided they can get the water. To live on them without sufficient water, if it is to be had from the heavens or from the streams, is entirely useless and idle; it cannot be done. A person cannot live there unless he has irrigation; and where is the use of insufficiently irrigating? It would be like a man insufficiently cultivating his land. You might as well provide in selling a piece of agricultural land to a farmer that he shall sufficiently cultivate it thereafter. His interest runs in that direction.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from California will permit me—and I think I have his permission—I understood him to say that these lands when treated by artificial irrigation became enormously productive. If that is the case, what is the reason for giving the person who takes them 640 acres when a man who takes ordinary land gets but 160 acres?

Mr. SARGENT. Simply because it is very expensive and difficult to conduct the water to the land, and the more sections intervene between a person who conducts the water and the fountain-head, the more difficult it is for him to do it and get water enough. If his canal runs over the land of a neighbor, he will probably have to join with that neighbor in enlarging that canal in order that he may get water to his own land. Simply because the ordinary land that a person takes is fit for cultivation, rich, ready, prepared by nature to his hand; but if he goes on the desert lands he has to create the estate, so to speak, and I was trying to show that his interest was to make that estate profitable. After his land is irrigated, after he has gone to all this large expense, it may cost him a great many dollars more per acre than the land is worth, a great many more than ordinary agricultural lands, yet the soil is deep, and as I said before has all the elements to make it productive except the water. Of course there are different degrees of excellence in desert land. Some are so alkaline that they will produce much less than others which have less alkali, and so on, but as a rule they will pay for irrigation, provided the person can keep the possessory right, so to speak, during the time that it is necessary to perfect the system of irrigation.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not know about the condition of the bill as to amendments, but I have some amendments that I find on consultation with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] are in the line of his remarks, and I should like to offer them.

Mr. SARGENT. I will give the Senator an opportunity in a moment. I was going to say one word in reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. OGLESBY.] I am not entirely sure, from the little glance I have been able to give to that amendment, but that it may produce mischief in unsettling the rights recognized by our courts as mining customs and recognized by statute so far as mining claims are concerned and things of that kind. Mines and deserts are mixed up together. All about Eureka, in the State of Nevada, there are deserts, and yet there are valuable water-rights there for mining purposes. If you legislate hastily or without sufficient care upon this subject you may do great damage to water-works and canals that have cost immense amounts of money. The United States statute upon that matter is cited in the report:

> Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed; but whenever any person, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

If I understand the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, it provides that the water shall be used exclusively for irrigation purposes.

Mr. OGLESBY. "And mining" can be added.

Mr. SARGENT. Suppose it is used to run a mill, for mechanical purposes. I will say, however, about this that I do not care to minutely criticise the amendment of the Senator. I am willing that it should be adopted. I suppose the bill has already been so much changed that the House will hardly take it off-hand, and it will have to go to a committee of conference, and then this amendment can be carefully considered, and therefore I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. OGLESBY. I have no particular care about the amendment. My object was what I understand the Senator's to be, that the water used for the purposes of irrigating a tract of desert land should not be appropriated for any other purpose than for redeeming and cultivating it, that is all, and that the water should be left free to all other persons for any purpose.

Mr. SARGENT. Taking it with the view of the Senator, in the way he suggests, I have no objection.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President——

Mr. SARGENT. Let us have the amendment of the Senator from Illinois reported and acted on.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will hear it.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "thereafter" in line 10 of section 1, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the person so conducting water on or to any one tract of desert land of six hundred and forty acres shall not acquire any exclusive right to the use of the water conducted to said tract of desert land for the purpose of irrigating the same beyond what shall be actually necessary for redeeming and cultivating the same; but the same, and the water in all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply, shall remain and be held for the use of the public for purposes of irrigation and mining.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not object to that.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, though sympathizing very earnestly with the Senator from California in his efforts to relieve these desert lands from their present condition of uselessness, and understanding thoroughly what a very great benefit such a measure might be to a certain portion of the State which he has the honor to represent, I think from the character of the bill and from the nature of the amendments that are being offered here, that it might more justly be styled a measure to irritate a community than to irrigate it.

Taking the amendment that is offered now by the Senator from Illinois, and taking his experience and mine, and that of the Senators from California on the question of water rights in that State, the proposition would immediately bring anybody connected with the conducting of water to one tract of land in contact and conflict with all his neighbors. The provision is that the water introduced upon any one section shall not be the exclusive property of the conductor. That is the idea, is it not? Then how much water is that man to conduct upon that section? More than he wants or for all his neighbors? I believe such a provision as that would require five hundred and sixty-one by-laws to carry it into effective use and adoption by a community. This is legislation in a very commendable direction, but it is hasty, improvident legislation. Most assuredly, if any such amendment as that is adopted here without proper consideration, it will be more than defeated by the parties who will be connected with it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If there is a disposition to vote on this amendment, I will withhold what I have to say; but I have some amendments to offer. I will delay my proposition until this vote is taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

Several SENATORS. The Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not an amendment to it. The amendment of the Senator from California has priority.

Mr. WEST. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the first section it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no person shall be permitted either to reserve or acquire title to more than one section under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. OGLESBY.]

Mr. WITHERS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "thereafter," in the tenth line of the first section, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That the persons so conducting water on or to any one tract of desert land of six hundred and forty acres shall not acquire any exclusive right to the use of the water conducted to such tract of desert land for the purpose of irrigating the same beyond what shall be actually necessary for redeeming and cultivating the same; but the same, and the water in all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water-supply shall remain and be held for the use of the public for purposes of irrigation and mining.

The question being put, the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. OGLESBY. I shall have to call for a division on that question, for I am decidedly of opinion that the amendment is clearly needed. Perhaps the remark of the Senator from Louisiana has left the impression that it is not commendable. The truth of it is——

Mr. SARGENT. I hope the amendment will be allowed to go with the bill, and the committee of conference will act on it.

Mr. OGLESBY. It is a wise and necessary precaution, I absolutely think.

Mr. SARGENT. Let it go, then.

Mr. WEST. If the object of the Senator is to get such an amendment on to the bill as will receive the deliberate consideration of a committee of conference, I shall have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question again.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, I think the discussion has shown one thing, and if not, my own reflection has satisfied me as to my duty in one particular. It is that we should not pass a bill which authorizes persons to go upon the public lands and take possession of them under a color of authority until those lands are surveyed. To say nothing of the difficulties which would afterward arise to the Government, the controversies between claimants, I think, would be numerous and serious. At any rate, the Government has a right to know exactly where its lines of property are between the Government and individual citizens, and it never can know under such a bill as this. Therefore, I think the first essential requisite in the passage of an act of this sort is a survey of the lands to which these titles are to be applied. I move, then, that there be a new section to the bill, and I think it ought to be the first section of the bill, in these words:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause such public lands as are not adapted to agricultural purposes without irrigation, to be surveyed from time to time, and divided into tracts best adapted to the settlement and improvement of the country, and not exceeding six hundred and forty acres each, and to offer the same for entry and sale as is hereinafter provided.

If that could be the first section, I should then offer certain amendments to what would be the second section. It seems to me that the Government has a right to some security from parties making application that the conditions on which the application is made and granted shall be complied with. This bill is out of the line of the precedent established by the homestead act. It evidently contemplates the occupation and ownership of these lands by persons who already have some property, and, therefore, it is reasonable to assume that they are at the start capable of giving the Government some security that the undertaking on which they enter will be performed. Now, then, I should say that we ought to insert after the word "such" in line 6 the words "twenty-five cents," leaving the ultimate payment to be $1. And then, to make the section conform to the two ideas that the land is to be first surveyed, and that the settlers shall have paid twenty-five cents per acre, I send to the Clerk's desk various amendments designed to make the section conform to that view. There are several of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "such," in line 6, it is proposed to insert:

And upon payment of twenty-five cents per acre.

After the word "such," in line 7, to insert "that has been surveyed."

In line 8, to strike out the words "of desert land" and insert:

Thereof to be by him described according to the survey, &c.

Strike out, beginning in line 10 and ending in line 13, inclusive, the words:

Said declaration shall describe particularly said section of land if surveyed; and, if unsurveyed, shall describe the same as nearly as possible without a survey.

Strike out the words "and twenty-five cents" in line 17.

So that, if amended, the section will read:

That it shall be lawful for any citizen of the United States, or any person of requisite age "who may be entitled to become a citizen, and who has filed his declaration to become such," and upon payment of twenty-five cents per acre, to file a declaration under oath with the register and the receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated that has been surveyed, that he intends to reclaim a tract thereof, to be by him described according to the survey, and not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same, within the period of three years thereafter: Provided, however, That the persons so conducting water on or to any one tract of desert land of six hundred and forty acres shall not acquire any exclusive right to the use of the water conducted to said tract of desert land for the purpose of irrigating the same beyond what shall be actually necessary for redeeming and cultivating the same; but the same, and the water in all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply, shall remain and be held for the use of the public for purposes of irrigation and mining. At any time within the period of three years after filing said declaration, upon making satisfactory proof of the reclamation of said tract of land in the manner aforesaid, and upon the payment to the receiver of the sum of $1 per acre for a tract of land not exceeding six hundred and forty acres to any one person, a patent for the same shall be issued to him: Provided, That no person shall be permitted either to reserve or acquire title to more than one section under this act.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Mr. President, it must have become evident to Senators by this time that this bill cannot be perfected in open Senate. I think the bill ought to be reconsidered in the committee. Therefore I make the motion, if it be in order, that this bill be postponed until the first Monday in next December. I think it had better follow the railroad bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves that the bill be postponed until the first Monday in December.

Mr. KELLY. I hope that will not be done. The bill, I think, can be perfected by adopting the amendments which have been suggested; and those that are proposed which ought not to be adopted can be voted down.

Now, a word with respect to the amendments proposed by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.] With all due deference to him, I do think that the result would be to defeat the object of the bill, and for this reason: It is well known that all of the States to which this bill will apply have from year to year been importuning Congress to make appropriations for surveying the public lands, with very poor result. Very small amounts of money are annually appropriated to survey small portions of the public domain there. The people have become restive and impatient because the surveys have not been extended over the public lands as they ought to be. Not only that, but in cases where appropriations have been made, the surveyors-general in the different States and Territories are always instructed to survey those lands which are best adapted for settlement and which may be most readily brought into the market. As a matter of course, we do not expect for a generation yet to come that any of these desert lands will be surveyed. There is not the remotest probability that any Congress will make an appropriation for that purpose; but we all know that Government surveys made in these desert lands must be connected with the surveys that are made in the different States of the barren lands. They must be connected with the system of surveys and they must be surveyed, as well those that will be subject to irrigation as those lying contiguous to such lands. We cannot survey one portion of the public lands that will be settled up, without surveying another portion. The lands must be surveyed all together; and I say here now, that if this amendment be adopted, I do not think any settlements will be made upon these lands for the simple reason that no Congress will appropriate money for the survey of the lands that are wholly worthless at the present time. That is my own opinion, with all due deference to the Senator from Massachusetts. I would far rather that his amendment should be adopted, if it could be brought into practical use. There is no question that it would be better that all the public lands should be surveyed if we could get an appropriation for the purpose, but we cannot do it; and for that reason I shall oppose the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I think the Senator from Massachusetts might withdraw his amendment. I do not know that there is any particular object in objecting to the twenty-five cents per acre as a prerequisite to entry of the land, because any person who undertakes to reclaim a section of desert land must have some means to do it, and consequently he will be able enough probably to pay this twenty-five cents an acre, and it would be a guarantee of good faith. I agree with the Senator from Oregon entirely upon the survey question. Getting these surveys made to connect with the surveys in the East or the far West would be very expensive.

Mr. ALLISON. It never ought to be done in that way.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Iowa suggests that it never ought to be that these lands ought to be surveyed by themselves.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is exactly what this bill will do if amended as I propose.

Mr. SARGENT. No, this requires a survey, which means a survey connected with the ordinary United States survey. I suppose the Senator is aware that elsewhere than in this Chamber there has been a very strong fight to get the amount of $150,000 appropriated upon surveys all over the country. A committee of another body reported only $50,000 and after two or three days' fight, I understand that other body has managed to vote $150,000, just about one-twentieth of the amount that ought to be expended in order to accommodate the swelling tide that come West, who want improvements and who want to pay for their improvements. There are counties in my State containing fifteen or twenty thousand people where farms are unsurveyed down to this day, and they have been there for twenty years. I have tried my best for years, when Congress was much more liberal than during this year or the last year, to get an adequate appropriation to survey those lands, but I could not get such appropriations. What is the result? Men die, or they want to move to some other neighborhood and sell their possessory right, their inchoate pre-emption. Many of them do so. The purchaser is ignorant of the fact that he cannot deraign his title through the first possessor; and in ten or fifteen years, when the survey is finally made, the person who has purchased finds that some railroad company has a grant that spreads out twenty miles on each side of its road and that it has a prior right. The railroad company can wait ten or fifteen years and then come in and cut him off entirely.

These things are so in all the States and Territories when the public lands are unsurveyed, and it gets worse and worse every year. Men die, or men sell out, or their property is sold under execution or by some other means, and the entanglement is getting to be "confusion worse confounded." We cannot get an appropriation adequate to survey the lands, and to wait until the surveys are made is simply to postpone the operation of the bill until the Senator and myself, I fear, will both be dead. It will certainly be a long time in the future, perhaps some time during the next centennial. I am simply predicting the necessary result, because in my own State and in my own county, in Nevada County, hundreds of thousands of acres of land are unsurveyed where people have improvements and farms and they urge to have surveys made, but cannot get them.

Mr. INGALLS. Does not this bill cover it?

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir, this bill does not pretend to cover it, and no bill will cover it until appropriations are made to survey all these lands. I have no doubt a bill will reach this Chamber appropriating $150,000 for surveying the whole lands of the country, and how is this to go into operation in regard to lands where a bird cannot live, where there is no population at all, desert lands where men will not go unless they can have the advantage of going upon the land before it is surveyed? You simply cannot put the bill into operation; but in order that there may be good faith under this bill, that men may not hold the land for three years only for purposes of speculation, let them pay the twenty-five cents per acre into the Treasury. I do not know but that that is a pretty good provision. I think it would work well; but if you want the bill to operate at all, do not make it wait until you can get surveys through the medium of congressional appropriations.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If anything were needed to show the impolicy of this bill, the remarks of the Senator from California would furnish that needful view of the effect. I was not before aware that the Government of the United States had been so unwise as not to make surveys not only in line with civilization, but I had indeed supposed that our surveys were in advance of the occupation of the land. I can only say that that course would be very unwise for the Government and very unjust to the settlers. I cannot consent, because such a condition of things exists, growing out of the impolicy of the Government, to a measure, a distinct and definite measure, which means nothing more than the expansion and the multiplication of these conditions. If it be a hardship, as I can understand that it is a hardship, to the citizens who have gone upon the public lands, that they can neither find the limits to their possessions nor enjoy the evidence of title, there is a sufficient reason why we should not extend that policy. This bill as it comes from the committee does propose that citizens of the United States shall go upon a certain class of the public lands which have value in their prospective capacity for production, and occupy those lands without having in their possession any evidence of title and without any provision being made for a record showing the extent of the possessions. Can anything be more unwise as a matter of public policy? Look at what is likely to happen. The Government will some time or other grant a right of way over these lands for a railroad perhaps, in addition to those railways with titles to lands adjacent to the line of the road. Of course controversies arise at once between the railways and the occupants of this Territory.

I do believe that if this measure should be prefaced by anything it should be a provision that the land shall be surveyed, and it is a reflection upon the Government and I think ought to be fatal to any party or persons advocating a public policy that would not permit the Government to survey lands as fast and as far as they are needed for settlement. I cannot but believe that the time is near when Congress will make provision for surveying public lands as fast as they are wanted, and I see no reason in connecting the survey of these valleys with the great system of surveying which has been going on for years this side of the Rocky Mountains. Of course these Territories, limited in extent, irregular in form, must be surveyed according to the circumstances. It is for that reason that in the amendment which I propose it is left to the surveyors on the ground to divide these lands into such parcels as they think best adapted to the object in view, to wit, the settlement and improvement of the country.

I have nothing more to say in regard to this measure. I certainly cannot vote for a bill which authorizes citizens to go upon public lands and take possession of them without the limits being defined and the evidence of title made a matter of record.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, he proposes by some amendment to the bill to provide for extending the surveys all over those desert lands on the plan that we now have and have had for nearly a hundred years, by dividing the lands into townships, sections, quarter-sections, and other subdivisions. If I understand the amendment, it is of that character. I am not inclined to encourage by any vote of mine any further survey of these desert lands on the plan heretofore followed by the Government. What is the use of the Government spending hundreds of thousands of dollars annually to survey desert lands that never can be reclaimed? They are not all of them irrigable. Very limited portions of them are irrigable. Very large portions of the desert lands are non-irrigable and never can be reclaimed for the uses of agriculture. The best we can ever hope to make out of any part of them is to appropriate them for pastoral purposes. No man will ever want less than a section of them. No man will ever take less than a section of them. They never can be used or appropriated for pastoral purposes in any quantities under a section. They will more likely be required in quantities of townships, rather than sections, for pastoral purposes. Why then does the Senator desire to extend these surveys over these desert regions? I wish the surveys were stopped now, and not another dollar spent on them except in the valleys where there are productive lands in very limited quantities, and then there ought to be cardinal points established by triangulation or otherwise from which the surveys could be extended to agricultural portions of the desert lands, or that portion of the country where water moves. You could run from cardinal points lines along the rivers and in the valleys that may be appropriated for pastoral or agricultural purposes, and survey them into sections and subdivisions of sections to meet that point; but it is absolutely a waste of the public money to extend these surveys over those barren and arid and irreclaimable desert lands. There ought not to be another dollar expended on them. It would be better to divide them into townships and let them stand at that, if they are to be surveyed at all, rather than have the present system, by any amendment put on this bill, carried out as applicable to the non-arable lands of the desert. In that respect I think the Senator's amendment is a mistake, and I shall oppose it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. The Secretary will report it.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as the first section of the bill the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause such public lands as are not adapted to agricultural purposes without irrigation to be surveyed from time to time and divided into tracts best adapted to the settlement and improvement of the country, and not exceeding six hundred and forty acres each; and to offer the same for entry and sale as is hereinafter provided.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I had moved to postpone the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending which the Senator from Colorado moves to postpone the bill until the first Monday in December next. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 12, noes 24; no quorum voting.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Boutwell, Chaffee, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Ingalls, Logan, Merrimon, Randolph, Robertson, and Wright—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Cockrell, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry, Harvey, Hereford, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Sar-gent, Sharon, Sherman, Teller, Wadleigh, Windom, and Withers—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Christiancy, Conkling, Cooper, Dawes, Dennis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McCreery, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Ransom, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, West, and Whyte—30.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] which has been read.

Mr. HOWE. It seems to me that that amendment, or something very much like that, ought to be put on this bill for two reasons. It seems to me if every claimant can define his own claim, the titles must be inevitably and hopelessly involved; that one claim will overlap another. I do not see how you can avoid that.

Then it seems to me for another purpose you ought to agree to this survey. If you allow the claimants to mark out their own tracts, they will make them naturally as long on the streams as possible and as thin on the streams as possible. A section of land eighty rods wide is four miles long, and the man who gets the tract eighty rods wide on the stream commands the land for miles back, because the land back of it, no matter how many miles it extends, is not worth a cent to anybody except to him who can have access to the stream. Now, unless you allow the Government to shape these sections of six hundred and forty acres, and parcel out the stream, so as to make it available and useful to as large a portion of the adjacent country as possible, it seems to me you will squander all the water there is on a very few claimants, and thus for a very small sum of money give them a monopoly of all the adjacent country. Of course that is not the design of the bill, and it seems to me that some amendment should be put on the bill to guard against that operation.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator think this amendment does that?

Mr. HOWE. I supposed it did. I heard it read only once, and casually. I suppose it guarded against that, does it not?

Mr. SARGENT. If it would have that operation I certainly should have no objection to it; but the only point I was making against the amendment is that the bill would be very limited in its operation, because we could not get the money to survey the lands. That was the objection; but I would very much prefer if we could have the money to survey the lands, that the bill should only apply to surveyed lands. I think it would be better if we were only sure of getting the lands surveyed, and I am not entirely sure that it would not be better any way.

Mr. HOWE. It would be better for the claimant, unquestionably, because it prevents all disputes, having a definite, fixed boundary by public survey, and better for the Treasury inasmuch as it parcels out the water.

Mr. SARGENT. Some of the friends of the bill have suggested to me that it only should apply to surveyed lands. I am not strenuous about it myself, and am willing that the amendments should be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To what amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. SARGENT. To all the amendments offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Several SENATORS. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr BOUTWELL] will be agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following amendment, and I understand the Senator from California to accept it, to come in after the word "Dakota," after line 4 in section 3:

And the determination of what may be considered desert land shall be subject to the decision and regulation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. SARGENT. That, I think, would be the law in any event. There is no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the object of confining the provisions of this bill to the States and Territories named in section 3? If the principle contended for is valuable, why should it not be of universal application all over the public domain?

Mr. SARGENT. Because the conditions which this bill provides for do not exist all over the public domain. It is only in those States and Territories which are mentioned in the bill that I think the peculiar conditions of desert lands as distinguished, for instance, from grazing lands exist. I do not consider that grazing lands are desert lands by any means. Grazing lands will produce a hay crop, but desert lands ought not to produce a hay crop; if they do, they ought not to be subject to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I move to amend section 2 by inserting after the words "timber lands" the words "grazing lands," so as to read:

That all lands, exclusive of timber lands, grazing lands, and mineral lands, which will not, without irrigation, produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed desert lands within the meaning of this act.

Mr. SARGENT. I have not the slightest objection to that amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I offer the amendment so that the bill may come within the intention named by the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. I have not the slightest objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I offer an amendment that I guess the Senator from California will agree to. After the word "act" in the fourth line of section 2 I move to add:

Which fact shall be ascertained by proof of at least three credible witnesses under oath, whose affidavits shall be filed in the land office in which such tract of land may be situated.

Mr. SARGENT. I think that it is a very unusual provision. Why do you not say "four" or why not say "two?" Why do you require three witnesses?

Mr. CHAFFEE. I would as soon have it four.

Mr. SARGENT. That is not required at all. I have no doubt the Senator would just as lief have it a hundred. Two witnesses are all ever required by biblical authority or statutes anywhere. Two witnesses may convict a man of treason.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I will accept two.

Mr. SARGENT. If I understand the Senator, he says he is willing to reduce the number to two.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Section 2 provides—

That all lands, exclusive of timber lands, grazing lands, and mineral lands which, will not without irrigation produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed desert lands within the meaning of this act.

All that is required in this bill to construe these lands as desert lands is a simple declaration. What I seek for is to require some proof that the lands are desert lands. I am willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from California and say "two witnesses" instead of "three witnesses."

Mr. SARGENT. Say "two or more." Why confine it to two? If they want more, let them bring them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. SARGENT. Not as modified to say "two or more."

Mr. CHAFFEE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As modified, the amendment will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I will ask the Senator from California if he made an amendment in relation to the form in which the land should be taken, whether in a compact form?

Mr. SARGENT. I will offer the amendment. It had escaped my mind. After the word "thereafter," in line 10 of section 1, I move to add the words:

And said tract of land shall be in compact form.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the Senator to insert—

Not exceeding in length twice the width.

Mr. SARGENT. I think that would be refining down very much. That would be "gilding refined gold," as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] suggests. My amendment is to insert after "thereafter," in line 10, the words:

And said tract of land shall be in compact form.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to insert in line 9, after the word "section," the words "in legal subdivisions."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. In lines 11, 12, and 13 I move to strike out the words:

If surveyed, and, if unsurveyed, shall describe the same as nearly as possible without a survey.

Mr. SARGENT. That has already been done by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not hear it reported, and did not know it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those words the Chair understands have been stricken out.

Mr. INGALLS. That amendment was not reported.

Mr. MORRILL. I am informed by the Senator from Massachusetts that an amendment was passed which no longer requires the amendment which I suggested to the Senator from California, and therefore I ask to withdraw the amendment just agreed to in regard to the land being in compact form.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well. By unanimous consent I shall ask to withdraw the words just added:

And said tract of land shall be in compact form.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The surveyors will settle that matter.

Mr. SARGENT. Is there any objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection and that amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HOWE. Now I ask the Senator from Kansas to withdraw the amendment he last moved.

Mr. INGALLS. That I decline to do.

Mr. HOWE. That is the most singular conduct I ever heard of, for a Senator to decline to withdraw an amendment when he is asked to do so.

Mr. INGALLS. It is unnecessary for the Senator from Wisconsin to importune me or to expostulate with me; I shall not withdraw it.

Mr. HOWE. That suprises me still more. Then I will move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator will not do that. It meets the approbation of the Senator from California and certainly is germane and necessary to the object of the bill.

Mr. HOWE. It will have just this effect: it will be an excuse for the surveyors to run the subdivision lines instead of running section lines in making the survey.

Mr. INGALLS. It may be necessary.

Mr. SARGENT. Is not a section a legal subdivision?

Mr. HOWE. But it is not the only legal subdivision, and that will be made the pretext for cutting it up into eighty-acre tracts, and it will make the survey at least four times as costly as it otherwise would be. That is all that I care for.

Mr. INGALLS. I think the amendment is very essential.

Mr. HOWE. It is very essential for the surveyor; there is no doubt about that; but it is not so indispensable to the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. Has the amendment been voted on?

Mr. INGALLS. It has been voted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin move to reconsider the vote?

Mr. SARGENT. I hope the Senator will make no point on that question.

Mr. HOWE. No, sir; I will not move to reconsider if the Senator from California thinks it will embarrass the bill to do so.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I should like to hear the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause such public lands as are not adapted to agricultural purposes without irrigation, to be surveyed from time to time, and divided into tracts best adapted to the settlement and improvement of the country, and not exceeding six hundred and forty acres each, and to offer the same for entry and sale as is hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That it shall be lawful for any citizen of the United States, or any person of requisite age, who may be entitled to become a citizen and who has filed his declaration to become such, on the payment of twenty-five cents per acre, to file a declaration under oath with the register and the receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated that has been surveyed, that he intends to reclaim a tract thereof to be by him described according to the survey, and not exceeding one section, in legal subdivisions, by conducting water upon the same within the period of three years thereafter: Provided, however, That the person so conducting water on or to any one tract of desert land of six hundred and forty acres shall not acquire any exclusive right to the use of the water conducted to said tract of desert land for the purpose of irrigating the same beyond what shall be actually necessary for redeeming and cultivating the same; but the same and the water in all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water-supply shall remain and be held for the use of the public for purposes of irrigation and mining. At any time within the period of three years after filing said declaration, upon making satisfactory proof of the reclamation of said tract of land in the manner aforesaid, and upon the payment to the receiver of the sum of $1 per acre for a tract of land not exceeding six hundred and forty acres to any one person, a patent for the same shall be issued to him: Provided, That no person shall be permitted either to reserve or acquire title to more than one section under this act.

SEC. 3. That all lands, exclusive of timber lands, grazing lands, and mineral lands, which will not, without irrigation, produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed desert lands within the meaning of this act, which fact shall be ascertained by the proof of two or more credible witnesses under oath, whose affidavits shall be filed in the land office of the district in which said tract of land may be situated.

SEC. 4. That this act shall only apply to and take effect in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, and Dakota; and the determination of what may be considered desert land shall be subject to the decision and regulation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not understand the expression used in regard to "six hundred and forty acres in subdivisions."

Mr. INGALLS. In legal subdivisions.

Mr. OGLESBY. Six hundred and forty acres to be subdivided.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know what the action of the surveyors would be in regard to any particular tract of land.

Mr. HOWE. I want to tell my friend from Illinois that it is no use to raise that inquiry, because the Senator from Kansas has peremptorily declined to relinquish that provision.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that "legal subdivisions" mean the ordinary legal subdivion, so many rods long and so many wide, six hundred and forty acres, or a legal subdivision of the same, representing eighty acres, one hundred and sixty acres, or three hundred and twenty acres. That is the way the land must be surveyed, as I understand it, under the bill.

Mr. OGLESBY. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to read, "tracts of six hundred and forty acres."

Mr. BOUTWELL. "Not exceeding six hundred and forty acres."

Mr. OGLESBY. Where it is to be reclaimed as desert lands for the purposes of agriculture by irrigation, I cannot see, and the Senator from Kansas cannot see, the utility in any event of subdividing the section.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the point.

Mr. OGLESBY. It adds very materially to the expenses of the survey. I should like the bill very much better if the Senator would withdraw that portion of it.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the Senator appealing to me personally?

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes; I say if the Senator would consent to a modification of the bill so that the land which they survey shall be only a section of six hundred and forty acres, I should like the bill very much better.

Mr. INGALLS. I must decline to withdraw it.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am very sorry the Senator cannot see it.

Mr. ALLISON. Have the amendments all been concurred in?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All have been concurred in. Does the Senator from Iowa object?

Mr. ALLISON. I desire a separate vote on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa states that he would like a separate vote on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. The question will be put separately on that amendment if there be no objection.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question first will be upon the reserved amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. I ask if I can have a separate vote on the amendment proposed subdividing by subdivisions the section of six hundred and forty acres?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the amendment now pending. The question is on concurring in the amendment in line 9 to insert after the word "section" the words "in legal subdivisions."

The amendment was not concurred in.

Mr. CHAFFEE. In the fourteenth line of the first section, after the word "proof," I move to insert the words "to the register and receiver," so as to read:

At any time within the period of three years after filing said declaration, upon making satisfactory proof to the register and receiver of the reclamation of said tract of land in manner aforesaid, &c.

Mr. SARGENT. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OGLESBY. In the third section, now section 4, I believe, as the Chief Clerk has read the bill, I move to strike out after the word "Oregon" the following words:

And Nevada, and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, and Dakota.

Mr. SARGENT. If there is a State in the Union to which the bill ought to apply, it is the State of Nevada. I should like to say that every Senator and every member from the three Pacific States to which the bill applies agreed to it, and every Territorial Delegate is also in favor of this bill. I do not know whether they will like it since it has been so much amended, (of course they have to be consulted in reference to that,) but they were in favor of the principle of the bill. I think it would be a great hardship upon the Territorial Delegates who have worked very earnestly to get some relief in this matter, they having no vote on this floor, to cut them off now.

Mr. PADDOCK. The bill is certainly as desirable for the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as for any of the States.

Mr. SARGENT. It is especially desirable for them. The Delegates from Arizona and New Mexico are very anxious indeed that the bill should extend to them. Of course they cannot speak here, but I make this statement in justice to them and I hope the amendment will be withdrawn or that it will not be adopted.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withdraw it.

Mr. OGLESBY. My purpose is not to thwart the wishes of the Delegates of those Territories and it is not to retard the passage of the bill. I gave my assent to this bill as a member of the Committee on Public Lands, chiefly because I desired to see some experiment of this sort tried with the desert lands. I supposed that in the States of Oregon and California there were opportunities to make an effort to reclaim these desert lands, by conducting water from navigable streams or from lakes out into them, and to try experiments. It is very expensive to the people to reclaim those lands. They cannot reclaim them by quarter sections or half sections; it is too expensive to do it in that way. Therefore in order to give some test to this plan, to see whether it might not afterward be applied to the Territories and see what effect this new policy would have as applied to desert land, I thought it wise enough to apply it to the States of Oregon and California, which are largely populated States, where there is a great deal of wealth and where there are great tracts of lands such as are described in this bill. I think the experiment might be tried there and the Territories would not suffer a great deal by waiting a year or two to see the effect it would have in those two States. It would enable the public to see what should be the final policy in regard to these desert lands. As it now stands the bill includes all the Territories, and it is a policy as applicable to the disposition of all the desert lands for the whole Government. I do not think it would be any hardship to these Territories to wait two or three years, or such sufficient length of time as to practically test this experiment in the two largely populated States of Oregon and California, in both of which States there are desert lands as defined in this bill.

That is the only object I have in moving the amendment, for if the bill should pass in its present shape it becomes the policy of the Government as applicable to all these Territories, to all the vast plains. I think the Delegates from those Territories would take it as no great hardship to try the effect of this experimental policy in two States for a while. That is my only object in offering the amendment. I do not know whether, upon reflection, in the course of time I should be satisfied that this is the best policy to be applied to the desert lands. It may not be best, and it is well enough to try it first. I for one am willing to try it; but if the bill is passed as it is now it becomes the fixed policy for all thinly populated Territories of the country, and it might be difficult afterward to modify it. The only purpose I had in my amendment was that, and I think it is a good one.

Mr. INGALLS. I am very much surprised to learn that Oregon is considered an arid, or sterile, or desert State. It certainly lies immediately upon the seaboard, is penetrated by some of the largest watercourses on this continent, and is very heavily timbered. It was my impression that the humidity of the atmosphere in that State amounted at certain seasons of the year almost to saturation. I have been informed, upon what I supposed to be reliable authority, that the actual precipitation of moisture there is such that the population at some seasons of the year are practically amphibious and that they exhibit a decided tendency to become web-footed. I should like to be informed by the Senators from Oregon whether there is in the limits of that State anything known as desert land in the sense used in this bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. I have not taken any part in the discussion of this measure, and it has not been because I am not heartily in favor of the bill, for the bill as reported from the committee had my hearty approval. It has my approval yet, although I cannot support it in its present condition as heartily as I could have supported the bill as reported from the committee.

With reference to the desert lands in Oregon, I will state that Oregon is a very large State. There are 95,000 square miles in the State of Oregon. It is a very large territory, embracing a great variety of soil and of climate as well. There are a great many of the high valleys of Oregon lying between the Blue Mountains and the Cascade Mountains that are what might be termed and are in fact desert lands; hundreds of thousand of acres.

My friend from Kansas says that he had understood that Oregon was very heavily timbered. That is true with reference to a very large proportion of the territory of Oregon, but it is not true with reference to other large portions of that territory. If my friend from Kansas were to make a trip to Oregon, leaving the great overland road at Kelton, on the Union Pacific, he would be compelled to take the stage, because we are not favored with railroads in that country, and travel some seven hundred and forty miles by stage from that point to Portland, Oregon. He would, in making that trip, travel two hundred and fifty or three hundred miles through a region of country that may, I presume, be termed, a great portion of it, desert land.

Mr. INGALLS. Is that owing to the want of rain-fall?

Mr. MITCHELL. In part, and in part it is owing to the formation of the country and the character of the soil. So far as that portion of the State is concerned, this bill is applicable. As a matter of course the bill can have no kind of application to the great fertile valleys of Oregon, the Willamette Valley, the Umpqua Valley, the Rogue River Valley, the Columbia Valley, and other valleys, which contain hundreds of thousands of acres of the most fertile land that the sun ever shone upon—land that will produce more wheat to the acre than my friend from Kansas ever saw in his own State, or in any other State, or that he ever will see in Kansas or in any other State except Oregon!

Mr. INGALLS. How many bushels does it produce to the acre?

Mr. MITCHELL. As much as seventy-five bushels to the acre, and even more.

Mr. INGALLS. One hundred bushels to the acre is a small crop in Kansas.

Mr. MITCHELL. That may be a very small crop, or that may be a very large story, I do not know exactly which. [Laughter.] As far as that portion of the State is concerned, of course this bill has no application to it, and it was not the intention that it should have. But then as my friend has inquired whether there are any desert lands in Oregon, I have simply answered the question by saying that there are, that our State is so great, so large, embracing so much variety of soil and climate that while we have a great deal that is good we have some that is bad; and this bill is of very great importance to the people settled in that portion of our country.

I have not taken part in this debate at all from the fact that I have not felt able physically to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. OGLESBY.]

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to make one further remark, and that is that our Legislature has memorialized year after year in reference to some measure of the character of the one reported now by the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "Oregon" in the third section, so that the section if amended will read:

That this act shall only apply to and take effect in the States of California and Oregon.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NEW EDITION OF REVISED STATUTES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 1216) to provide for the preparation and publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The amendment was to strike out all of section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That said new edition shall be completed in manuscript by said commissioner by the 1st day of January, A. D. 1878, and by him presented to the Secretary of State for his examination and approval, who is hereby required to examine and compare the same, as amended, with all the amendatory acts, and within two months after having been submitted to him, and when the same shall be completed, the said Secretary shall duly certify the same under the seal of the Secretary of the State, and when printed and promulgated as herein provided the printed volumes shall be legal and conclusive evidence of the laws and treaties therein contained in all the courts of the United States and of the several States and Territories; and said Secretary shall cause 15,000 copies of the same to be printed and bound at the Government Printing Office and under the supervision of said commissioner, at the expense of the United States and without unnecessary delay.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will be adopted. I will simply explain what it consists in. It gives (and this was done at the suggestion of the Secretary of State) two months to examine the manuscript after it is completed and ready for publication. Then it adds a provision for a certificate under seal, making the laws conclusive evidence according to the former acts of Congress. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be at once adopted and the bill passed.

The amendment was concurred in.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4693) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States in respect to vacancies in the office of President and Vice-President was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

BARTHOLDI'S FOUNTAIN.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing the fountain of M. Auguste Bartholdi, now at Philadelphia, and placing the same in one of the public reservations in Washington City.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALBANY.

Mr. CONKLING submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire what legislation, if any, is needed in regard to the site for a public building at Albany, New York.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1270) to authorize the printing and distribution of the memorial addresses on the life and character of the late Michael C. Kerr, Speaker of the House of Representatives;

A bill (S. No. 286) for the relief of W. S. McComb, of the State of Georgia; and

A bill (S. No. 1271) to authorize the printing and distribution of the eulogies delivered in Congress on announcement of the death of the late Allen T. Caperton, a Senator from the State of West Virginia.

HATTIE D. M'KAIN.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask consent to have considered at the present time a few private pension bills on the Calendar. I move the present consideration of House bill No. 1347.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1347) granting a pension to Hattie D. McKain was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hattie D. McKain, widow of William A. McKain, late a coal-passer in the naval service on board the United States steamer Nyack.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JULIA A. SCHUTT.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to take up House bill No. 197.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 197) granting a pension to Julia A. Schutt, widow of Martin Schutt, a deceased soldier, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Julia A. Schutt, widow of Martin Schutt, a private in Company I in the Fourth Regiment of Heavy Artillery, New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRIET MOSS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to take up Senate bill No. 1183.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1183) granting a pension to Harriet Moss was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harriet Moss, widow of Samuel I. Moss, late private in Company E, Eighteenth Missouri Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. DAVIS. I take it these bills are from the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. All from the committee; all reported favorably, and each is accompanied by a written report which has been printed.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES JOHNSTON.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to take up House bill No. 3280.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3280) granting a pension to James Johnston was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Johnston, late sergeant in Company C, Fifteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers, if found disabled by reason of disease of the eyes and chills and fever.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH A. CHAMBERLAIN.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to take up Senate bill No. 1116.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1116) granting a pension to Sarah A. Chamberlain, guardian of the minor heirs of James Eagle, Company F, Second Regiment Kansas State Militia; was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL HOULIHAN.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to take up Senate bill No. 1259.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1259) granting a pension to Daniel Houlihan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel Houlihan, late sergeant Company I, Eighty-second Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDMUND H. COBB.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to take up Senate bill No. 1260.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1260) granting a pension to Edmund H. Cobb was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edmund H. Cobb, private Company B, New Hampshire Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET HUNTER HARDIE.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to take up Senate bill No. 1200.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1200) to grant a pension to Margaret Hunter Hardie, widow of James A. Hardie, inspector-general in the United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, which was to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty;" so as to read "$30 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTHER P. FOX.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to take up House bill No. 1238.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1238) granting a pension to Esther P. Fox was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Esther P. Fox, of the city of Buffalo, New York, widow of Augustus C. Fox, late a second lieutenant in Lieutenant-Colonel Chapin's Regiment New York Militia, in the war of 1812, on the pension-roll, and to pay her a pension of $8 per month from the 14th of February, 1871, during her natural life.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, which was to strike out at the end of the bill the words:

The 14th day of February, anno Domini 1871, during her natural life.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ANN ANNIS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to take up House bill No. 3011.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3011) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Annis was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments.

The amendments were in line 6, to strike out "Henry" and insert "Harvey;" and at the end of the bill, to insert the words "to take effect from and after the passage of this act;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Annis, widow of Harvey Annis, late a second lieutenant of Company G, in the Fifty-first Regiment United States Colored Infantry, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LUCINDA STARNES.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to take up House bill No. 2847.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2847) granting a pension to Lucinda Starnes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucinda Starnes, mother of Jefferson Starnes, late private of company F, Fortieth Regiment of United States Colored Troops Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTERS FOR UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 4476.

The motion was agreeed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 4476) to provide for the appointment of an official short-hand reporter for the United States courts in and for the district of California was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with an amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That it shall be competent, and it is hereby made the duty of any circuit or district court, justice, or judge, in any of the courts of the United States, upon being moved thereto, in any case where both parties request the same in writing, to appoint for the trial of said case a short-hand reporter, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of said court, to take in short-hand full notes of the oral testimony and other oral proceedings upon the trial of issues of fact, not, however, including the arguments of counsel; which said notes shall be filed with the clerk of the court in which said cause is tried. Such notes, when written out in long-hand and authenticated by the certificate of such reporter, shall be deemed to be, prima facie, a correct record of such testimony and proceedings.

SEC. 2. That the reporter so appointed shall, while engagaged in the discharge of his duties, be an officer of the court so appointing him, and shall be entitled to five cents per folio of one hundred words so taken down in short-hand, and five cents per folio of one hundred words when the same shall be written out in long-hand; such sums to be chargeable and paid by the parties in like manner as other costs in the case. The court shall have power to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to secure the said reporter his fees for the work so required at his hands.

Mr. WRIGHT. This bill as originally drawn was intended to apply to California alone. The Judiciary Committee deemed it advisable to extend its provisions to other courts as well. I have consulted with some of the members of the Supreme Court and those who hold court in the circuits, and they have suggested certain amendments to the bill as reported from the committee which do not at all interfere with the general spirit of the substitute as reported, and I will now propose amendments to the substitute as reported from the committee. In the first line of the substitute I propose to strike out the words "and is hereby made the duty of" and insert the word "for," so as to read:

That it shall be competent for any circuit or district court—

And not make it the duty of the circuit court to appoint such reporter. I propose that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. Now I propose in lines 5 and 6 of section 1 to strike out "upon being moved thereto in any case where both parties request the same in writing;" and to strike out the words beginning in line 7, "for the trial of said case;" and after "reporter" in line 7 to insert "of their respective courts;" and after "shall be" in line 8 to insert "on the request of the parties in any case."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. The amendment as reported by the committee in the second section fixed a certain sum as compensation. I move to strike out in section 2 the words "five cents per folio of one hundred words so taken down in short-hand and five cents per folio of one hundred words when the same shall be witten out in long-hand; such sums," and to insert "the same fees allowed by the law of the State in which said court is held to short-hand reporters in such State courts, or where there is no such State law, to the fees which may be established by general rule of the court making the appointment, such fees;" so as to make the section read:

That the reporter so appointed shall while engaged in the discharge of his duties be an officer of the court so appointing him, and shall be entitled to the same fees allowed by the law of the State in which said court is held to short-hand reporters in such State courts, or where there is no such State law, to the fees which may be established by general rule of the court making the appointment, such fees to be chargeable and paid by the parties in like manner as other costs in the case.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to amend the title of the bill just passed so as to read: "A bill to provide the appointment of official short-hand reporters for the courts of the United States."

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS J. SPENCER.

Mr. LOGAN. While the doors are being closed I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4198) to authorize the President to restore Thomas J. Spencer to his former rank in the Army.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Committee on Military Affairs proposed to amend the bill by inserting at the end thereof:

And the law of promotion in the line is hereby suspended in this case for the purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. INGALLS. I see by the Calendar that this bill has been vetoed by the President. The question must be put in accordance with that.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; that is another bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are two cases.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JULIUS S. BOHRER.

Mr. NORWOOD. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1010) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, master in the United States Navy, simply to pay him a small sum. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia, whose proposition I have not heard, that it might be well for us to dispose of executive business, and then when the doors are opened again we can take up his bill.

Mr. NORWOOD. Very well.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us go on and finish executive business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

JULIUS S. BOHRER.

On motion of Mr. NORWOOD, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1010) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, master in the United States Navy.

The Committee on Naval Affairs reported to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Julius S. Bohrer, retired master, United States Navy, or his legal representatives, the pay and allowances of a retired master from the 30th day of December, 1865, the date of his wrongful dismissal from the naval service, to the 5th day of June, 1876, the date of his restoration to the retired list, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is there any report in that case? I think that bill was objected to the other day.

Mr. NORWOOD. There is a report.

Mr. CRAGIN. If the Senate was in a condition to hear the report read and understand the case, there would not be one solitary vote against the bill. I hope we shall have patience and allow the bill to be considered.

Mr. PATTERSON. This is a bill that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs objected to two or three days ago.

Mr. CRAGIN. It happens to be a bill that he introduced himself.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know about that; but he said it was to pay an officer who was dismissed from the service—to pay him twelve years when he was out of the service entirely, pay him $12,000 when he was out of the Navy after being dismissed.

Mr. NORWOOD. This is the case of a meritorious officer, who was put on the retired list in 1855. When the war broke out he volunteered his services to his country. In 1865, upon the arbitrary order of Mr. Welles, he was dismissed the service. He immediately applied for a court-martial and it was refused to him until 1876, and when that court-martial sat the charges preferred against him amounted to nothing. He was acquitted upon every one of them. During that time his pay was suspended; he did not receive it; and he now comes and asks simple justice at the hands of the Government, that he shall have his pay for the time that he was wrongfully suspended or dismissed. That is the whole of the story, and I do not see how any member of the Senate can find it in his heart to vote against this bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. As near as I understand the facts in this case, this gentleman was dismissed by the Secretary of the Navy in 1865. The charges were very serious charges.

Mr. NORWOOD. The charges were tried and he was acquitted on every one of them.

Mr. PATTERSON. I know; but when he was tried in 1876 all the witnesses whose testimony was presented to the Secretary of the Navy were dead and the Government was unable to procure any evidence. I have nothing to say about this officer being restored to the service; but to pay him for twelve years' service when he was not in the service, when he was dismissed on charges, it seems to me to be establishing a very bad precedent. The chairman of the Military Committee is more familiar with this case than I am and I think the bill had better go over until he is present.

Mr. NORWOOD. Do you mean the Senator from Illinois? [Mr. LOGAN.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I mean the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.]

Mr. NORWOOD. He introduced the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Illinois introduced the bill; but he said he did it by request, and when he came to examine the merits of the case he was against it.

Mr. NORWOOD. I beg pardon.

Mr. CRAGIN. I desire to state that the Senator from Illinois objected to this bill when it came up before, because he wanted to get up a bill of his own. The moment he understood what this bill was, and that he had introduced it, he told me he had no objection to it; and I understand him to be in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. My recollection is that the Senator from Illinois stated that the objection he made to this bill was that it was paying an officer for service when he was not in the service, and after he had been dismissed dishonorably from the Navy. That was his objection to the bill. I should like to hear the report of the committee in regard to this bill read. If the friends of the bill will let it lie over until the Senator from Illinois is present, very well.

Mr. NORWOOD. There is a report from the committee of the House of Representatives which I send to the desk to be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, made by Mr. TARBOX, from the House Committee of Claims, January 12, 1877.

The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4035) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, United States Navy, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

Bohrer entered the naval service in 1839, and was retired as a master in 1855. In 1861, while on the retired list, at the commencement of the civil war, he volunteered into active service and served through the war with the rank and pay of a retired master. On December 30, 1865, he was dismissed the service by order of Secretary Welles, in consequence of the findings of a naval court of inquiry. He immediately demanded a trial by court-martial, and renewed his demand often and persistently, but was unsuccessful in his application until May, 1876, when his trial by court-martial was had, and the findings of the court fully exonerated him from all charges and specifications and declared his dismissal null and void. He seems to have presented his demand for a trial with as much vigor and diligence as was possible under the conditions of his health, it appearing that for a great part of the time he was in a most critical state of bodily and mental health, such as disabled him for business affairs, due chiefly, if not wholly, to injuries sustained by him while in the service. This bill proposes payment to him, or his legal representatives, of his pay as retired master from the date of his dismissal to the date of his restoration. The order restoring Bohrer to the retired list is as follows:

[General Orders No. 210.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 5, 1876.

The order of December 30, 1865, dismissing Julius S. Bohrer, master in the United States Navy, from the naval service is hereby declared void, and Mr. Boher, under and by virtue of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 15, chapter 10, article 37, restored to the retired-list as master.

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

By the act of March, 3, 1865, it is provided:

"That in case any officer of the military or naval service who may hereafter be dismissed by authority of the President shall make an application in writing for a trial, setting forth under oath that he has been wrongfully and unjustly dismissed, the President shall, as soon as the necessities of the public service may permit, convene a court-martial to try such officer on the charges on which he was dismissed. And if such court-martial shall not award dismissal or death as the punishment of said officer, the order of dismissal shall be void; and if the court-martial aforesaid shall not be convened for the trial of such officer within six months from the presentation of his application for trial, the sentence of dismissal shall be void."

Master Bohrer did in fact promptly make his application for a trial by court-martial, but no court was convened within six months, and so, it seems, by the operative force of the statute the order of dismissal was rendered void.

But the act of July 22, 1874, prohibits the accounting officers of the Treasury from making any allowance to any officer of the Navy dismissed from the service and restored under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1865, section 12, except to the extent of six months' leave pay, unless it shall appear that such officer has demanded and continued to demand in writing, as often as once in six months, a trial by court-martial. The officers of the Treasury decline to allow Bohrer his pay from December 30, 1865, to June 5, 1876, because of the prohibition of the last-named statute and the absence of any appropriation available for the purpose.

Without attempting to define the just legal effect of the statute of 1874, as touching vested rights and imposing conditions which the officer in the pursuit of his rights could not anticipate, the committee have no doubt that Mr. Bohrer is entitled to the relief the bill provides. He performed long and honorable service. He voluntarily left a retirement in which he might honorably have remained in safety, to serve the country in a season of public peril. He was wrongfully subjected to the painful indignity of dismissal in disgrace, and the consequent loss of emoluments, fairly the meed of his public service, in his age and infirmity. The Government, having admitted the injustice done him and restored him to his rank, cannot justly refuse him the pecuniary benefits of which he has been unjustly deprived.

The committee recommend that the bill pass with amendments as follows, namely:

First. Strike out the preamble.

Second. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Julius S. Bohrer, retired master, United States Navy, or his legal representatives, the pay and allowances of a retired master from the 30th day of December, 1865, the date of his wrongful dismissal from the naval service, to the 5th day of June, 1876, the date of his restoration to the retired list, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. INGALLS. The preamble has been stricken out and the substance of it re-inserted in the body of the bill as amended, and an effort is thereby made to commit Congress, and the Senate particularly, to an expression of opinion as to the propriety of Bohrer's dismission from the service. I move to amend by striking out the words "the date of his wrongful dismissal from the naval service," and also the words "the date of his restoration to the retired list;" so that, if passed, the bill will merely give him the pay between the dates specified in the amendment.

Mr. CONOVER. Do I understand the Senator to move to strike out from the preamble?

Mr. INGALLS. The preamble has been stricken out and been re-inserted in the body of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. NORWOOD. I do not see any particular objection to the amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think it would be better to permit this bill to lie over until the Senator from Illinois can be present. When in the Senate, my recollection is, he stated distinctly his objection to this bill, and it seems to me that there are some grounds upon which objection would rest to passing a bill of this kind. The person named in this bill——

Mr. NORWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, in order to avoid all difficulty, I would suggest that the bill be passed over as the unfinished business of to-morrow. Will that be satisfactory?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia suggests that this be considered the unfinished business. Is there objection to that?

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator accept the amendment I propose?

Mr. NORWOOD. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment to the amendment will be regarded as agreed to.

BUSINESS FOR TO-MORROW.

Mr. CONKLING. Learning that the House of Representatives has taken a recess until to-morrow, and learning that no appropriation bill is pending here, I move that the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SARGENT. In view of that motion, which I think is proper, I would suggest that Senators ought to be here to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, make an effort to be here; as I suppose very soon after our assembling we shall receive a report from the electoral commission and ought to be ready to proceed to the House.

Mr. NORWOOD. I understand that the motion will not displace this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will not displace this bill. It is moved that the Senate now take a recess until to-morrow at ten o'clock.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is to be done between ten and twelve o'clock to-morrow. No business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California has made a suggestion that Senators should be here at ten o'clock.

Mr. CONKLING. That is a mere notice to the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. My suggestion is that there be no legislative business between ten and twelve o'clock. If the commission reports, of course we proceed with the count.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is that the understanding, that there is to be no business between ten and twelve o'clock?

Mr. DAVIS. Suppose the commission reports?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That stops all legislative business. But we have no report from the commission.

Mr. ALLISON. We may have at ten o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SARGENT. That would stop all business except proceeding with the count.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If we receive a report at that time, there can be no legislative business; but if we do not, shall there be legislative business between ten and twelve o'clock? ["No!" "No!" and "Yes!" "Yes!"]

Mr. CONKLING. I submit that all this is out of order. The Senator from California, as he had a right to do, expressed the opinion that we ought to be here at ten o'clock, and the understanding, as far as it can exist, does exist; and a motion has been put and carried that we take a recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But pending the motion the Senator from Nebraska asked if there was to be any business done between ten and twelve o'clock to-morrow. Several of the Senators said "yes" and several said "no."

Mr. CONKLING. That is a pretty good answer. It has been answered both ways. Now I insist that the question shall be put upon the motion to take a recess till to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then to the question of the Senator from Nebraska the Chair cannot answer that there will be no business between ten and twelve o'clock to-morrow. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from New York that the Senate take a recess till to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 28, at ten o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 27, 1877.

The House re-assembled at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ATKINS. Pending that motion, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That when the sundry civil appropriation bill is considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union it shall be in order to amend it by providing for the payment of the mail contractors who performed mail service in the years 1859, 1860, and 1861, in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Kentucky, Georgia, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia: Provided, That such contractors have not been paid by the Confederate States government.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that in order?

Mr. ATKINS. I move to suspend the rules and adopt this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion is in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it in order to suspend the rules while a motion to go into Committee of the Whole is pending?

The SPEAKER. This motion is pertinent to the very bill to which the motion of the gentleman from Indiana relates.

Mr. ATKINS. The proposition is in the bill already and in there with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds have not voted in the affirmative.

Mr. ATKINS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ATKINS and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 128, noes 30.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the resolution of Mr. ATKINS was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that when the House again resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the the sundry civil appropriation bill all debate on the pending paragraph, which is the last paragraph in the bill, terminate in five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentlemen move to terminate debate on the whole bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; because the pending paragraph is the last in the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Some amendments may be offered on which we may want some debate.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Five minutes will not be long enough. I ask that twenty minutes be allowed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on my motion.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The House then, on motion of Mr. HOLMAN, resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill, Mr. BUCKNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the action of the House making this paragraph in order, the Chair understands that the point of order is necessarily waived.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose that is correct.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to amend the paragraph so as to conform to the order of the House by inserting after the word "Virginia" the words "West Virginia."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. COX. I move to amend by inserting after the last pargraph the following:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives, who is hereby directed, to pay Isaac Strohm for making out warrants for bringing by order of the House persons before its bar and other papers requiring the seal of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, from the 4th day of March, 1875, to the 14th day of August, 1876, inclusive, at the rate per annum heretofore paid to him for such service, $217.39, which sum hereby appropriated is made immediately available.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether this increases the compensation?

Mr. COX. No, sir; it does not. It is in accordance with the law as passed for several years. There is no extra appropriation.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. LANE. I move to insert at the end of the bill the following:

That there is hereby re-appropriated for the payment of volunteers of Washington and Oregon Territories who were engaged in the suppression of Indian hostilities therein in the years 1855 and 1856, and for the payment of claims for services, supplies, and transportations in the maintenance of said volunteers, and for horses and other property destroyed in said service, as provided for by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1861, entitled "An act to provide for the payment of expenses incurred by the Territories of Oregon and Washington in the suppression of Indian hostilities therein in 1855 and 1856," the sum of $25,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing such an expenditure of public money.

Mr. LANE. I will state to the gentleman that the Congress of the United States did make appropriation for the payment of those volunteers, and I do not know but what my friend from Indiana was a member of this House at that time and voted for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then it has been paid already.

Mr. LANE. No; permit me to say that the money was appropriated, and a large amount, it is true, was distributed, but the claims not having all been presented, a portion was covered back into the Treasury. In explanation, I desire the letter which I send to the Clerk's desk may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1877.

SIR: In reply to verbal inquiry relative to the condition of the appropriation for "pay, transportation, services, and supplies of Oregon and Washington Volunteers in 1855-'56," I have the honor to state as follows:

In consequence of the opinion of the First Comptroller, that the appropriation made by the act of March 2, 1861, was not a permanent specific appropriation within the meaning of the act of June 20, 1874, which provided for the covering in of balances which had stood for two fiscal years on the books, &c., the sum of $321,394.88 was carried to the surplus fund, that sum being the balance then remaining of the amount appropriated by the act of March 2, 1861.

In March and July of 1865 re-appropriations were made amounting in the aggregate to $33,976.74; but these were exhausted some time since.

On the 19th of December, 1876, I reported to the Secretary of the Treasury that up to that date settlements had been made, for which there remained no appropriation, to the amount of $425.94, and I recommended to the Secretary to ask re-appropriation of that sum and of an additional sum of $50,000, the additional sum being intended to provide for the residue of the present fiscal year and for the next fiscal year. (Vide H. R. Ex. Doc. No. 18, Forty-fourth Congress, second session.) In the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, I observe that the item of $50,000 has been stricken out.

Since the 19th of December, 1876, additional settlements have been made by this office, making the aggregate now settled and for which there is no appropriation, $4,911.68.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HORACE AUSTIN, Auditor.

Hon. J. H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. The original appropriation was made by act of 1861. There was a re-appropriation of part of this money by act of 1865. That was the last legislation. At the last session of Congress there was a recommendation that we appropriate $50,000, which this House declined to do. My point of order is this: that this is simply proposing to pay back claims like the great body of claims already referred to the Claims Committee of this House; that is to say, that the re-appropriation of this money originally appropriated in 1861 stands upon the same footing as a direct appropriation at this time, and requires an act of Congress to give effect to any such re-appropriation. It is quite clear that the class of claims referred by vote of the House at the last session, as well as at this, to the Committee of Claims, is the same with the case now presented. They all originated many years ago, in this instance some seventeen years ago, for which now no appropriation exists. Therefore this is not only not an act for this committee, or for the Committee on Appropriations, but belongs to the Committee of Claims of the House, to which it ought to be referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order.

Mr. LANE. How is it when we are addressing ourselves to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. LANE. The gentleman from Indiana has been addressing himself to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. LANE. I desire to say, as to this amendment, it simply contemplates we shall pay a debt which has been adjusted and adjudicated under existing law. It is not in the nature or character of any claim whatever. Suppose, Mr. Chairman, that an appropriation for the expenses of this House had been inadequate, would it not be pertinent at this time to present an amendment to cover that which we honestly and justly owed under the law? I insist there can be no more pertinent and proper amendment than this is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is not well taken, and will submit the proposition to the House.

Mr. HURLBUT. Has the five-minute debate expired allowed in committee?

The CHAIRMAN. It has, and the Chair will hear no further debate on this question.

Mr. LANE. I call for a division on the amendment, as I apprehend it is not understood.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 60; no quorum voting.

Mr. LANE. I insist on the presence of a quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not insist on breaking up the committee.

Mr. LANE. I insist there shall be a quorum, as this money ought to be paid.

The Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. LANE and Mr. HOLMAN.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 91.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. LANE. I suggest we take a vote on this in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I cannot agree to that.

Mr. HOOKER. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay the following additional force under the Doorkeeper, to wit: Six messengers, six pages, and three laborers, the usual compensation for services rendered during the present session, $3,718.08, subject to the approval of the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to reserve the point of order on this proposition until I can make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee of Accounts, for it is unusual for these matters to come from any other committee than the Committee of Accounts——

The CHAIRMAN. There can be no debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to make a point of order, and ask that order may be preserved in committee, so the subject can be understood by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana, and the committee will preserve order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ascertain from the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. ROBERTS,] the chairman of the Committee of Accounts, whether this has met the approval of his committee or not.

Mr. ROBERTS. I answer the question of the gentleman from Indiana very emphatically in the affirmative. This has been before the Committee of Accounts, which has given it a careful consideration, and is unanimously of opinion that it should pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I merely wished to ascertain that fact.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

To pay Nathaniel S. Clark the sum of $300 for services rendered as messenger from the first Monday of December, 1876, to March 4, 1877.

I ask the Clerk to read the indorsement accompanying the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

We recommend the payment of the above.

CHARLES B. ROBERTS,
JOSEPH POWELL,
A. HUMPHREYS,
G. L. FORT,
Committee of Accounts.

Mr. HOLMAN. Have there not been several employed in that way?

Mr. ROBERTS. The cases of the others were before the Commitee of Accounts some time ago. This was submitted to the committee this morning and was approved.

Mr. CONGER. I object to debate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I offer the following amendment:

Add to the bill the following paragraph:

To enable the Secretary of War to pay John W. Dodd & Co., of Indianapolis, Indiana, for grading, paving, and curbing the sidewalk and bowldering the gutter on the north side of Michigan street, in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana, from the west line of the United States arsenal grounds to the east line of the same, $6,004.48.

I desire to have read a report from the Secretary of War in favor of this appropriation.

Mr. CLYMER. I reserve the point of order till the paper is read.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. What is the point of order?

Mr. PAGE. That it is not authorized by any existing law. I make that point of order.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. It is recommended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. PAGE. It is not in the interest of economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SEELYE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to settle the accounts arising out of the appointments on June 24 and July 14, 1875, by the Secretary of the Interior, of commissioners to investigate affairs at the Red Cloud agency; such accounts to be paid out of moneys appropriated for the Sioux Indians for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876.

Mr. SEELYE. This is no new appropriation. It only allows the appropriation already made to be expended for this purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is the same thing as an appropriation. But the services were performed and I see no reason why they should not be paid for.

Mr. REAGAN. But the commission was appointed in direct violation of law.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BALLOU. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following paragraph:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to purchase of the present owners and proprietors of the Congressional Globe all the stereotype plates, consisting of eighty-four complete volumes, and all the bound volumes, not less than twenty-five thousand, and all the unbound volumes, not less than forty thousand, and the copyright of the same, together with the fire-proof building, with the land on which it stands, and the right of way thereto in the rear of the Globe office, where the stereotype plates are now stored, for the sum of $100,000, with a proportionate reduction in price for any number of the volumes either of plates or bound or unbound volumes which may fall short of this statement on delivery.

Mr. BALLOU. May I make this statement in explanation of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must make the point of order on this amendment. It has already been ruled out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROBERTS. I offer the following amendment:

To pay Mark A. Duffy the sum of $430 as compensation in full for services as subpœna clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms, and as general messenger to investigating committees, from December 8, 1876 to March 3, 1877, inclusive.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have five small amendments to offer, and I hope after they are disposed of the committee will rise and report the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. Several gentlemen have other amendments to offer. I do not think the gentleman from Indiana should desire in this way to cut out all other amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well. Let them be submitted. All I have to say is that we are going back rapidly on the economy of last session.

Mr. GOODIN. I offer the following amendment:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

To pay C. W. C. Dunnington, J. L. Knight, B. E. Hambleton, J. W. Wiggins, Allen Wood, J. M. Johns, D. L. Payne, G. P. Jordan, S. M. Freeman, N. Dawson, C. L. Freeman, C. T. Lewis, W. F. Weeks, J. L. Walters, H. T. Murray, W. H. Minnix, W. W. Lester, J. M. Buchanan $100 each for extra work and labor in the folding-room of the House during the months of September, October, November, and December, $1,800; to be available immediately upon the passage of this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on that amendment on two grounds: First, there is no authority of law for this appropriation; secondly, this is a violation of law—first, in that the compensation is fixed by law; secondly, in that the law expressly prohibits the payment on an appropriation bill out of a contingent fund at least of extra compensation. The Chair will see that the regular compensation fixed by law has been paid. Under this amendment, in violation of law, an increased amount is proposed to be paid. It seems to me the point of order is very clear. If the law is wrong it ought to be changed.

Mr. GOODIN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised at the position taken by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] and considering the merit that there is in this amendment I trust that the point of order will be withdrawn and that it will be adopted.

Mr. EDEN. Are the merits of the case debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is discussing the point of order, and he will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. GOODIN. I propose to do so, Mr. Chairman. I proceed briefly to state the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. EDEN. No. I object to that.

Mr. GOODIN. Certainly I have a right to do that. Formerly the folders of RECORDS and documents in the folding-room were paid by the day, $3.60 being the allowance. During the last session of Congress it was provided in the appropriation bill that this labor should be paid for by the piece. It was stipulated that one cent per volume should be paid for quartos, one-half a cent per volume for octavos, and one-fifth of a cent for the daily RECORD. Under the old regulation the cutting of paper wrappers and the stamping of them was performed by laborers employed for that purpose. And the eighteen gentlemen who are named in my amendment, when they were appointed to perform this work of folding, they believed that the cutting of the wrappers and the stamping of them would be performed by laborers paid as they had been formerly. But when they commenced work they found that in addition to the folding of these documents they were compelled to cut the paper wrappers and to do the stamping themselves. This was extra labor, for which they received no compensation under the appropriation bill of last session.

I desire to state that these gentlemen for some days' labor did not receive over eight cents per day, and the average compensation under the existing regulation is only about $15 per month. This amendment simply provides that these employés who have been laboring in the folding-room shall not be starved to death, but shall be permitted to receive $100 each as additional compensation for four months' extra work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that this is a very hard case, but the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. GOODIN. I understand that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is melting a little and showing some softness of heart.

Mr. PAGE. I hope he will do so for once.

Mr. GOODIN. I will make it $75 each, if the gentleman will accept that.

Mr. HOLMAN. This proposition has not been considered by any committee, and for the present I make the point of order on it. We shall have to fix it in some satisfactory way hereafter if we can.

Mr. GOODIN. I understand that the Committee of Accounts have considered the proposition and think favorably of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The chairman of the Committee of Accounts is here and can state if that be so or not.

Mr. GOODIN. Will the gentleman from Indiana consent that the amendment shall be adopted pro forma now, so that we may have a vote on it in the House?

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no.

Mr. GOODIN. I shall then endeavor in some way to reach the matter in the House.

Mr. FOSTER offered the following amendment:

For the payment of Charles F. Benjamin and Henry H. Smith for services rendered the Treasury Department in the investigation of the fraudulent claim of Sugg Fort, $250 each, $500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must make the same point of order on that amendment. These gentlemen were both in the public employment when these services were rendered, and there is not only no law authorizing extra payment, but there is a law against it.

Mr. FOSTER. This amendment is not liable to the point of order, because these gentlemen were employed under the law providing for the detection of frauds. There was a law providing for their employment.

Mr. CONGER. There was an appropriation also to pay them.

Mr. SAYLER. It is also true that the payment of this sum is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. There is no law that the amendment contravenes in any sense, and it certainly is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is mistaken. These gentlemen, one of them a clerk of the House, and the other a clerk in the Treasury Department, were sent into the Southern States to inquire into certain frauds on the Revenue Department. They rendered certain services and they ask as extra compensation, beyond their expenses, the payment of $250 a piece. The law is express and positive that extra compensation shall not be allowed in such cases. I am compelled to make this point of order on account of the unexampled magnitude of the small items which have been forced upon this bill; I believe more than were ever put upon it before.

Mr. SAYLER. I desire to ask the gentleman if I understood him to say that this same account had been ruled out at the last session.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was ruled out last year.

Mr. SAYLER. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. These two items were put into the appropriation bill in the House and passed the House, but failed to pass the Senate from the fact that the papers at the time were mislaid. Perhaps my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] can state the facts.

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps the gentleman is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. My colleague is correct. This appropriation passed the House last year, and but for the mislaying of the papers would have been passed in the Senate. It is a case of double salary, because Mr. Smith was a clerk of this House and the other gentleman was a clerk in the Treasury Department. But Mr. Smith was not obliged to do this service. These gentlemen were employed because of their peculiar ability for this work. They went to Tennessee and did the work, and the Secretary of the Treasury would have paid them but for the law prohibiting the payment of double salaries. He recommends this bill. It is but simple justice that it should be paid. It is not an ordinary case of paying double salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say a word upon the point of order. The statement of the gentleman from Ohio is correct as I remember the facts. I was a member of the committee of conference on the bill in which that appropriation was placed last session.

The reason why this money was not paid was because there was an express law against the payment of these parties by the Treasury Department, and the same law forbids an appropriation for their benefit being put in an appropriation bill, inasmuch as all appropriations must be in conformity with law. Therefore I am compelled to make the point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The clerk read as follows:

To pay J. W. Jennings, late assistant doorkeeper, for services under the Doorkeeper, his salary from September 15th up to and including the 4th day of December, 1876, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, $438.32.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the same point of order on this amendment, that there is no law authorizing this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must sustain the point of order and rule out the amendment.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Will the Chair hear me a moment upon the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman if he desires to be heard.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I desire to say that Mr. Jennings was an officer of this House, and was improperly removed from the office. I would refer the Chair to Rule 10, on page 163 of the Digest, where it is provided that—

The appointees of the Doorkeeper and the Postmaster shall be subject to the approval of the Speaker.

The point that I make is this: Mr. Jennings was regularly an officer of this House up to the meeting of this session of Congress, and the Doorkeeper had no right to remove him in September last, and the Speaker alone had the right to remove him.

The CHAIRMAN. What office did he hold?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. He was assistant doorkeeper.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is disposed to reconsider his ruling, and to submit the question to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON] if this gentleman was actually performing duty during this time?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. He was improperly removed by the Doorkeeper, but remained here for the performance of his duties.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was there not another person appointed in his place?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Not that I know of.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the Committee of Accounts will explain how this is.

Mr. FORT. I would suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON] that if his amendment is in order it certainly ought to be modified. As he has drawn the amendment it provides for the payment of Mr. Jennings out of the contingent fund of the House. This bill makes appropriations of money direct from the Treasury, not to go into the contingent fund of the House, and therefore the gentleman should strike out that clause of his amendment.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. There is an appropriation for the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. FORT. Not in this bill, the gentleman will observe. The amendment is in the proper form if it was offered in the shape of a resolution to be adopted by the House and referred to the Committee of Accounts; but it is not in proper form as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I will modify the amendment as suggested, and ask the Clerk to read it as modified.

The Clerk read the amendment as modified, as follows:

To pay J. W. Jennings, late assistant doorkeeper, for services under the Doorkeeper, his salary from September 15th up to and including the 4th of December, 1876, $438,32.

Mr. WHITE. I would like to ask a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that another person was employed all this time.

Mr. WHITE. I want to ask whether Mr. Jennings has rendered any services during the time for which it is proposed to pay him?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I have already stated to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that he was here all the time.

Mr. WHITE. I have seen him here on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that another person was employed during this time as assistant doorkeeper.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. How do you understand it?

Mr. HOLMAN. From one of the members of the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I would like to make a statement in regard to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HANCOCK. Let the amendment be again reported; I do not think it is understood by members.

The amendment, as modified, was again read.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the amendment, and upon a division there were—ayes 41, noes 22.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there should be a full vote on this question.

Mr. WHITE. I call for a further count.

Many MEMBERS. O, let it go.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I will let it go, and call for a separate vote on it in the House.

Mr. WHITE. I ask for tellers; no quorum voted.

Many MEMBERS. It is too late.

Mr. WHITE. I called for tellers as soon as the Chairman announced the result of the vote.

Mr. CASON. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. My point is that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] states that he called for a further count as soon as the announcement of the result of the vote was made by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that a separate vote was to be had on the amendment in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I made that announcement; but the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] says he called for a further count.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, tellers will be ordered; and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Texas, Mr. THROCKMORTON, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WHITE, to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 95, noes 17.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it go; we will have a vote in the House on it.

Mr. WHITE, (one of the tellers.) Very well; I am willing.

The CHAIRMAN. Any gentleman has a right to call for a separate vote in the House.

Mr. THROCKMORTON, (one of the tellers.) I think there is a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will retain their places and continue the count.

After a further count, the tellers announced that there were—ayes 119, noes 27.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I give notice that I shall call for a separate vote on this amendment in the House. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. CASON. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. CASON. I rise to a question of order, whether the committee can rise and report the bill to the House while amendments are pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has the right to make the motion. There is no amendment pending.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BUCKNER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had directed him to report back the same with sundry amendments, in which the committee recommended concurrence by the House.

VACANCY IN THE OFFICE OF PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. FIELD. I am directed by the select committee on the powers, privileges, and duties of the House of Representatives in the counting of electoral votes to report a bill on which I demand the previous question.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will listen to the point of order after the bill has been read.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I understand that the bill is read for information.

The SPEAKER. The point of order will be reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to amend section 146 of the Revised Statutes.

Be it enacted, &c., That section 146 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 146. In case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President of the United States, or in case of a vacancy in these offices arising from the failure of the two Houses of Congress to ascertain and declare an election before the commencement of the term of office in respect to which the electoral votes were cast, or in case of a vacancy arising from any other cause, the President of the Senate, or if there be none, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being, and if there be no such Speaker, then the Secretary of State in office when the vacancy happens, shall act as President until the disability is removed or a President elected.

Mr. FIELD. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] rises to a question of order.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I rise to object to the reporting of this bill, and submit as a point of order that the committee from which the gentleman from New York undertakes to report the bill has no authority under any rule or resolution of the House to report by bill; and further, that the subject-matter of the bill has never been referred to the committee. In support of this point I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the orders constituting the committee.

In the first place this is not one of the standing committees of the House. Under Rule 71, only the standing committees of the House are authorized to report by bill. Originally no bill could be brought in except upon leave or by special order of the House. But Rule 115 now provides—

That every bill shall be introduced on the report of a committee or by motion for leave.

Under this rule on page 191 of the Manual the Chair will find the following:

In the early stages of the Government, before the institution of standing committees, it was the common practice to introduce bills, on motion for leave, by individual members; the bills were then referred to a select committee, to examine, and report upon. * * * Previous to the 13th March, 1822, so strict was the House upon the introduction of bills, that standing committees had to obtain leave, in every case, to report by bill.

In consequence of this, Rule 71 was adopted, which provides that "the several standing committees of the House shall have leave to report by bill or otherwise." Rule 74 establishes the standing committees which shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress. According to the invariable practice, when it is desired that a select committee shall be authorized to report by bill, the order constituting the committee gives special authority "to report by bill or otherwise." Neither in the resolution raising this committee nor in any resolution giving them additional powers is any such authority conferred on this committee.

The Select Committee on the Louisiana Election, appointed on the first day of the session, was empowered expressly to report by bill or otherwise. The committee that was authorized to report a method of counting the electoral votes, and which reported the electoral commission bill, had authority to "report a measure legislative or constitutional." But the resolution creating the committee from which the gentleman from New York undertakes to make this report authorized the committee—

To ascertain and report what are the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States; and that said committee have leave to report at any time.

But nowhere in that resolution or any other is this committee authorized to report by bill; and under the rules as a select committee it has no such power. On the 8th of January additional instructions were given to this committee by resolutions of the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from New York. Those additional instructions required the committee to ascertain the facts relating to the ineligibility of electors, and "whether any votes were given at the recent election contrary to the prohibition contained in the first section of the second article of the Constitution"—whether any such votes had been given and what ought to be done with them. The committee was authorized on the 17th of January to send for persons and papers and sit during the sessions of the House. But there is not in any resolution conferring power on this committee any authority to report by bill.

I understand that the majority of the committee have considered this proposition, although I have not seen it and do not know that the minority members of the committee have seen it. But I do not propose to raise that question, because I presume the gentleman from New York would not attempt in contravention of the rules to report a bill that had not been considered. But I do raise the point of order that there is no power vested in this select committee to report by bill; that the bill must be brought before the House by its introduction on a motion for leave and then referred to the committee, in which case the committee would have power to examine it and report it.

The other point I make is that the subject-matter of the bill has never been referred to the committee. It is nowhere in any resolution authorizing the committee to consider this question in relation to a new election——

Mr. WALLING. I rise to a question of order that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] has no right to discuss the merits of the proposition on a point of order, and this he has been doing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there will be no dispute about one point, and that is this: that this committee possesses the power to report at any time.

In the next place the Chair is unable to conceive of a higher constitutional and parliamentary privilege than the introduction of a bill of this character. He will even go so far as to say that a member might rise in his place and introduce a bill of this character, involving, as it does, the highest constitutional privilege he can conceive of, and ask for its consideration. This House has the right to determine when the contingency arises in reference to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States requiring further legislation in reference thereto. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. When that bill comes in the Chair, of course, must rule it is to be controlled by the rules of the House. Now, we have a rule which says a bill shall not be read twice in the same day. [Cries of "Question!"] Gentlemen must wait; we do things orderly here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] to make the motion to demand the previous question, but he desires to hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The bill has been read for information. That is its first reading. Now Rule 116 provides that every bill shall receive three several readings in the House previous to its passage and bills shall be dispatched in order as they are introduced unless where the House shall direct otherwise; but no bills shall be twice read on the same day without special order of the House. Then our rules say in reference to special orders that they shall not be made except by consent of two-thirds of the House. I raise the point of order because I want to have time to consider this bill.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Before that point is raised——

The SPEAKER. That point is not in order at the present time.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The bill has not been ordered to its first reading, objection having been made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has demanded the previous question.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. On what?

The SPEAKER. On the second reading of the bill.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. But the bill has not been read the first time.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read a first time.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. For information the Chair reserved the point of order until the House could hear what the bill was. I now object to the reception of the bill, and therefore the question would recur, Shall the bill be rejected?

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from New York whether he is disposed to allow a brief debate on the bill either before or after?

Mr. FIELD. What time does the gentleman want?

Mr. KASSON. I cannot speak for others. A short time is all I want, to call attention to one of its clauses.

Several MEMBERS. Debate is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The right to report gives the right to consider.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The bill has to be read by successive stages.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read, and if the point of order had been sustained by the Chair, then the reading would of course have been for information only.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What does the Chair say is now the condition of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. On what.

The SPEAKER. On the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. In what stage?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer, unless he knows what disposition is proposed by the gentleman from New York, who has not yet been heard because points of order have been raised.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There are only three things on which he can call it, first, second, or third reading of the bill. If it is on the second reading of the bill, then I raise the question of order.

The SPEAKER. Barclay's Digest, in a foot-note to Rule 116, already quoted, states as follows:

In the rapid and hurried manner in which bills are now reported and acted upon, the motion is seldom or never made, nor is the question put, "Shall the bill be now read a second time?" The Speaker takes it for granted that the motion has been made and allowed, and announces the second reading as soon as the first reading is completed.

Mr. FIELD. In response to gentlemen on the other side, I say that I am willing to allow half an hour of debate on the bill, to be divided equally between the two sides of the House.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. To whom do you yield?

Mr. FIELD. To any one on that side you want.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. On what?

Mr. FIELD. On the second reading of the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Does the gentleman rule on my point?

The SPEAKER. Not until it arises.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have raised it, that the bill cannot be read twice in one day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York to demand the previous question on the second reading of the bill.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. FIELD. The gentleman from Iowa asks for fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. No. 4693) will be read a first and second time, after which the gentleman from Illinois will be recognized.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I raise the point of order on the second reading.

The Clerk commenced to read the bill (H. R. No. 4693) a second time.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, (interrupting.) The Chair will not rule that the bill has been ordered to a second reading. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule 116.

The SPEAKER. Rule 116 is as follows:

116. Every bill shall receive three several reading in the House previous to its passage; and bills shall be dispatched in order as they were introduced, unless where the House shall direct otherwise; but no bill shall be twice read on the same day, without special order of the House.

Rule 117 reads as follows:

111. The first reading of a bill shall be for information, and, if opposition be made to it, the question shall be, "Shall this bill be rejected?" If no opposition be made, or if the question to reject be negatived, the bill shall go to its second reading without a question.

The Chair will, therefore, under Rule 117 submit the question to the House, "Shall this bill be rejected?"

Mr. FIELD. On that I move the previous question.

Mr. BANKS. That is not the precise question that is now before the House. The question before the House which has not been decided is whether the committee has the right to report this bill. Objection being made, the bill was not received, but was read for information only, and not under the authority given in the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules that point of order.

Mr. BANKS. The bill has not yet been read a first time or a second time.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Massachusetts desires the bill to be read another time, it will be read.

Mr. BANKS. It must be read the first time, if it is to be acted upon by the House, and read in extenso.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Chair has held that the bill has been read the first time.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Massachusetts thinks the bill has not been read a first time, the Chair is quite willing that it shall now have another reading, to be considered its first reading.

The Clerk again read the bill in extenso.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] demands the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. KASSON. Does the gentleman from New York desire that the debate shall proceed now or later?

Mr. FIELD. Later.

The main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The main question having been ordered and opposition having been made to the bill, the question is, "Shall this bill be rejected?"

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That refers to the first reading of the bill. That has been done.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will look at Rule 117 he will observe that the Chair has submitted the question in the proper form.

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative.

So the bill was not rejected.

The SPEAKER. The bill will now be read a second time.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I object to the bill being now read the second time. Rule 116 provides that no bill shall be read twice on the same day without special order of the House. Bills must be read in the order in which they are introduced, and unless by special order, which, as stated at page 220 of the Digest, can only be made by a two-thirds vote, a bill cannot be read twice on the same day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not only complied with the exact terms of the rule, but he has conformed to the uniform practice of this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman will look at Rule 117, he will see that, if the question to reject be negatived, the bill shall go to its second reading without a question.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. There is no question as to the right to have the bill read a second time. But the point is that it cannot be done now without a suspension of the rules.

Cries of "Read!" "Read!"

The SPEAKER. The bill will now be read the second time.

The bill was read the second time in extenso.

Mr. FIELD. I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from New York now allow debate at this stage, he holding the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that would be the proper course.

Mr. FIELD. I propose to take that course. I shall occupy ten minutes in explaining the provisions of the bill? I shall then allow fifteen minutes to the other side, reserving five minutes for reply.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FIELD. The proposition in this bill is to amend section 146 of the Revised Statutes. In order to determine whether this is expedient we must first see what is the existing law and then how this proposes to alter it. The present section of the Revised Statutes provides only for the removal, death, resignation, or inability of incumbents of the offices. There may be occasions when there are no incumbents, and this amendment is for the purpose of supplying that defect. It ought to have been made long ago; and if it had been in the law at the beginning of this session, a good deal of the uncertainty, the disquiet, and the alarm of the community would have been avoided; for the difficulty, Mr. Speaker, has been from the beginning that the people of this country thought that, if the two Houses disagreed in the count, anarchy would follow; whereas, if you had provided by law, as I ask you now to provide, the office of President, with its great powers, would have passed easily and harmlessly into the hands of an administrator for the time being. It is not merely this present exigency for which this bill is offered, but I beg gentlemen to remember that it is put to them not as a partisan measure but as a measure of policy, commended to them if they desire, as I know they do, the best good of their country. Suppose an invasion or a civil war, which prevented a count of the electoral vote at the time required by law, what then would happen? As the law now stands there is no officer to exercise the presidential office ad interim. If, after the declaration of an election of President and Vice-President, both should die—it should happen—a remote contingency I admit—but if, after the declaration this afternoon or to-morrow of the President and Vice-President elect, they should both be traveling in the same railway train and lose their lives, as the law now stands there is no provision for the vacancy. Are you willing to leave the law in this condition? Then, if it be expedient, is there power in the law-making department of the Government to supply this defect? I insist that there is, for the reason that wherever the Constitution itself does not carry into effect its general provisions it is the duty of the legislative power to carry them out by legislation, and to that end was provided that clause of the Constitution which gives power expressly to Congress to—

> Make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

The power is granted by the Constitution to the Government of the United States to elect a President. It matters not where that power is lodged. It is lodged somewhere. It is in fact partitioned among different departments, a part in the electors and a part in the two Houses when they count the votes. But the power exists somewhere, and I submit that it is not only our right, but our duty as guardians of the public tranquillity and the rights of all citizens and all authorities, to provide for this emergency. In that spirit I offer this bill. I repeat that it is not offered as a partisan measure. I am sure that there is no desire to do anything but faithfully abide by the law of the land as it now stands upon the statute-book, and by the law that we made a few days ago; but that does not prevent us from taking advantage of this occasion which suggests the need of an amendment, and for that reason I propose this amendment of the statute.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendments, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 4657) to provide a building for the use of the United States district and circuit courts, post-office, and internal-revenue offices at Austin, Texas;

A bill (H. R. No. 4149) to remove the political disabilities of Lloyd J. Beall, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4301) for the relief of A. W. Plymate, of West Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 2833) for the relief of Susan P. Vance; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 196) authorizing the President to designate and set apart a site for the colossal statue of "Liberty enlightening the world," and to provide for the permanent maintenance and preservation thereof.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (S. No. 1063) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands;

A bill (S. No. 1285) to remove the political disabilities of J. L. M. Curry, of Virginia;

A bill (S. No. 1197) for the relief of Eli Teegarden; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 32) providing for the renunciation of the naturalization of Fredrick Hinkel.

VACANCY IN THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] with the hope that his attention would be directed voluntarily to the clause in the bill which constitutes the chief if not the only difficulty which I apprehend may exist among members of the House in reference to its adoption. The considerations presented by that gentleman touching the necessity of an amendment of the present law, if we have the power to make it, to meet such a contingency as that contemplated, have not only been well presented by him, but will be accepted without dissent. But in the examination of the bill itself there arise two considerations. The first is constitutional, whether under the Constitution Congress has the power to provide for a vacancy in consequence of non-election, or rather, as the bill phrases it, a non-declaration of the election of the President of the United States. On that point the gentleman made an allusion to the Constitution and gathered the right from what he considered a floating necessity of the Constitution rather than by adverting to any specific provision of that instrument. The Constitution only allows Congress to provide by law for four cases, namely, removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President to act. If, therefore, the case provided for is not death, is not resignation, is not removal, and is not inability to act, I submit to the consideration of the gentlemen of the House that it is, to say the least, extremely doubtful if we have the power to pass such a law as that now proposed. I apprehend that this silence of the Constitution is the precise reason why the law of 1792 made no provision for the case which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] now seeks to provide for. The framers of the Constitution themselves discovered no clause in that instrument under which a provision could be made for the case of a non-election, a contingency which they did not seem to hold in contemplation, either at the time of the adoption of the Constitution or at the time of the passage of the act of 1792.

This is the first and a very important question on which I should be extremely glad to hear the opinion of the constitutional lawyers of the House more thoroughly than can be heard in this short debate. Can you under the Constitution, where it expressly names four cases in which you may provide by law for a vacancy in the office of President, add a fifth case and make provision for it without a violation, or at least without going outside the terms, of the Constitution? That is the question, as I understand it, and all gentlemen will feel the importance of it not only under their oaths to support the Constitution, but as touching the validity of the law.

If the question were raised upon an executive act performed by a President created under such a law as this, and the point was made in court that he was not President by virtue of a constitutional law, gentlemen can see at once that it might disturb the whole operations of the Government.

The second point to which I desire to call attention—I have sent for the bill, but I am sorry to learn that it is not at the Clerk's desk. I desire to give the exact words of the bill. I am informed that the bill has been sent to the room of the engrossing clerk, and he declines to let it be brought back.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has sent for the bill. This delay will not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. KASSON. I wanted the bill in order that I might give the exact words.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's right.

Mr. KASSON. In the mean time I will say that I refer to that phrase of the bill which is brought into the context in a way which perhaps will lead gentlemen to overlook it. It is that portion of the bill which provides, not that the failure to elect by the people shall give these officers the succession to the Presidency, but that a failure of the two Houses of Congress to declare the election, shall have that effect. The statement of the distinction will indicate to gentlemen its importance. A proper construction of that clause of that bill, if it shall become law, would enable either House of Congress, by refusing to unite in the declaration of the result of an election of President, to defeat the popular will and to provide for the members of a former administration holding over, in spite of the clearest declaration by electoral colleges.

It will be borne in mind that this bill is not intended to meet merely the present emergency, but it is to provide for all future emergencies. Thus, if the Senate now or hereafter should refuse to concur in the declaration as to who had been elected President, or if the House should choose not to unite in the declaration as to who had been elected President, then by this bill we would be remitted to the President of the Senate, or to a member of the old administration, which the people of the country may have overthrown by their election, and thus continue in power an old administration in defiance of the will of the people and of the several States of the Union.

When we are making provisions by a bill for all the future I submit that, whatever gentlemen may think of our constitutional authority to pass such a measure, they should hesitate long before adopting a provision that practically puts it in the power not merely of the two Houses of Congress acting together, but in the power of one House of Congress alone, to defeat a popular election and to continue in power an old and perhaps rejected administration.

The clause to which I refer is this, (I now have the bill before me:) After providing for the four cases which by the Constitution we have the express right to provide for, the bill then says:

Or in case of a vacancy in this office, arising from a failure of the two Houses of Congress to ascertain and declare an election before the commencement of the term of office in respect to which the electoral votes were cast.

Thus we come right back to the disputed question that both Houses of Congress by a simple failure to pass on or declare an election—more than that, by the refusal of a single House of Congress to concur in the simple declaration of the result of an election—you may defeat any presidential election that may be held in the United States in the future and rob the States of their constitutional right. I wish gentlemen would carefully observe the clause to which I have referred. Gentlemen who are familiar with the Constitution and the law should take the trouble to examine the two points I have indicated. I regard these provisions as without the Constitution; and second, I regard the clause quoted as very dangerous to the rights of the people of this country and of the States in choosing a President.

I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] a member of the committee, the remainder of the time.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I will yield for three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] my colleague on the committee.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is extremely important that whatever bill may be passed upon this subject shall embody provisions that will meet all the necessities of the case. It seems to me that the whole subject of the presidential succession requires the careful revision of Congress at an early day. That revision ought to be had at a time and under circumstances when it can be done in a way that will secure beyond all doubt the object desired. I do not believe there is any immediate necessity for the passage of this bill, and therefore I submit to the House that it will be better to postpone the consideration of it until more time and attention can be given to the subject.

There is, however, one very serious objection, it seems to me, to this bill; an objection which I regard as insurmountable, an objection which ought to defeat it, and which I think would be found in practice exceedingly vicious. Let me invite the attention of the House to that particular feature of the bill.

It is proposed by this bill that if there shall be a failure to conclude the count of the electoral vote by the 4th of March, the President of the Senate shall become President of the United States. What may be the effect of such a provision? It will be the interest of the President of the Senate to delay the count, to postpone it, in order that he himself may become President of the United States. It will be practically an invitation to him to delay the count in order that he may occupy the highest office within the gift of the people. Sir, it must be perfectly manifest that this bill would invite the exercise of a dangerous power in the hands of the President of the Senate; a power which he could wield for evil and evil only. I think we ought not to pass a bill fraught with so much danger, so much evil as this bill embodies in the one particular I have stated.

I am not troubled with any particular doubt or difficulty as to the constitutional power of Congress to pass a bill upon this subject. It is not to be supposed that the framers of the Constitution created an instrument under which there shall be no possibility of making provisions for filling the Presidential office at all times and under all circumstances. To suppose that they had done this would be to call in question their wisdom, and to say that the Constitution is inadequate to accomplish its great purposes. It is not to be supposed that the framers of the Constitution gave us an instrument under which it is possible that there may be an interregnum for which no provision can be made by law. I do not rest my opposition to this bill therefore upon any ground of want of constitutional power, but solely upon the very objectionable feature of the bill to which I have referred. There may be other objections, but I have not seen the bill in print and had no time to ascertain if there be other reasons for opposing it. But the one objection I have named may lead to difficulties and dangers from which the country may not be extricated; difficulties and dangers which may defeat the real purpose of the Constitution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL.]

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, when asked by one of my colleagues the other day whether I would be willing to vote for a bill providing for a new presidential election, I answered without any hesitation whatever that I would. I am still willing to vote for such a bill to meet the contingency which in my judgment is about to arise. But, at the same time I cannot give my support to this measure. It only shows in my judgment the point to which my democratic associates on this floor have been driven in their madness under the leadership of the distinguished republican from the State of New York [Mr. FIELD] who has lately come into this House.

My first objection to this bill is that it does not meet the case at hand. A bill providing for this contingency ought in my judgment to declare that this new election shall be held, if held at all, not more than sixty days from the 4th of March next, and that in the meanwhile the duties of the executive office of this Government shall be discharged by the Secretary of State. I would not vote for this or any other bill for the sole purpose of keeping out of the presidential office the present governor of the State of Ohio, and to install into that office some other republican in the Senate of the United States. And I warn my colleagues upon this floor—these gentlemen who have been declaiming so loudly against the frauds of the majority of the electoral commission, and who have claimed that they were entrapped into the support of that bill—I warn them here and now that they will be deceived in giving their support to this measure and that the result of it (notwithstanding any tacit or implied understanding they may have with republican Senators to the contrary) will be to put into the presidential office OLIVER P. MORTON, of the State of Indiana; and I for one would rather see Rutherford B. Hayes in that office for four years than OLIVER P. MORTON there for four months or for four days; and yet if he should be put in under the provisions of this bill, he will hold the office for one year, until the 4th day of March, 1878.

And it will be the most sorrowful year in the history of the Republic.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Several members rose.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I now yield——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has no time to yield.

Mr. FIELD resumed the floor.

Mr. HANCOCK. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] to allow me three minutes, because on this occasion I find myself obliged to vote in opposition to those with whom I usually act.

Mr. SEELYE. I would like to occupy three minutes.

Mr. FIELD. Very well; I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE.]

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Speaker, much greater evils come from hasty legislation than from no legislation, and I esteem it very hazardous to legislate on so important a theme as this in so hasty a way. But I take it that the House would unanimously assent to the proposition which the gentleman from New York has argued, if the clause upon which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has objected and upon which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] I observed was very careful not to say a word, could be omitted.

My objections to that clause are two. In the first place it offers a premium to Congress for not doing its duty. In the second place it presents to the Senate the possibility of securing as President of the United States its own President, contrary to the will of the people. These two objections, it seems to me, are fatal to the measure proposed. If the gentleman would consent to an amendment obviating these objections, I think the bill would receive the unanimous assent of the House.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] yield to me for three minutes?

Mr. FIELD. Very well; I consent.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes before us in a most extraordinary manner. It was never referred to the committee by the House. Members of the House, except the gentlemen of the committee, have never seen it. As soon as it was read, I sent to the Clerk for a copy and was told that it was not in the possession of the House. The reason assigned by the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] as to the necessity for legislation of this kind, and what he assumes to be a fact that in case of invasion by a foreign enemy there can be no counting of the electoral vote, is without foundation in fact. Sir, there is no condition of things in which the presidential vote cannot be counted. Whenever there is a possibility of the two Houses being in existence, whenever there is a Government, either during invasion as well as during peace, the President of the Senate, in presence of such members of the Senate and House as choose to meet him for that purpose, has the constitutional power to count the electoral vote. The founders of the Government provided for that. It is impossible that it shall fail. Therefore there is no necessity for the bill on that ground.

A fundamental objection to this bill is that it recognizes, as if it were a constitutional proceeding, the refusal or failure of either House of Congress to count the electoral vote or declare the election of President by the people and to supply a President of its own choice in such a case in place of the President that is elected by the people. And this is done in direct opposition to the declaration of the framers of the Constitution which has been repeated for nearly a hundred years, that neither Congress itself nor members of Congress, nor members of the Government should have anything whatever to do with the election of a President of the United States except when the people failed to elect, and then a choice should be made from the five highest candidates by the House of Representatives. This bill recognizes the failure of the two Houses to declare an election, an act which they have no power to perform as a natural and constitutional procedure; and in the case of failure a man never voted for by the people, never thought of by them in connection with the office of President, is to be installed in the office of Presidency.

Again the bill is objectionable because it treats as a constitutional procedure the neglect or failure to count the vote cast in the last presidential election, and authorizes either the Senate or the House to defeat a successful candidate by their neglect or failure to declare an election and to put in that high office a man not chosen by the people, in place of Mr. Hayes, whom I and others believe to have been elected, or in place of Mr. Tilden, whom other gentlemen believe to have been elected.

Mr. CLYMER. Is that worse than to put in a man not elected at all?

Mr. BANKS. The bill makes of this irregular proceeding a constitutional procedure on the part of either House which may choose to avoid the duty imposed upon it and to that extent Mexicanizes the Government. For these reasons the bill ought not to pass.

Mr. FIELD. There is not time in five minutes to reply to all these arguments, and I will select therefore some which are most prominent.

To my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] the friend of many years, let me say that he entirely mistakes the object and effect of this bill. He tells me that it is the duty of the two Houses to count the votes. So it is their duty; but what did we see on the first Monday in December? We saw the gentlemen at this end of the Capitol declaring that no vote should be counted unless both Houses concurred and at the other end the reverse; and if it had not been for the electoral law passed for the purpose, no announcement could have been made of the vote of the two Houses. That was a contingency then upon us, not provided for by law, an omission for which my friend is in part responsible, as he has held an honored seat in this House for many years, and has never offered any bill for that purpose or in any way provided or attempted to provide for it.

Mr. BANKS. There was no necessity for it.

Mr. FIELD. Now we have an emergency, let us act like statesmen and provide for it.

My friend from Ohio thinks that the bill is constitutional, my friend from Iowa thinks it is not. I have submitted the grounds upon which I think it is constitutional. They are these: Congress has the power to make all laws necessary or proper for carrying into effect any power vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States. Of all the powers granted, except the legislative, that of making a President is the highest. That power can be entirely defeated as the law now stands by a number of contingencies easily imagined. To provide for them I ask that we pass this bill, and I appeal to my friends on the other side of the House to come forward, not in the spirit of partisans, but in the spirit of statesmen, and help us pass it.

Gentlemen tell us that it applies to the present election. It does apply to this and to all elections, as it should apply. That is the reason why I ask its passage. I now call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 124, noes 95.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. Allow me to make the point of order, so we may have further time to consider this, that it is not in order to read this bill a third time to-day. I make that point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is on the floor to demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FIELD. Yes, sir; I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Does the Speaker hold that one previous question operates to the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has demanded the previous question on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But the main question has not been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was putting the motion to the House.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I call attention to the fact that the engrossed bill has not yet been read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and that order of the House was being executed when the gentleman from Iowa raised the point of order.

Mr. OLIVER. I desire to be heard on the point that it is not in order to take the question on the passage of the bill until the bill has been read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read a third time.

The engrossed bill was then read.

Mr. OLIVER. I make the point that it is not in order to demand the previous question until the bill has been read a third time.

The SPEAKER. In order to accommodate the gentleman, the Chair will again put the question on seconding the demand for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. KASSON. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 140, nays 109, not voting 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Cutler, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Egbert, Ellis, Faulkner, Field, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartzell, Hatcher, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Humphreys, Jenks, Thomas L. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, Bass, Belford, Bell, Blount, Samuel D. Burchard, Chapin, Durand, Durham, Eden, Felton, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Hartridge, Haymond, Henderson, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hunton, Hurd, Frank Jones, King, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lynde, Magoon, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Nash, Payne, Rea, James B. Reilly, Stephens, Wheeler, and Young—41.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. MONEY. Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. ELLIS. My colleague from Louisiana, Mr. GIBSON, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. STONE. Mr. DURHAM, of Kentucky, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. BUCKNER, (having voted "ay.") I desire to vote "no." I voted "ay" with the expectation that I would be recognized to move to reconsider. I learn that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] will be recognized for a motion to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table. I desired to make the motion to reconsider that I might give some reasons for my vote, as I regard the bill as being grossly unconstitutional.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BUCKNER. Therefore I vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. FIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENTS OF SOUTH CAROLINA AND LOUISIANA.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I move that the rules be suspended and that the following resolution be adopted:

Whereas the principle that "all free governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," cannot be disregarded much less violated by the Congress of these United States; and,

Whereas it is evident that the governments known as the Hampton government in South Carolina, and the Nicholls government in Louisiana, are the only governments in those States that command the support of the people and do not depend for their preservation on the military and forcible interference of the National Government,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First, that the State government of South Carolina represented by Governor Wade Hampton is recognized by Congress as the lawful government of South Carolina.

Second, That the State government of Louisiana represented by Governor Francis T. Nicholls is recognized by Congress as the lawful government of Louisiana.

Mr. BANNING. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 156, nays 93, not voting 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Cutler, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Ellis, Faulkner, Felton, Field, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Henry R. Harris, John T. Landers, Lane, Le Moyne, Levy, Lord, Lynde, Mackey, Maish, McMahon, Meade, Mills, Money, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Neal, New, O'Brien, Odell, Phelps, John F. Philips, Piper, Poppleton, Powell, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Schumaker, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stanton, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Jere N. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Fernando Wood, and Yeates—156.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Buttz, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Conger, Crounse, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Hale, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Hendee, Henderson, Hoge, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Nash, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, Bass, Bell, Burleigh, Campbell, Carr, Chittenden, Crapo, Douglas, Durand, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Garfield, Gibson, Hays, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hunton, Frank Jones, King, Lewis, Luttrell, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Payne, Pierce, Potter, Purman, James B. Reilly, Stephens, Waldron, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Willard, and Young—41.

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call,

Mr. MONEY said: I desire to State that Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, is absent on account of sickness. If he were present he would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to have printed in the RECORD, as part of the debates, some remarks in explanation of my vote upon the bill providing for presidential vacancies.

There was no objection, and leave was granted.

GOVERNOR OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. WATTERSON. I move that the rules be suspended and that the resolution which I send to the desk be passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. After that I will ask the House to finish the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the following telegram was sent yesterday afternoon by authority of the President of the United States to Governor Francis T. Nicholls, of Louisiana:

"I have just had a satisfactory interview with the President, who says that he is satisfied that the Nicholls government is the government which should stand in Louisiana, and that he believes it will stand, because it is sustained by the best elements of the State, and that the Packard government cannot exist without the support of troops; that the sentiment of the country is clearly opposed to the further use of troops in upholding a State government; that in his opinion there would be no interference with the Nicholls government unless, carried away by the possession of power, violent excesses were committed. The President said he desired his views to be known.

"E. A. BURKE."

Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the opinions expressed by the President are eminently sound and patriotic; that they express the sense of a large majority of the American people, and that, if carried into effect, they will insure good government in Louisiana and South Carolina.

Mr. HURLBUT. How do we know that?

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds had voted in the affirmative.

Mr. RUSK called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent for the gentleman to add a clause to that resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. Why is it not in order?

The SPEAKER. Because the House has ordered the yeas and nays, and after that it is not in order to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. There is no inconsistency in the rulings——

The SPEAKER. Because the Chair happens to be right and the gentleman from Michigan happens to be wrong.

Mr. CONGER. It is a mere chance.

The Clerk commenced to call the roll.

Mr. MILLS. Would it be in order to move that the House take a recess till ten o'clock to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order. This is a motion to suspend the rules, and the roll-call has commenced.

Mr. MILLS. The roll-call had not commenced when I arose to get the attention of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk had commenced to call the roll.

Mr. MILLS. Not at the time when I arose. I claim I have the right to be recognized. I rose before the Clerk had called any names.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman after the roll-call.

Mr. MILLS. I want to be recognized now, before the roll-call is proceeded with.

The SPEAKER. The Chair considers the gentleman is too late.

Mr. MILLS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HALE. There is no appeal on a question of this kind.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not insist on his appeal.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair certainly will not entertain an appeal after the roll-call has actually commenced.

The calling of the roll was then continued.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 127, nays 85, not voting 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Carr, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Reilly, John Robbins, Sampson, Sheakley, Stenger, Stephens, Swann, Tufts, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Ward, Wheeler, Wigginton, Willard, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Fernando Wood, and Young—78.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (S. No. 470) for the relief of John S. Wood, late a first lieutenant in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GAUSE obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust I shall be permitted to bring up and finish the sundry civil appropriation bill, which has been reported to the House. I think we can dispose of it in a few minutes.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION, ARKANSAS.

Mr. GAUSE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 2382) granting the right of way to the Hot Springs Railroad Company over the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas, returned from the Senate with an amendment, be taken from the Speaker's table, and, with the amendment of the Senate, be concurred in.

No objection being made, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. GAUSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 286) for the relief of W. S. McComb, of the State of Georgia;

An act (S. No. 1270) to authorize the printing and distribution of the memorial addresses on the life and character of the late Michael C. Kerr, Speaker of the House of Representatives; and

An act (S. No. 1271) to authorize the printing and distribution of the eulogies delivered in Congress on the announcement of the death of the late Allen T. Caperton, a Senator from the State of West Virginia.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLER] may have the privilege of printing in the RECORD, as part of the debate, some remarks upon House bill No. 748, to apply the proceeds of sales of public lands to the education of the people.

There was no objection, and the leave was granted.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. DE BOLT, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Louis Benicke, no adverse report having been made in the case.

On motion of Mr. LYNCH, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Matilda Shields, no adverse report having been made in the casa.

On motion of Mr. FRANKLIN, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of James Brice, no adverse report having been made in the case.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. METCALFE, for the remainder of the session on account of a death in his family.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. JAMES B. REILLY, for two days on account of important business.

Mr. COX. I move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that will not be done.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I desire, before that motion is put, to make a report from the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. COX. I withdraw the motion for a recess.

Mr. WELLS. I submit the report and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 19, 20, 43, 47, 48, 49, 52, 58, 59, 60, 68, 71, 79, 80, 81, and 82.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 16, 17, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 37, 38, 39, 42, 46, 50, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 69, 70, 83, 85, 87, 88, and 89; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 2, 11, 14, 15, 18, 21, 31, 34, 35, and 36, and agree to the same with amendments respectively, as follows: In No. 2 in lieu of "seventy" insert "sixty-nine;" in No. 11 in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$101,700;" in No. 14 in lieu of "four" insert "seven;" in No. 15 in lieu of "ten" insert "six;" in No. 18 in lieu of "six" insert "five;" in No. 21 strike out on page 15, line 3 of the bill, the words "flour and meat" and insert in lieu thereof the word "subsistence;" in No. 31 strike out "$14,000" and insert "$12,879.04;" in No. 34 in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,000;" in No. 35 in lieu of "five" insert "four;" and in No. 36 in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,500." And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 40, and agree to the same; with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "forty-seven" insert "twenty-five" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "two hundred and fifty" insert "one hundred and twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 44 and 45, and agree to the same with amendments respectively as follows:

In No. 44 in lieu of "fifteen" insert "ten," and in No. 45 in lieu of "one hundred" insert "ninety;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 11, page 42 of the bill strike out "fifty" and insert "forty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "fifteen hundred" insert "one thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "forty" insert "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, and 78, and agree to the same with amendments respectively as follows: In No. 72 in lieu of "thirty" insert "twenty-five;" in No. 73, in lieu of "thirty" insert "twenty-five;" in No. 74 in lieu of "twenty" insert "fifteen;" in No. 75 in lieu of "eight" insert "six;" in No. 76 in lieu of "twenty-five" insert "twenty;" in No. 77 in lieu of "twenty" insert "fifteen;" and in No. 78 in lieu of "seventy-five" insert "forty-eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of said amendment the words "the Secretary of the Interior," and strike out of the text of the bill all after the word "affairs," in line 16, page 50 of the bill, down to and including line 24, the close of the section; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "four" insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

ERASTUS WELLS,
CHARLES FOSTER,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
WM. WINDOM,
L. V. BOGY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I move that the report of the committee of conference be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call up the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported with amendments from the Committee of the Whole. Before calling the previous question on the bill and amendments I desire to submit four or five small amendments necessary to perfect the original text of the bill. The first is in regard to the appropriation for the public building at Boston. I move to add to the clause the words "and the whole amount shall be immediately available."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the clause in relation to the contingent fund of the Freedmen's Hospital by increasing the amount from $1,000 to $2,500, and making the total of the paragraph correspond.

Mr. RUSK. There is no objection to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish simply to state that on further examination the Committee on Appropriations considered it proper to slightly increase the contingent fund of the Freedmen's Hospital. The amount fixed in the bill is $1,000 for that purpose, and I propose to increase it to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to move an amendment to the clause appropriating $40,000 for the propagation of food fishes, by adding to it the words, "which shall be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the bill by adding to it that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That $6,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary of the sum appropriated by the act of March 3, 1875, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses for the year ending June 30, 1876, to pay the expenses of the commissioner appointed by the President under a joint resolution approved February 16, 1875, to attend the International Prison Congress, is hereby re-appropriated and made immediately available for the payment of the preliminary expenses of said commissioner.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to explain the object of this amendment. In 1875 we appropriated the sum of $8,000 to enable a commissioner appointed by the President of the United States to attend an international convention to consider the subject of the prisons and penitentiaries of the world, a humane movement in which many able, intelligent, and christian men and women were interested. This money has not been expended. An international convention upon the subject is to be held during the present year in some city of Europe, and the Committee on Appropriations recommend that $6,000 of this former appropriation be re-appropriated for that purpose. I trust there will be no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now have four amendments which I desire to move to amendments which have been adopted in Committee of the Whole, and then I propose to call the previous question on the bill and the amendments.

Mr. GOODIN. I hope the gentleman will allow me to offer an amendment; he knows what it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will hear it read. It is not strictly in order, but if no one objects to it I will not.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

To pay C. W. C. Dunnington, J. L. Knight, B. E. Hambleton, J. W. Wiggins, Allen Wood, J. M. Johns, D. L. Payne, G. P. Jordan, S. M. Freeman, C. J. Lewis, W. F. Weeks, J. L. Walters, H. T. Murray, W. H. Minnix, W. W. Lester, and J. M. Buchanan, $30 each for extra work and labor in the folding-room of the House during the months of September, October, November, and December last, to be immediately available, in all $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now desire to move the four amendments I have indicated, and to ask that I may have an opportunity to be heard by the House upon them.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I must decline. By the law now in force for the present year we have appropriated for the Hayden survey $65,000, for the Powell survey $30,000, and for the Wheeler survey $30,000. I desire to move amendments making the same appropriations for these purposes for the next fiscal year that were made for the present fiscal year, and I ask consent to offer the amendments together. The amendments are, to substitute for the Hayden survey $65,000, for the $75,000 made in Committee of the Whole; for the Powell survey, $30,000 for the $50,000 made in Committee of the Whole; and for the Wheeler survey, $30,000 instead of the $50,000 made in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOOKER and others objected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will have to reach my purpose in a more elaborate way. I move to amend the appropriation for the Hayden survey so as to make it $65,000. And I desire to say to the House that this bill has been very largely increased beyond the appropriations made last year in the corresponding bill. I now call the previous question on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. My point of order is that amendments are not now in order; that the House must now consider the amendments made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The bill is open to amendments in every respect.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the amendments made in Committee of the Whole must be first considered.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the amendment to which I move an amendment has already been considered in Committee of the Whole. It is very clear that the point of order cannot be raised on that proposition, for the House certainly has power to reduce the appropriations made by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must say that there is so much confusion in the Hall, he is not able to distinctly understand the amendment of the gentleman. He would inquire if it is a new amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. By the text of the bill, as reported from the Committee on Appropriations, there was appropriated $50,000 for the Hayden survey. The Committee of the Whole increased the amount to $75,000. My motion is to amend the amendment of the Committee of the Whole, so as to appropriate for that purpose $65,000, the same amount appropriated for the present fiscal year.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the gentleman whether he intends to go on with amendment after amendment in this way after we have brought the bill into the House, so as to change the whole bill from what the Committee of the Whole has made it? If he does, he will never get the bill through.

Mr. HOLMAN. I said that I had only these three amendments.

The SPEAKER. This a very unusual proceeding——

Mr. HALE. Highly unusual.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not unusual.

The SPEAKER. Well, it is not common within the recollection of the Chair. If this amendment embraced new matter, the Chair would rule that it could not be offered in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I admit that the amount reported by the Committee of the Whole cannot be increased without the question being again considered in Committee of the Whole. But this is simply a proposition to reduce the amount of an amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. Allow me to ask the gentlemen from Indiana this question: Suppose a proposition should now be made to amend this bill by reducing the aggregate of all the appropriations one-quarter or one-half; would that be in order?

Mr. HOLMAN. It could undoubtedly be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that the usual mode of reaching the sense of the House upon an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole is to have a vote upon it directly in the House.

Mr. HALE. After calling the previous question.

The SPEAKER. And if the amendment as made in Committee of the Whole is not adopted by the House, then the amount as originally reported in the bill stands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under that rule there would be in this case but two propositions before the House—$50,000 and $75,000. Now $65,000 is certainly a reasonable sum; and this is what my amendment proposes.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask the gentleman whether he might not make a similar motion in the House to reduce every single item of appropriation in the bill, and thus virtually in the House go over the whole bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no, sir; such a motion is applicable only to amendments made in Committee of the Whole. I am exceedingly anxious that the amount of this bill shall not be swelled beyond all proper limits. That is my only object in the amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. The effect of this proceeding would be to cut off all amendments but those the gentleman proposes himself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the vote should be taken upon the amendments of the Committee of the Whole in their order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the Chair hold that an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole cannot be amended in the House?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Digest on page 75 reads thus:

After report the bill shall again be subject to be debated and amended by clauses before a question to engross it be taken.

The only way in which this has been prevented heretofore has been because the gentleman in charge of the bill has usually asked the previous question; but if the gentleman from Indiana sees fit now to open this bill to amendment, of course it is open.

The SPEAKER. Although this is a very unusual proceeding, the Chair, upon examination, sees no rule by which the gentleman from Indiana is prevented from making this motion. The gentleman moves to amend the amendment of the Committee of the Whole in the manner indicated, by striking out "$75,000" and inserting "$65,000."

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order. I submit that when a bill has been reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole, the proper method of procedure is to consider the amendments reported from the committee.

The SPEAKER. In their order.

Mr. HOOKER. I submit that this is the manner in which the House ought now to proceed to consider this bill with the amendments added in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is correct.

Mr. SAYLER. Allow me in answer to the point of order of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] to make this proposition: that until the previous question is called, and has been sustained by the House, the bill so far as these amendments are concerned is as fully open to amendment in the House as it was in Committee of the Whole, except that any amendment increasing the amount of an appropriation must first be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that he saw nothing in the rules to prevent the gentleman from Indiana from offering this amendment. At the same time he stated that the proceeding is unusual. He states now that the amendments of the Committee of the Whole ought to be acted upon in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Instead of this being an unusual proceeding, I know that the practice has been indulged in at least fifty times within my experience in this House.

Mr. HALE. Did the gentleman ever know it to be done except by unanimous consent?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have known it to be done at least fifty times in my experience here.

Mr. HALE. In my experience upon appropriation bills, I have never known a case in which after the Committee of the Whole have adopted amendments and reported the bill to the House, the gentleman in charge of the bill, except by unanimous consent, undertook to interfere with the action of the Committee of the Whole.

The question recurred on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment to the amendment of the Committee of the Whole.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 101.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded tellers.

Mr. RUSK. We might as well have the yeas and nays now, as you will have them in the end.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, I demand the tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HOOKER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 101.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question next recurred on the amendment of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 62.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move now that in the amendment of the committee in reference to the Major Powell survey the appropriation be reduced to $30,000. That is the sum fixed for the present year.

Mr. STEVENSON. The amount was fixed by the Committee of the Whole at $50,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, the Committee of the Whole made it $50,000. I propose to amend that by making it $30,000, and I call the previous question on that amendment.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 101.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Mr. COX. I now renew my motion that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. WHITE. I move to take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening for the purpose of considering the Private Calendar. Is not my motion to be received by the Chair?

The SPEAKER. That motion requires unanimous consent, and besides the Chair has to put the question first on the longest time.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 104.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 121, nays 120, not voting 49; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Bradford, Bright, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Reilly, Savage, Scales, Sheakley, Stephens, Thomas, Ward, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Whiting, Alpheus S. Williams, and Young—49.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess until to-morrow at ten o'clock a. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session at ten o'clock a. m. Wednesday, February 28.

ELECTORAL COUNT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication: The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1877.

SIR: I am directed by the electoral commission to inform the House of Representatives that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it under the act of Congress concerning the same, touching the electoral vote from the State of South Carolina, and has transmitted its decision to the President of the Senate, to be read at the meeting of the two Houses, according to said act.

NATHAN CLIFFORD,
President of the Commission.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the Clerk be directed to notify the Senate that the House is ready to proceed with the electoral count at half past eleven o'clock. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I move to amend by saying "forthwith."

Mr. ATKINS. I shall object to any business being transacted without the presence of a quorum.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I move to insert "forthwith."

Mr. HOLMAN. I will agree to fix eleven o'clock.

Mr. ATKINS. I make the point of order that no quorum is present, and I object to going on with any business without a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to the House, and a division will develop the presence or absence of a quorum.

Mr. WALLING. I move to amend by saying half-past one.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question of a quorum having been raised, the Chair will, under the rules, count the House.

Mr. CONGER. Whenever a motion is put to the House that will show whether a quorum is present or not.

The SPEAKER. The attention of the Chair has been called to the fact that no quorum is present, and the Chair is now counting the House, and finds one hundred and ten members present. If there be no objection, the Chair will submit the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to know whether the Chair intends to put the question without a quorum?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to put the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to the House, and a division on that motion will show whether a quorum is present or not, with certainty.

Mr. ATKINS. Is it in order to move that there be a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is competent for the gentleman to make that motion.

Mr. HALE. Will the Chair listen to a statement from me in the way of getting along with our business.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a question of order. Is it in order to move now that there be a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HALE. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to listen to me for a moment while I make a proposition. If he objects it can be disposed of by his objection. My proposition is that by unanimous consent, which changes no rule, the Senate be notified that the House will be ready to meet them at eleven o'clock or half-past eleven o'clock to proceed with the electoral count; and that in the mean time we go on and finish the appropriation bill. I ask that this be done not by a motion overriding what any gentleman may consider to be the rule applicable to the case or the law, but by unanimous consent, no member objecting, which changes no rule and sets no precedent. I make this proposition in the interest of the business of the House, and at the same time of expediting the count.

Mr. SPRINGER. Say half past twelve o'clock and I think there will be no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was the object of my motion to accomplish what the gentleman from Maine has suggested. I believe the pending appropriation bill can be disposed of in half an hour.

Mr. ATKINS. I insist on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] insists on his motion for a call of the House.

Mr. HALE. Will not the gentleman withhold that motion that unanimous consent may be asked for my proposition?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have suggested that if the gentleman from Maine will say half past twelve o'clock I think there will be no objection.

Mr. HALE. I have said half past eleven, that being the hour which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations himself proposed.

Mr. GARFIELD. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says he thinks we can get through the appropriation bill in half an hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that by unanimous consent, in order to avoid the delay occasioned by a call of the House and to facilitate business, the proposition of the gentleman from Maine be accepted, except that the hour for meeting the Senate shall be fixed for half past twelve.

Mr. GARFIELD. Say half past eleven.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Half past eleven was the first proposition of the gentleman from Indiana; let him stand by it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will modify the proposition and say twelve o'clock.

Mr. CARR. I object.

The SPEAKER. To what does the gentleman object?

Mr. CARR. To fixing the time for meeting the Senate by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the House to determine by a vote. The gentleman has not the right to interpose his single objection.

Mr. ATKINS. I submit that the proposition made by the gentleman from Maine cannot be acceded to. As I understand it, we can do no legislation under present circumstances.

Mr. EDEN. We can by unanimous consent.

Mr. ATKINS. Not under the law under which we are acting.

Mr. HALE. We can by unanimous consent.

Mr. ATKINS. We cannot by unanimous consent suspend a statute and the Constitution itself.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a vote on my motion fixing the time for meeting the Senate at twelve o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like some gentleman to direct his attention to that part of the law which it is supposed prevents the transaction of business until the receipt of the decision of the commission. The mere notification that the commission has arrived at a decision does not, so far as the Chair is aware, compel the interruption of legislative business.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It logically follows; for if one House can delay the meeting of the two Houses——

The SPEAKER. If there was a purpose to delay, the Chair would then take notice of that.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But if we can fix the meeting at twelve o'clock noon, we can fix it at twelve o'clock midnight.

The SPEAKER. We have uniformly fixed the time, the only restriction being that we cannot fix the time beyond ten o'clock on the next day.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We have had one recess until ten o'clock to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion, in the absence of his attention being directed to any part of the law——

Mr. SAMPSON. If the Speaker will allow me, I desire to call his attention to the last sentence of section 5:

And while any question is being considered by said commission either House may proceed with its legislative business.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] having moved a call of the House, is anything else in order until the sense of the House is taken on that question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was listening to gentlemen to see if some understanding might be reached that legislative business might be proceeded with. Does the gentleman from Tennessee insist upon his motion for a call of the House?

Mr. ATKINS. I do.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the Speaker of the House is entitled to say whether in his judgment there is a quorum present or not. The call of the House cannot be made unless in the judgment of the Chair a quorum is not present.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope we will not have the delay of a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cousiders that under the rule he has a right to determine for himself whether there is a quorum.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that the president of the electoral commission had notified the Senate that the commission had arrived at a decision of the question submitted to it in relation to the electoral votes of South Carolina, and that the Senate was now ready to meet the House for the purpose of laying before the two Houses the report of said decision and to proceed with the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Clerk be directed to inform the Senate that the House is ready to meet the Senate to receive the decision of the electoral commission and to proceed with the counting of the electoral votes. There can be nothing else in order now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I still adhere to my motion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Under your decision, previously made, Mr. Speaker, the House has no right to postpone the meeting with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House has a right to judge of its convenience as to a reasonable time for meeting the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think we should take into consideration at the same time the convenience of the Senate; they are waiting at our doors.

Mr. HOLMAN. I concede that if this were a motion for delay it might be against the spirit of the law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not recognize it as a motion for delay.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a bona fide motion, as every gentleman can see.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes it as a motion in the interest of necessary legislation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was the motion of the gentleman from Iowa entertained?

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending for a call of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In the interest of legislation the Chair must see that if we keep the Senate waiting at our doors legislation must stop.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must see also that the House is not a House unless it has a quorum present. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has moved a call of the House for the purpose of finding out whether or no there be a quorum here.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Chair has a right to determine that for himself.

Mr. DANFORD. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair counted the members present, and there were one hundred and ten members present, and the Chair therefore recognized the gentleman from Tennessee to move that there be a call of the House in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GARFIELD. On that question I demand a division.

The question was taken on Mr. ATKINS's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 32, noes 114.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and forty-six members have voted, which is a quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentlemen agree now that we shall meet the Senate at twelve o'clock and go on with the count?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Chair will permit me to call his attention to the law; I have it before me. It reads as follows:

Which decision shall be made in writing, stating briefly the ground thereof, and signed by the members of said commission agreeing therein; whereupon the two Houses shall again meet.

Mr. SPRINGER. We propose to meet the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope we shall agree to a motion to fix the time for the joint meeting at twelve o'clock.

Mr. SAMPSON. I understood the Chair to make the inquiry what part of the law gentlemen relied upon for the opinion that no legislative business could be transacted unless there was something pending before the commission. I call the attention of the Chair to the last sentence in section 5 of that law, which is as follows:

And while any question is being considered by said commission, either House may proceed with its legislative or other business.

I understand that to be the only authority under which the House can, until there is a final dissolution of this joint meeting, transact any legislative business whatever. The decision in the South Carolina case having now been rendered by the commission, and we being officially notified of the fact that nothing is pending before the commission, I hold that no legislation is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided and still thinks that a mere notification of the decision of the commission to one House has not the effect of preventing the other from legislating. But when the notification has been received from the other branch of Congress, that branch which by law has possession of the decision of the commission, where the notification comes from that body to this, then the Chair rules that legislative business is cut off.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. What is the pending motion?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] that there be a call of the House. The House divided on the motion and there were—ayes 32, noes 114; so the noes have it, and there is a quorum present.

Mr. SPRINGER. And there is a call for the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. FRANKLIN. It is not too late; I called for the yeas and nays immediately after the vote was taken.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The result had been previously announced by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] is mistaken; the Chair announced the aggregate vote and the fact that there appeared to be a quorum present.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. He announced that there were 32 in the affirmative and 114 in the negative.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Then I demanded the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are demanded on the formal announcement of the vote. The Chair finds that Mr. BURCHARD is correct, and that he announced the vote separately.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. By unanimous consent of the House cannot we go ahead on the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was left unfinished yesterday, until twelve o'clock?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. We have tried that, and cannot do it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that it will be agreed by unanimous consent that we shall go on with the sundry civil appropriation bill until twelve o'clock.

Mr. PAGE. I suggest to the gentleman that he say eleven o'clock.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Probably the bill can be finished by that time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope gentlemen will consent to fix the time at twelve o'clock. I ask that the proposition be submitted to the House for unanimous consent.

Mr. FORT. The Speaker has decided that legislative business is not in order.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Would it be in order if unanimous consent were given to do what I have proposed? I ask it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] asks unanimous consent that legislative business be proceeded with and that notification be sent to the Senate that this body will be ready to receive them at twelve o'clock.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope there will be no objection to that arrangement.

Mr. SAMPSON. I object.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. My point of order is that under the law creating the electoral commisson the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] to proceed with the consideration of legislative business is not in order at this time. That law provides that pending the consideration of any question by the commission either House may transact legislative business or other business. The commission having disposed of the question which was before it, and the Speaker having ruled directly that under the law we cannot now in either House transact legislative business, it is not in order by unanimous consent for one House to change the law as it stands.

Mr. SAYLER. I understand that the Chair ruled on a former occasion that by unanimous consent the House might transact legislative business.

Mr. SAMPSON. I withdraw my objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CARR. I renew it.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Objection being made to the proposition that the House proceed with the transaction of legislative business until twelve o'clock, the question recurs upon my demand for the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That is the question before the House. As many as are in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [Having counted the affirmative vote.] A sufficient number have risen to order the yeas and nays, and they are ordered.

Mr. PAGE. Is it proper to have a call of the House when the last vote disclosed the presence of a quorum?

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted to the House the question upon ordering a call of the House, and the House divided upon that question. It is the right of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANKLIN] to call for the yeas and nays on that question, and the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the Chair state again, so that we may all understand, what is the question upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] that there now be a call of the House.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 76, nays 156, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Carr, Cate, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Faulkner, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hartridge, Henkle, Hooker, Humphreys, Hunton, Hurd, Knott, Lane, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, McMahon, Mills, Morrison, Mutchler, O'Brien, John F. Vance, Waddell, Walling, Walsh, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Jere N. Williams, and Benjamin Wilson—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Buttz, Candler, Cannon, Cason, Chapin, Chittenden, Conger, Cook, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Evans, Felton, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris Hartzell, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Holman, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Morgan, Nash, New, Neal, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Phelps, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Rea, John Reilly, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Seelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Stowell, Strait, Tarbox, Teese, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Warner, Warren, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Yeates—156.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Bass, Beebe, Bliss, Blount, Burleigh, Campbell, Caswell, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Darrall, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Field, Gause, Gibson, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Harrison, Hays, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoge, Hopkins, House, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, King, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Lynde, McFarland, Meade, Metcalfe, Milliken, Money, Odell, Payne, William A. Phillips, Platt, Purman, Reagan, James B. Reilly, Schumaker, Sparks, Stephens, Swann, Thomas, Ward, Watterson, Wheeler, Willard, Willis, and Young—58.

So the motion was not agreed to.

At the conclusion of the roll-call,

Mr. HOLMAN said: I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with, and that the time of twelve o'clock be fixed for the joint meeting of the two Houses, to continue the electoral count, and that in the mean time the House proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. McCRARY. We will agree to that.

Mr. PAGE. I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that ten minutes after twelve o'clock be named as the time, for the reason that that will give time for the opening of a new legislative day by prayer.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I will say ten minutes after twelve o'clock.

Mr. CARR. I object to the transaction of any legislative business.

Mr. SAYLER. Then I move that the House inform the Senate that they will be in session and ready to meet them at ten minutes past twelve o'clock for the purpose of proceeding with the electoral count.

Mr. WALLING. The names upon the roll-call have not yet been read by the Clerk; I called for the reading of the names.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asked that the reading of the names be dispensed with, to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] objected. The Clerk will read the names.

The Clerk began the reading of the names, but before concluding,

Mr. WALLING said: I withdraw my demand for the reading of the names. I do so with the understanding that the motion of my colleague [Mr. SAYLER] will be immediately submitted to the House.

No further objection being made, the reading of the names was dispensed with, and the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. SAYLER. I now move that the Clerk of the House be instructed to inform the Senate that the House will be in session at ten minutes past twelve o'clock to-day and ready to receive them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that motion is put, I ask that the Chair will again submit my request that by unanimous consent the House in the mean time proceed with the consideration of legislative business.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER,] the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent that in the mean time the sundry civil appropriation bill may be considered by the House.

Many MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection——

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order. I make the same point I made before, that under the law after a report has been received from the commission, no legislative business is in order until that report has been acted on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that by unanimous consent that point may be waived.

Mr. HOOKER. I insist on the point of order that under the law it is not possible to proceed with any legislative business after a report from the commission has been made and is still undisposed of.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman insists, the Chair must sustain the point, because the very fact of the gentleman insisting is in the nature of an objection.

Mr. SAYLER. I submit, however, to the judgment of the Chair that the objection of the gentleman from Mississippi comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi has twice before notified the Chair of that objection. The Chair therefore is compelled to take notice of it, even though he may have been too late in renewing the point the last time. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER,] that the Clerk of the House notify the Senate that the House will be ready to receive the Senate at ten minutes after twelve o'clock to proceed with the electoral count.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Will not the effect of that motion be simply to suspend all proceedings in the House until that hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot help that. The House has brought itself into this condition.

The motion of Mr. SAYLER was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask that by unanimous consent the sundry civil appropriation bill may be taken up and considered in the interim.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Mississippi raises the point of order, which forces the Chair again to rule, as he has already ruled this morning, that legislative business is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps the gentleman from Mississippi may not renew that point. I think the point will be waived if the request is again made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the proposition again. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that between now and the time for the meeting of the joint convention the sundry civil appropriation bill may be considered in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move, then, that the House now proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] for the reason already stated, that a notification having come from the electoral commission that a decision has been reached and from the Senate that it is in possession of that decision, it is not competent under the law to proceed at this time with legislative business.

Mr. CASWELL. I move, then, to reconsider the vote by which the House directed the Senate to be notified that the House would be ready to meet the Senate at ten minutes after twelve o'clock.

Several MEMBERS. O, no!

Mr. COX. I move that the House take a recess until five minutes before twelve o'clock.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to make a privileged motion. I would be glad if we might be permitted to go on with the appropriation bill now; but if that is not in order I move that the Senate be notified that the House is now ready to proceed with the electoral count; and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. COX. My motion is privileged.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a point of order. On motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER,] the House has already passed an order notifying the Senate that the House will be ready to meet that body at ten minutes after twelve o'clock.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The object of my objection was that no legislative business should prevent the execution of the business of which we have notified the Senate. The gentleman from Indiana assures me that this bill can be passed before the time fixed for resuming the electoral count. I therefore withdraw my objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves——

Mr. COX. I withdraw my motion also. [Laughter.]

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

By unanimous consent, the House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4682) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the previous question upon the bill and pending amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that all amendments be concurred in except those upon which a separate vote may be called for.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$30,000" as the appropriation for what is known as the "Powell survey." On this amendment the question had been taken and the result declared in the negative, whereupon the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] called for tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not insist upon the call.

The SPEAKER. Then the amendment is not agreed to. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House concur in all the amendments of the Committee of the Whole, except those upon which a separate vote may be called for.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced the passage of an act (H. R. No. 4261) to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, with amendments in which concurrence was requested.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on concurring in the amendments of the Committee of the Whole in gross, with the exception of those upon which a separate vote has been demanded.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. As a test vote I shall call for a separate vote on the allowance to Mr. Farwell for the expenses of his contested case in the present Congress, from Chicago. I ask the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Charles B. Farwell, of the third district of Illinois, $3,000.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, when in Committee of the Whole the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations agreed to allow me five minutes in reference to these amendments when they came up in the House for consideration. By the pending amendment it is proposed to pay a sitting member, Mr. Farwell, who was afterward turned out after having received some $5,000 of pay as a member, to which by the action of the House it was declared he was not entitled, the expenses of his contest. It is in direct violation of the law and of all the precedents. It is the same in the case of Frost, and the same in the case of Morey, and as I am not permitted to explain in reference to these amendments I shall content myself with asking they be rejected.

Mr. FORT. I wish to be heard on this amendment.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

Mr. STEVENSON. I shall ask for a separate vote on the item in the contested-election case of Spencer vs. Morey.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that in the Committee of the Whole each of these items was considered and voted upon as a separate amendment; and, therefore, it is in order to demand a separate vote in the case of Spencer vs. Morey.

Mr. FORT. I demand a separate vote in each case. If we are to have a separate vote in one case let us have a separate vote in all.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote being demanded in each case the Clerk will read them in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay J. V. LE MOYNE, contestant, expenses in contested-election case of Le Moyne vs. Farwell, third district of Illinois, $1,200.

The House divided; and there were ayes 96, noes not counted.

Mr. HOLMAN. We are too much pressed for time, and therefore I will not insist on any further division.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The Clerk read as follows:

J. G. ABBOTT, contestant, expenses in the contested-election case of Abbott vs. Frost, fourth district of Massachusetts, $2,000.

William B. Spencer, contestant, expenses in contested-election case of Spencer vs. Morey, fifth district of Louisiana, $734.05.

The amendments were separately concurred in without a division.

The Clerk read as follows:

James H. Platt, jr., contestant, expenses in contested-election case of Platt vs. Goode, second district of Virginia, $3,000.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 42.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The Clerk read as follows:

JOHN GOODE, jr., contestee, expenses in contested-election case of Platt vs. Goode, second district of Virginia, $500.

JOSEPH H. RAINEY, contestee, expenses in contested-election case of Lee vs. Rainey, first district of South Carolina, $1,200.

The amendments were concurred in separately without a division.

The Clerk read as follows:

Samuel Lee, contestant, expenses in contested-election case of Lee vs. Rainey, first district of South Carolina, $1,200.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 35.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHARLES W. BUTTZ, contestant, expenses in contested-election case of Buttz vs. Mackey, second district of South Carolina, $1,200.

Mr. SMALLS. I wish to move an amendment, and to be heard in its explanation.

The SPEAKER. Amendment is not in order and debate is not in order, as the previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendment was concurred in.

The Clerk read as follows:

JERE HARALSON, contestee, expenses in contested-election case of Bromberg vs. Haralson, first district of Alabama, $1,150.

S. S. FENN, contestant, expenses in contested-election case of Fenn vs. Bennett, Idaho Territory, $1,000.

H. B. STRAIT, contestee, expenses in contested-election case of Cox vs. Strait, second district of Minnesota, $1,500.

E. St. Julian Cox, contestant, expenses in the case of Cox vs. Strait, second district of Minnesota, $1,500.

The amendments were separately concurred in without a division.

The Clerk read as follows:

R. S. Frost, contestee, expenses in contested-election case of Abbott vs. Frost, fourth district of Massachusetts, $2,000.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That is one of the cases I spoke of, and on which I demanded a separate vote.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 87, noes 75.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand tellers.

Mr. CONGER. Is objection made in this case specially because this man happens to be a republican?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have voted against every one of those amendments, whether for a democrat or for a republican.

Mr. SAVAGE. A great many have already passed in favor of republicans.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 94, noes not counted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not insist on a further division.

So the amendment was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of the following bills without amendment:

An act (H. R. No. 197) granting a pension to Julia A. Schutt, widow of Martin Schutt, a deceased soldier;

An act (H. R. No. 3280) granting a pension to James Johnston;

An act (H. R. No. 2847) granting a pension to Lucinda Stearns; and

An act (H. R. No. 1347) granting a pension to Hattie D. McKain.

It further announced the passage of the following bills, with amendments in which concurrence was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 1238) granting a pension to Esther P. Fox;

An act (H. R. No. 3011) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Annis;

An act (H. R. No. 4198) to authorize the President to restore Thomas J. Spencer to his former rank in the Army; and

An act (H. R. No. 4476) to provide for the appointment of an official short-hand reporter for United States courts in and for the district of California.

It further announced the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

An act (S. No. 1260) granting a pension to Edmund H. Cobb;

An act (S. No. 1259) granting a pension to Daniel Houlihan;

An act (S. No. 1200) granting a pension to Margaret Hunter Hardie, widow of James A. Hardie, Inspector-General of the United States Army;

An act (S. No. 1183) granting a pension to Harriet Moss; and

An act (S. No. 1116) granting a pension to Sarah A. Chamberlain, guardian of minor heirs of James Eagle, Company F, Second Regiment Kansas State Militia.

It further announced the concurrence of the Senate in the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 1216) to provide for the preparation and publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The next item was read, as follows:

Frank Morey, contestee, expenses in contested-election case of Spencer vs. Morey, fifth district of Louisiana, $734.05.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 63.

Mr. STEVENSON. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. STEVENSON and Mr. HALE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 70.

So the item was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next item, as follows:

Charles B. Farwell, contestee, expenses in contested-election case of Le Moyne vs. Farwell, third district of Illinois, $3,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 93.

Mr. FORT. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FORT and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 96.

So the item was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next item, as follows:

Frederick G. Bromberg, contestant, expenses in contested-election case of Bromberg vs. Haralson, first district of Alabama, $1,500.

The item was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I call for a separate vote on the amendment to pay J. W. Jennings for services as assistant doorkeeper. I do so for the reason that the present assistant doorkeeper has received pay for the very same work. There is no necessity for paying for services which have already been paid for.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

To pay J. W. Jennings, late assistant doorkeeper, for services under the Doorkeeper, his salary from September 15th up to and including the 4th day of December, 1876, $438.32.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 98, noes 32.

Mr. WHITE. There is no necessity for paying for services which have already been paid for. A quorum has not voted, and I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WHITE and Mr. THROCKMORTON were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 137, noes 39.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the votes already taken, I will not ask for any further separate votes. The House seems disposed to stand by the action of the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. There are other amendments on which separate votes are asked.

The Clerk read the following amendment, on which a separate vote was asked:

Under the clause relative to the survey of the public lands add the following to the second paragraph:

But this proviso shall not be so constructed as to retain such an interest in said lands as shall prevent the States from selling the same for taxes; and if sold by the States for taxes, then the cost of surveying and selecting said lands shall be paid to the United States by the States, and upon such payments the title of said lands shall be perfect and complete in the States so paying said costs, it being the intention of this proviso that all taxes assessed after the passage of this act upon lands granted to any railroad company by the United States shall be valid as against any claim or title remaining in the United States in or to such lands on account of the non-payment of such costs and fees.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be adopted.

The question being taken, the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the rest of the amendments will be considered as agreed to, unless some gentleman calls for a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment on which a separate vote is asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following paragraph:

That the sum of $375,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated to pay the amount due to mail contractors for mail service performed in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Tennessee, and Virginia, in the years 1859, 1860, 1861, and before said States respectively engaged in war against the United States; and the provisions of section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable to the payments herein authorized: Provided, That any such claims which have been paid by the Confederate States government shall not be again paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 151, noes 30.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the negative vote is not enough to order the yeas and nays, I will not ask for them.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The remaining amendments, on which no separate vote was asked, were concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 4261) be taken from the Speaker's table, and that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER. It being now five minutes to twelve o'clock, the House, pursuant to order, takes a recess until twelve o'clock m.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BLISS: The petition of Mary King, widow of Joseph King, late of Company B, Seventh New York Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COX: The petition of Charles W. Hinson, and other citizens of Buffalo, New York, against acquiescing in the decision of the electoral commission by preventing a further count of the electoral votes, to the committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House in counting the electoral vote.

By Mr. HOPKINS: The petition of citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the bank-tax laws, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. HUBBELL: The petition of Captain William Barnland, Captain Thomas Williams, and 75 other citizens of Marquette County, Michigan, for a survey for a harbor of refuge at Portage Lake on Lake Michigan, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HUMPHREYS: The petition of citizens of Greene County, Indiana, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. KELLEY: Resolution of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, expressing its sense of the importance of the proposed scientific exploration of the border States of Mexico and the United States, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. PRATT: Two petitions, one from E. W. Jeffries and others, the other from Robert Patton and others, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ROSS: The petition of citizens of Centre County, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, Resolutions of the common council of Philadelphia, asking that the original chart of the Declaration of Independence be allowed to remain permanently in Independence Hall, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. STRAIT: The petition of Thomas Humphreys and others, for the equalization of pensions to disabled soldiers, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, Concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Minnesota, asking for a preliminary survey of the Saint Croix and Saint Louis Rivers to prove the feasibility of the connecting of these rivers by canal, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WOODBURN: The petition of Edward Todd and 49 others, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WOODWORTH: The petition of citizens of Mahoning Valley, Ohio, for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Ashtabula, Ohio, to the Committee on Commerce.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 28, 1877—10 a. m.

The recess having expired, the Senate resumed its session.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a communication from the president of the commission, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, A. D. 1877.

SIR: I am directed by the electoral commission to inform the Senate that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it under the act of Congress concerning the same, touching the electoral votes from the State of South Carolina, and herewith, by direction of said commission, I transmit to you the said decision, in writing, signed by the members agreeing therein, to be read at the meeting of the two Houses, according to said act. All the certificates and papers sent to the commission by the President of the Senate are herewith returned.

NATHAN CLIFFORD,
President of the Commission.

Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY,
President of the Senate.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move that the House of Representatives be notified that the Senate is ready to meet them and proceed with the count.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Be notified of this fact: that it has been communicated to us and that the Senate is now ready to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will take the usual form; it has been already prepared. The Secretary will read the order.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to inform the House of Representatives that the president of the electoral commission has notified the Senate that the commission has arrived at a decision of the questions submitted to it in relation to the electoral votes of South Carolina, and that the Senate is now ready to meet the House for the purpose of laying before the two Houses the report of the said decision, and to proceed with the count of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will execute the resolution of the Senate.

At eleven o'clock and five minutes a. m., Mr. G. M. ADAMS, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed to inform the Senate that the House will be in session and ready to receive the Senate at ten minutes past twelve o'clock for the purpose of proceeding with the count of the electoral votes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (at twelve o'clock and nine minutes p. m.) The House having signified its readiness to receive the Senate at ten minutes past twelve, as it is now nearly that time, the Senate will repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives, and returned to its Chamber at twelve o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.; when the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having returned from the joint meeting with the House of Representatives, upon objections to the decision of the electoral commission having been submitted, the Chair will now lay before the Senate, to be read by the Secretary, those objections.

The Secretary read as follows:

The undersigned, Senators and Representatives, do hereby object to counting the votes cast by C. C. Bowen, J. Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnston, Timothy Hurley, W. B. Nash, Wilson Cook, and W. F. Myers, alleged electors of the State of South Carolina, in conformity to the decision of the electoral commission, and as reasons therefor assigned the following:

I.

Because no legal election was held in the State of South Carolina on the 7th day of November last past for presidential electors in compliance with section 3, article 8 of the constitution thereof requiring a registration of the electors of the State as a qualification to vote.

II.

Because in consequence of frauds practiced in said election, and the interference with and intimidation of the electors in said State by the Federal Government prior to and during said election, stationing in various parts of said State near the polling-places detachments of the Army of the United States, a full and free exercise of the right of suffrage was prevented, in consequence of which there was no lawful election had.

III.

Because in violation of the Constitution of the United States the Federal authorities, at the several polling-places in said State on the day of election, stationed over one thousand deputy marshals of the United States, who by their unlawful and arbitrary action in obedience to the unauthorized instructions from the Department of Justice, so interfered with the full and free exercise of the right of suffrage by the voters of said State that a fair election could not be and was not held in said State on the 7th day of November, 1876.

IV.

Because the certification of the election held by said electors on the 6th day of December, 1876, was not made by the lawfully constituted governor of said State.

V.

Because the said electoral commission, contrary to its duty and the authority vested in it by law, neglected and refused to inquire into the facts and allegations aforesaid, and that said decision is contrary to the law and the truth.

VI.

Because at the time of the pretended appointment of the said electors in the State of South Carolina, it was under duress from the power of the United States unlawfully exerted upon it, and said pretended appointments were made under such duress.

VII.

Because the certificate numbered 1 was and is void.

First. For irregularity in that the electors were not sworn, as by the constitution of the State of South Carolina they were required to be.

Second. The certificate does not state that said electors voted by ballot, as required by the Constitution of the United States.

Third. The certificate upon the envelope in which the said certificate and accompanying papers were inclosed was not the certificate required by the laws of the United States.

The undersigned, Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, object to the counting of the electoral vote purporting to come from South Carolina, in conformity with the decision of the majority of the electoral commission, for the reason that the said electoral votes, as well as the votes of the people of said State at the presidential election on the 7th day of November last, were given under duress caused by the unlawful exercise of Federal power.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of South Carolina stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. BAYARD and Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. MERRIMON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is competent to receive testimony to sustain the several exceptions above specified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that resolution is not in order. We must vote directly one way or the other, to affirm or reverse the decision of the commission.

Mr. MERRIMON. I submit that it is in order, before we take a vote upon the resolution offered by the Senator from South Carolina, to determine whether or not the Senate will receive testimony to sustain the exceptions. I insist that it is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate.

Mr. MERRIMON. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have read that clause of the law relating to objections made to the decision of the commission.

Mr. MERRIMON. My idea, Mr. President, is this——

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us have the law read in regard to objections to the decision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the last part of section 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereupon the two Houses shall again meet, and such decision shall be read and entered in the Journal of each House, and the counting of the votes shall proceed in conformity therewith, unless, upon objection made thereto in writing by at least five Senators and five members of the House of Representatives, the two Houses shall separately concur in ordering otherwise, in which case such concurrent order shall govern.

Mr. MERRIMON. It seems to me very plain that, although the electoral commission would not receive testimony to show that the election in South Carolina was rendered void by the illegal use of the Army, nevertheless it is competent for the House of Representatives and the Senate to receive testimony to sustain exceptions to the ruling of the commission, as they would not receive testimony.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose the time is running, and so debate may be in order upon the question as submitted. I wish to submit to my friend from North Carolina, who, I have no doubt, offers his resolution in entire good faith, that the statute says in explicit terms that the decision of the commission shall govern unless—

The two Houses shall separately concur in ordering otherwise, in which case such concurrent order shall govern.

The decision is that a particular set of votes ought to be counted. They must be counted unless the Houses order otherwise; that is, unless they order that they shall not, or that some other shall be counted. That is the plain language and intent of the law. If the Houses are of opinion that the commission has proceeded upon wrong principles, then they must reject the report of the commission; and it has proceeded upon wrong principles if it was wrong to decline to receive the testimony offered, and, therefore, it must be reversed. The adoption of this abstract principle, that it is lawful to receive testimony, does not appear to me to be open to discussion; it is not in order upon the reversing or affirming of the judgment of the commission.

Mr. MERRIMON. I still insist that my view of the matter is right. It is impossible under the act that the action of the electoral commission can be referred to it again or that that commission can take further action. If any action is to be had to reverse their decision or to ignore it or to reject it on the part of the Senate or the House of Representatives, that must be done by that branch of Congress so rejecting it. How is the question raised as to whether their decision is right or wrong? How is either branch of Congress to pass upon the propriety or impropriety of that decision? By means of exceptions. Then how are the exceptions to be treated? Is the Senate to vote blindly, is the House to vote blindly, am I to vote blindly? I want to know whether these exceptions are founded in fact, and if they are founded in fact then I am prepared to sustain the exceptions; otherwise I shall vote against them. It is important that the Senate shall be informed upon these questions of fact, and it is therefore absolutely essential that the testimony shall be received. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I second the demand for the yeas and nays on the question of order.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the decision of the Chair upon the point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair submits it to the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I submit upon the return of the decision of the electoral commission to either House of Congress the order to be taken is a concurrence or a non-concurrence with the decision, and upon that question two hours are given for debate, ten minutes being allotted to each speaker, who shall not speak more than once; and at the end of two hours the main question shall be put. I have urged in the debate before the commission that all evidence which was before the Senate or the House was necessarily open to the consideration of the commission and entitled to due weight in the mind of each Senator or each Representative, and that they could not, by being transferred to another chamber or by being placed upon the electoral commission, divest themselves of their duties and their powers as Senators or Representatives to open their minds to all the testimony which had been taken in the regular and usual manner by either branch of Congress. But the commission has, as the Senate knows, decided by a majority of one vote otherwise.

Therefore, in the present case I cannot vote to sustain the order asked for by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, because I believe that all that he wishes to bring before the Senate is already before it. In my judgment, it was all before the electoral commission, and accompanied the written objections and certificates which were placed before them. Everything in the shape of petition, deposition, or any paper known to parliamentary law connected with this case, and with all other cases of electoral vote, is now before the Senate, and cannot be justly excluded from the consideration of the Senate, or, in my judgment, from the consciences and minds of the members of the Senate or of the House, whether they sat upon the electoral commission or not.

The measure of duty in this regard is the same in the Senate, in the House, and in the electoral commission. A man did not lose his identity as a Senator or as a Representative nor diminish his official duties by taking his seat upon the electoral commission. But I do not hold that it is necessary that the proposed order should now be made in the Senate, because it is plainly impracticable to read all the testimony which is contained in the several volumes already in our possession in relation to the South Carolina election. The evidence known to parliamentary law in the shape of numerous depositions and reports (thanks to the action of the Senate, taken by committees raised by the order of the majority, and thanks to the action of the committees of the House raised by the action of that body) has been, and at this moment is, before the Senate if they choose to consider it and avail themselves of that means of knowledge.

Therefore, the honorable Senator from North Carolina has before him, as we all have, all the information relating to the election in South Carolina that was gathered by him either from his personal knowledge as a visitor in that State on one of the committees of the Senate or from any other source developed by parliamentary action of either House of Congress in regard to South Carolina.

I do not believe, however, sir, that this motion is in order according to the provisions of the law under which we are acting. I believe the only motion in order upon the separation of the Houses after the electoral commission has sent in their decision, is whether the decision of the commission shall stand, and the concurrent vote of the two Houses is necessary to overthrow it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, shall the resolution submitted by the Senator from North Carolina be admitted? on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question is whether it is in order.

Mr. McCREERY. I wish to make remarks on the main question; and I rise to ascertain whether this discussion on the point of order is to be deducted from the two hours allowed for discussion on the main question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly it is. The resolution has been submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate has not commenced on the main question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I insist that there shall be no debate until the main question is put; it makes no difference how this question is decided. I ask that the main question be stated and put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will now submit the question.

Mr. MERRIMON. I want to make one other remark.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? It is by common consent that Senators are making explanations in regard to this order.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I only wish to say that for one I do not concur in the opinion stated by the Chair that the debate has not already commenced. When the resolution was read from the desk I think the two hours allowed for debate commenced; otherwise the law is of no value in the way of controlling the time that may be consumed. I think when the resolution was read from the Chair the two hours commenced.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to make one remark——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I prefer that the main question be stated, which it is the right of every member to demand at any stage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was stated, and the resolution was read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Still the Chair is of opinion that debate has not commenced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair reminds Senators that on a previous occasion there was some considerable time taken up in arranging the form of proceeding before the final debate commenced. The Chair has followed the same practice on the present occasion, holding that this is a matter of form; and the debate on the main question, as the Chair supposes, has not yet commenced.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I call for the reading of the pending resolution offered by the Senator from South Carolina, which is the main question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The pending question is the question of order.

Mr. MERRIMON. I wish to make an additional remark——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not concur in the view just expressed by the Senator from Delaware. The objection to the resolution goes on the notion that Congress is now sitting in its legislative capacity, and that we take notice of the evidence that comes to Congress from the several committees. According to my judgment Congress is not now sitting in its legislative capacity. It is exercising a special jurisdiction that devolves upon it by necessary implication of the Constitution. We are sitting here to exercise ministerial and judicial powers, to count the electoral vote for President and Vice-President, and whatever we consider in this capacity, or whatever the electoral commission, acting under the act creating that commission, shall take into consideration comes to it by special provision and direction; and therefore it is, if we consider the testimony taken by the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate in South Carolina, there must be some special order directing that the Senate shall so consider it. If we consider the testimony taken by the House committee touching the election in South Carolina, it must come before us by some special order for that purpose; and it is in that view that I think the resolution that I have offered is proper. If the exceptions to the ruling of the commission are to be sustained, I maintain that we must have the evidence before us; and we must not only have it before us in a general sense, but we must have it before us in an official sense; we must have it before us under the special jurisdiction that we are exercising to count the electoral vote for President and Vice-President. Therefore I say the resolution is proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, is the resolution submitted by the Senator from North Carolina in order?

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, it seems to me——

Mr. HAMLIN. I object to further debate.

Mr. LOGAN. So do I. I object to further debate on the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators object to further debate on the question of order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is not the point of order debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable on objection. This has been indulged by common consent.

Mr. BOGY. I do not rise to——

Mr. LOGAN. I object.

Mr. BOGY. I do not rise to a point of order, and I do not understand the President as putting it as a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not admissible except by common consent; two objections have been offered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask another question, whether the rules that govern this body in the discharge of its ordinary duties are applicable to this session of the Senate, it being here for one special purpose under the act creating the commission? Are the general rules of the Senate applicable now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not where they conflict with the statute under which we are acting. The question is, is the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina in order? upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BOGY. It is not the point of order that we are called upon to vote on this resolution. I do not wish to debate the question, although it seems to me we have a right to do so, because it seems to me we have not arrived at the two hours yet. It is like any other question before the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I object to any debate whatever on this resolution. I should have objected when the Senator from North Carolina rose the second time.

Mr. BOGY. Upon what ground can objection be made? It is like any other resolution before the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I object to it on the ground that this is a question of order now submitted to the Senate, and under the rules of the Senate it is not debatable. That is the ground on which I put it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair rules in this case that there are two hours allowed for debate. The Chair has decided that debate on the main question has not commenced, and therefore he cannot allow any debate to take place upon any other question unless by common consent. The Chair submitted that in the other case, and no objection was made. Since the Senator from Missouri has risen two objections have been offered; therefore there can be no debate.

Mr. BOGY. We have not got to the main question yet, and all these questions certainly are debatable.

Mr. BLAINE. Do I understand the President to say that unanimous consent can waive the obligations of statute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that by common consent such has been the practice in the other cases, and the Chair is acting under the same practice.

Mr. BLAINE. It can a rule undoubtedly that the Senate itself makes; but this is a statute passed by both branches and signed by the President. Is there a dispensing power by unanimous consent of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such has been the practice, and the Chair is ruling in the same way.

Mr. BLAINE. I think that practice should be

More honored in the breach than the observance.

Mr. BOGY. I cannot see why——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and therefore debate on this resolution is not in order. The question is, is the resolution offered by the Senator from North Carolina in order? upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Wallace, and Withers—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—43.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bruce, Cockrell, Conkling, Dennis, Gordon, Hamilton, McDonald, Randolph, Stevenson, Thurman, and Whyte—14.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate decides the resolution to be out of order.

Mr. BOGY. I now move that the testimony taken in this case, which is in possession of the Senate, be read. I am not prepared to vote upon the decision of the commission until I hear the testimony so that I may see whether the decision is right or wrong before being called upon to give a vote. I wish to base my vote upon the testimony. I move that the testimony be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the testimony be read.

Mr. BOGY. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, certain testimony has been taken in this case by a subcommittee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order unless by common consent.

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I simply desire to say that there is no testimony yet in the possession of the Senate, for the reason that the committee has not made its report to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair rules that there is no debate allowable in making up the form of the main question.

Mr. BOGY. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion.

Mr. LOGAN. I rise to ask a question. Is not this motion the same motion that we have just voted down?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not see any difference. One was a resolution that the Senate receive testimony; and the other is a motion that the testimony be read. What is the difference? I cannot see any.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is different in form.

Mr. BOGY. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCREERY, (when Mr. STEVENSON'S name was called.) I rise to state that my colleague is confined to his room by indisposition.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 21, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bogy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—41.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Cockrell, Conkling, Eaton, Hamilton, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McDonald, Stevenson, and Thurman—13.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will now be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission on the electoral vote of the State of South Carolina stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the main question. Debate now commences. If there be no debate, the question is on agreeing to the resolution, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, the average American politician, under ordinary circumstances, can scarcely resist the tempation of a favorable opportunity to make a ten minute speech, and the impetuosity of its delivery reaches its greatest elevation when it is perfectly manifest that his effort will be fruitless of any result.

The learned gentlemen who framed the electoral bill were impressed with the necessity of imposing restraint upon excess, and this innocent indulgence has been limited by operation of law to two hours' duration in the aggregate, to be divided out among the twelve Senators whose enterprise or good fortune shall enable them to obtain the floor. And in this brief allotment we are required to express all the disgust and all the indignation we feel in contemplating the deep injustice which has marked the proceedings of the electoral tribunal. Vituperation and invective, however scathing and incisive in their character, fail to rise to the height of the great wrong, and it is a question at last whether or not a solemn silence would not have been the most appropriate greeting to the partisan judgments of the court, or rather of the electoral tribunal.

But, speculate as we may, the argument is closed, the question is settled, and perhaps it may have been settled before the argument was opened. At the outset our pathway was lighted up by hope, and faith, and trust in the justice of our cause and in the incorruptible integrity of our judges; but the dark shadows of disaster and defeat now rest upon it. Seven was considered a most fortunate number among many of the nations of antiquity; but they had never witnessed the operations of a returning board of eight radicals, with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] at its head. [Laughter.] If they had ever seen that, that favorite numeral would have lost its charm. [Laughter.]

The last presidential election was probably as free from fraud, violence, intimidation, or corruption as any other which has been held in twenty years. It is positively certain that a large majority of the American people voted for Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, for President, and for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice-President, and it is morally certain that if the electors chosen by the people had been protected in their rights or had been allowed to exercise their rights they would have been triumphantly elected. The people believed that, having carried the requisite number of votes, they were elected, and that no man would have the hardihood to oppose or to thwart the expression of the will of the sovereign people. But while they were engaged in exchanging congratulations upon the restoration of republican liberty and in returning thanks to God for their great deliverance, a dispatch was published from a Cabinet officer saying that Hayes had been elected. Shortly afterward, strange rumors were in circulation that President Grant had avowed his determination to see that Hayes was inaugurated; and in fearful corroboration of this statement, troops began to assemble around the capital, and military array and martial music greeted the eyes and the ears of the office-holders of Washington. How many of that brotherhood would see the country drenched in blood before they would jeopardize their places, it is impossible to determine.

A crisis had arrived in our affairs which called for the calm deliberation of our wisest, and clearest, and coolest heads to devise some measure, just and equitable in its provisions, to avert the threatening dangers that surrounded us. A special committee was appointed by the Senate, and after weeks of patient and constant labor the electoral bill was reported. I voted for that bill, and I do not intend here or elsewhere to attempt to evade or to escape from the responsibility of that vote. I shall be condemned by that large and respectable class of gentlemen who knew precisely what would take place before it happened; but in my humiliation I shall have the sympathy of all poor mortals, who, like myself, could not "see into the middle of next week," if their lives depended upon it. Those who could clearly foresee the end must have had a desperate struggle with their feelings; or compassion, or kindness, or love of country, or some other consideration would have prompted them to interpose some surer and safer plan of averting the peril. The able, the upright, and the patriotic gentlemen who represented us on that committee hold high rank in the legal profession and enjoy the confidence of the country as politicians; but they were neither prophets nor the sons of prophets. It was their misfortune and not their fault that they had never been endowed with "that mystical lore" which enables men to forecast the events of the future.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WHYTE. I claim the floor and ask the privilege of yielding my time to the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this?

Mr. HOWE. What?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yielding the time of one Senator to another.

Mr. WHYTE. I give him my ten minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McCREERY. If I understand the purpose of the creation of the electoral bill, it was to investigate the issues where two or more returns were made from the same State. Those issues were substantially fraud or no fraud in Louisiana, fraud or no fraud in Florida, and fraud or no fraud in South Carolina. But the republican members of the tribunal were suddenly seized with such marvelous love of State rights that no fraud, however palpable, no outrage, however gross, could induce them to disturb the solemn sanctity of the great seal of a State. Had they forgotten that they themselves had gone behind, or before, or walked straight over the great seal on other occasions, whenever the exigencies of party demanded it? I am for State rights, but I would not take the votes cast for one candidate and transfer them fraudulently to another candidate, deceitfully pretending that in so doing I was protecting the rights of the States, nor would I sanction such a transaction on the part of a returning board or any other agency. General Grant has said and done little in the last eight years that meets my approbation; but in the sentiment that no man worthy of the position can afford to take it with a taint of fraud, I heartily concur. Fraud vitiates everything. A judgment rendered by the highest tribunal in this land would be set aside if it were clearly established by competent proof that it had been obtained by fraud.

But the issues involved in this controversy are as well understood by the people at large as by ourselves. To their calm and deliberate judgment we make our appeal.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President, the electoral commission has completed its labors, has performed its perfect work; and under its rulings, made by a strict party vote, the States of Florida, Louisiana, Oregon, and South Carolina are all to be counted for Hayes, and the votes of those States are to be taken as the "votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States." The result of these rulings will be to place a man at the head of the executive branch of the Government over the protest of more than 260,000 of a majority of the people of the United States. When the election closed on the 7th of November Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks had received 267,000 majority of the votes actually cast by the people, and on the meeting of the electoral colleges in the several States on the 6th of December, 184 unquestioned electoral votes were cast for them, lacking but 1 of a majority of all the electors that could be appointed under the Constitution of the United States. There were four States in which controversies existed as to their electoral votes, making an aggregate of 20 votes. These controversies were in good faith submitted to this electoral commission with authority to find the true votes, "the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States."

In Florida the canvassing officers having power only to canvass and compile the votes returned to them by the primary officers of election, disregarded the plain provisions of the law, and by a fraudulent and illegal rejection of a part of the returns gave certificates of election to the Hayes electors, who had not been appointed by the people, and refused certificates to those whom the people had chosen. The supreme court of the State had pronounced the acts of the officers illegal and by mandate had compelled them to make a recanvass, by which the true result was declared as respects these State officers. A court of competent jurisdiction had by mandate forbidden the count of the electoral vote made in pursuance of the fraudulent canvass. But by a strange perversity of judicial vision, this electoral commission by a party vote held that it could not look into these plain and palpable facts.

In Louisiana, of the votes actually cast, the democratic electors had received majorities over the republican candidates ranging from 5,300 to 8,990; the majority of the highest democratic elector over the lowest republican candidate was 8,990.

An illegal board of returning officers, in disregard of the law under which they pretended to act, and by the commission of the most stupendous frauds, reversed the popular will and certified to the election of the minority candidates.

Proof of these facts was tendered to the electoral commission and by them rejected, and for the first time in the history of any civilized people a tribunal clothed with power to investigate the facts upon which rested the validity of an act to which their sanction was to be given refused to consider as an element affecting its validity a direct charge of fraud; and that a person fraudulently certified as elected is to be deemed the duly appointed elector, and the vote of such person is to be taken as the vote provided for in the Constitution.

Oregon had voted for one whom the Constitution of the United States says shall not be appointed an elector. The governor of the State had refused to give a certificate of election to this disqualified person, but under the law of the State, as he understood it, he certified to the candidate next highest on the list. The loss of this one vote would be fatal to the success of the party to which a majority of the commission belonged, and therefore they made haste to overrule the authorities of the State of Oregon in the construction they had given to the laws of their State, and counted the whole for Hayes.

South Carolina had been throttled during the canvass for the appointment of her electors by the military power of the Federal Government, and her electoral vote controlled at the point of the bayonet; but in the interest of State rights this vote also must be counted for Hayes and Wheeler, and thus we reach the end.

A minority President placed in power by fraud and force, nothing is now left for us but to take an appeal to the people. If it shall be found that in the forum of the people fraud does not vitiate then indeed are the days of our Republic numbered.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I do not rise to vindicate the decisions made by the electoral commission. So far as that commission has decided any question of law, I believe it will be fully vindicated by the legal mind of the United States, and I believe it has affirmed no proposition that six months ago was not accepted as the law by men of all parties; but we hear this continual talk about fraud, fraud, and an attempt is being made to strike out the electoral vote of South Carolina, and because that is not permitted the electoral commission and the republican party are charged with fraud! If that vote was stricken out, fraud would be committed. By the committee which was sent down there by the House of Representatives, it was reported, as I am informed, that the Hayes electors had a majority of some 800. The committee sent down by the Senate reported it at a larger figure; and with a fair election in South Carolina the republican majority would be from 25,000 to 30,000. And yet with a conceded republican majority by the report of a democratic committee, we are charged with fraud because the vote of South Carolina is not stricken out.

And now, in regard to Louisiana. I believe Louisiana is a republican State; that with a free and fair election there would be a republican majority of from fifteen to twenty thousand. The returning board there threw out votes from several parishes, and upon what ground? Upon the ground that the majorities had been obtained by violence, by murders, and crimes of every hue; that there had been no free and fair election; and if there had been, that the result would have been entirely different.

Sir, in a State like Louisiana, where the elections were carried by violence, there is no relief, and can be none, except through a tribunal that is authorized to hear the evidence of violence and decide upon it, and throw out majorities obtained by violence. Take a parish where there are known to be thousands of republicans, and yet by violence but a half a dozen republican votes are polled. We know that that result is fraud, and it is bloody fraud; it is worse fraud than merely stuffing a ballot-box; it is worse fraud than simply making a false count; it is a fraud stained with blood, the deepest and most damning kind of fraud.

Mr. President, take the State of Mississippi, giving a democratic majority of sixty thousand, or thereabouts. Does not every well informed man know that Mississippi is a republican State? Does not every well informed man know that that result was obtained by violence, by intimidation, by murder, whipping, torture, exile, and every species of violence and wrong; but because a majority of sixty thousand has thus been piled up we are told that the popular majority is largely in favor of Mr. Tilden. Sir, there never was a greater wrong perpetrated in the form of an election than that in Mississippi.

But, Mr. President, how stands this question of popular majorities? In what may be called the northern States, leaving out the fifteen States which we commonly call southern States, Mr. Hayes has a popular majority, if I remember correctly, of about 225,000; but when you go South, into Georgia, Mississippi, Arkansas, and other States, they pile up large majorities on the other other side: a majority of 80,000 in Georgia. Mr. President, there is no democratic majority like that in Georgia. I do not believe there is 5,000 democratic majority in Georgia. But, as an evidence of the way in which a majority of 80,000 is obtained, I may refer to the fact that in eight counties, in that State, in which there are known to be thousands of republican voters, Hayes did not receive one vote, or a mere handful of three or four votes. That is the way these large majorities are obtained, by intimidation and by driving thousands and tens of thousands of people from the polls. No, Mr. President, upon a fair and free election in those southern States, and comparing their votes with the northern States, Hayes would have a large majority of the popular votes of the United States.

I did not rise to argue the objections that have been made, but to refer to this talk about fraud, fraud. This attempt to strike out the electoral votes of a State in which both committees have reported that the Hayes electors had a majority seems to me the very acme of audacity. There is no pretense that Tilden carried South Carolina. Notwithstanding the Hamburgh massacre, notwithstanding the Ellenton massacre, notwithstanding the dropping murders all over the State; in defiance of and over all this, Hayes had a clear majority on the face of the returns, and yet we are charged with fraud.

No, Mr. President, on a fair and free election in South Carolina, Hayes would have carried the State by a large majority and would have carried Mississippi by a large majority, Florida by a fair majority for so small a State, Louisiana by a large majority, and Alabama by a handsome majority. No, Mr. President, what is called fraud means simply this: that votes and majorities obtained by murder, violence, intimidation in every form, are stricken out. To strike out the fruits of murder and violence is called fraud.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, when I came into the Chamber this morning, I did not intend to have anything to say upon this subject; but we are approaching the consummation of the greatest wrong which, in my judgment, has been perpetrated during the age. We are approaching the time when you, sir, will be called upon to declare, contrary to the facts of the case, that Rutherford B. Hayes has been duly elected the President of these United States. I cannot let this occasion pass without at least expressing my condemnation, unhesitatingly and unqualifiedly, of the action of the electoral commission, not only in reference to South Carolina, but in reference to every State which has been passed in review before that commission.

It is well known to the people of this country that soon after the election, on the 7th day of November, a conspiracy, deep and foul—ay, a conspiracy which sought to overthrow the will of the American people and subvert, for the time, the free elective system of the Government in which we live—was entered into by men high in official position and high in the estimation of the republican party. Sir, we are approaching the consummation of that conspiracy by and through the judgment of this electoral commission. I do not design, nor will I speak disrespectfully of the personnel of that commission. I know who they are; they are men high in official position; but with their judgment I have a right to deal. I will not smooth my words nor silence my tongue in uttering condemnation of their act in refusing to investigate the frauds that have been practiced, whereby the conspiracy referred to is to be consummated and the will of the American people overthrown.

How was it in South Carolina? The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] speaks of the majority which was given in South Carolina. How was it accomplished? The Army of the United States was sent there for the purpose of coercing and controlling the vote of that State. I will take that back; I will not say for the purpose of doing that, but I will say with that effect, and millions of the treasure of the country were spent in supporting the Army in the Southern States with the view of aiding the republican party. Yet the people of the country in their majesty rose and rebuked by their votes at the ballot-box that attempt to influence by military invasion of the States their free right to vote for whom they pleased. Had it not been for the military interference there the State of South Carolina, in the judgment of the people of this country, would have given a very large and decided majority for the Tilden electors.

How was it in Louisiana? The Senator from Indiana talks about the murders, the bloodshed, the intimidation in Louisiana. As I have said before, after having made a visit to that State, in my opinion the democratic party in no State in this Union sought in its organized capacity more earnestly to have a peaceable, and fair, and quiet election than in Louisiana. The murders and the violence to which the Senator refers are not the effect of the action of the democratic party, but the natural and necessary consequence of that inefficient government by which the people have been oppressed through the agency of the republican party. If the laws are not enforced there it is attributable not to the action of the democratic party, but it is attributable to the republican party, which has kept that people from the exercise of their free right of government. That has been the cause of the trouble there.

Now, let me say to the Senator from Indiana that I believe today that most of this proof of violence, this proof of intimidation by the democratic party, is flagrant perjury. The book that was brought into the Senate, sent here by the President of the United States, containing the affidavits gathered up by the committee that was sent down by the President, is a book of perjuries, bought and paid for, let me say, out of the Treasury of the United States; for when the facts appear I believe it will be found that the men who came to make those affidavits were summoned by the marshal of the United States, and paid out of the public Treasury from the funds that were in its hands.

I say there is no people on the face of this earth who have been more outraged than the people of Louisiana. For eight years they have been denied free government. They have been told for the last four years to wait patiently, that the people would rectify their wrong at the next election; and now, when they come up, and by a majority of from eight to ten thousand express their condemnation of the republican party, a returning board, the offspring and instrument of fraud, acting no doubt upon advice from higher quarters, throws out the electoral vote of that State, and this commission refuses to investigate the wrong. I speak not of the personnel of that commission, but I speak of its judgments as among those that will go down to posterity branded, I had like to have said, with infamy.

Mr. President, we know the result. Mr. Hayes is to be inaugurated. I have never in my life uttered a word disparaging to the character of Governor Hayes. I will not become a slanderer of private character. I will say nothing of him now; but I say that when he enters the White House he will go there without title; he will take possession of an office that by virtue of the votes of the people belongs to Samuel J. Tilden; and during the four years that he will preside at the White House, he will feel that he is occupying the place that belongs to another. Samuel J. Tilden—a gentleman with whom I have no personal acquaintance—with the consciousness that he has been chosen by his countrymen, will feel far more content than any man who may occupy an office to which he has not been elevated by the wish of the people. Nay, sir, he will feel that he has had all the honor which the votes of his countrymen could confer. Though he may be denied the emoluments of the office, he can live honored and respected in that retirement to which the judgment of this commission assigned him, not the voice of the people of the country. For the democratic party, let me say, Mr. President, that it can still survive the wrong and live to vindicate its principles and its rights. It is true that it will be displaced for four years from power, but its members will have the consciousness that they have elected the President of the United States and have been robbed of him by force and by fraud. The American people will vindicate their wrongs, and four years to come will bid farewell to the power of the party that now holds it, and which will hold it four years more, not by virtue of right, but by virtue of the grossest and most outrageous frauds, into which the majority of the commission would not, dared not look.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, whom the gods would destroy they first make mad, and it does seem to me that the madness on the part of the democracy is evidence of their approaching destruction as a party. It is a very uncommon thing to see the parent assault the child. Here is a commission organized under the forms of law, made up of high-minded and honorable gentlemen, and we may say that it is the child of the democratic party; at least the democracy in the Congress of the United States voted for and advocated the creation of this commission. It was announced in all the democratic papers throughout the country as the consummation of the greatest statesmanship of the age; a peaceful solution of a great difficulty growing up in the land, and now, because the commission have not decided these questions just in accordance with the theories and ideas of the democracy of this country, their decisions are denounced as decisions of a fraudulent kind; decisions based not upon law and fact, but decisions growing out of partisan spirit.

I have not indulged in the discussion in reference to the question of fraud, since the commission has had these questions before it, but I hear day after day in both branches of Congress a denunciation of a majority of this commission because they have decided in a certain way; and therefore they are arraigned for giving political decisions. Sir, they have decided these questions in accordance with the precedents of almost a century. They have decided these questions in accordance with the decisions heretofore of the highest tribunals of this land where political questions have been decided. If there has been partisanship shown in this tribunal, I ask the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] and the Senator from the great State of Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] why it is the seven have not exhibited as much party spirit as the eight? Is it because their number is a little short that they exhibit no party spirit? Is that the logic? I believe these men have decided as they honestly believed the law required them to decide, as they honestly believed the precedents required them to decide, and the interest of the country in future, as these questions were presented to them in legal form.

But frauds have been committed they say. Doubtless there have been frauds committed. I do not believe there has been a general election in this country for fifty years in which there has not been fraud committed. But the frauds seem to be all on one side, according to the declarations of the democracy in this Chamber. Now, sir, there has never been in the annals of the history of this country so open, palpable, unblushing, and damnable a fraud attempted as was attempted in the State of Oregon by men who ought to blush at the mention of it. You talk about frauds in this Chamber and I find the name of a Senator appended to nearly every objection that is made. I would desire, if I could, to pass by mentioning this fact, but when you bring us up to the point where we must meet you, I then decline further to be prevented from calling forth the iniquities upon your part, although it is in the person of a Senator whose connection with it was very close indeed. You talk about frauds when telegrams were sent approved by a Senator of the United States for the purchase of an electoral vote to elect Samuel J. Tilden President of the United States. Who ever attempted such a thing before? When did the republican party, or any party in this country, ever attempt to purchase electoral votes to elect a President of the United States until the democratic party did it in this contest? And yet you talk about frauds. Why, sir, the attempt of the democracy in the State of Oregon would be almost enough to make an escaped convict from the penitentiary blush. Telegrams were sent from New York, telegrams were sent from Oregon to No. 15 Gramercy Park, stating that parties could be had for so much, that so much money must be put to the credit of so and so at such a time, and that this must be done in order to procure the vote, and it was done, and the proofs show it. A telegram in cipher sent by a man by the name of Patrick, demanding $8,000 to purchase a republican elector, was approved by a Senator of the United States, and yet you talk about fraud. It is about time that these denunciations on the part of the democrats should cease or else republicans will maintain their manhood.

I say this and I say it because provocation has been given so as to force it to be said, and I do not wish to cast any reflection upon Senators or upon any persons. I would rather not have said what I have said and what I am going to say now, if it had not been necessary on account of the provocation given here every day. Senators on this side of the Chamber, republicans in principle, have been censured in this Chamber, for less offenses than Senators have been excused for on the democratic side in this fraudulent transaction in Oregon. Who in this Chamber can deny that fact? We are ready on this side of the Chamber to excuse; we have been willing to do so; we have been willing to allow this commission to go on in an orderly way and perform their duty and to abide by that decision, whether it be for Mr. Tilden or for Mr. Hayes. We were willing to do it and agree that their conclusions were honest, that their conclusions were the legitimate deductions of their examinations from the facts and the law, no matter where that decision should fall; but because it does not fall in favor of Mr. Tilden, by the purchase of an elector in Oregon—if I may use such an expression, at least evidence almost warrants me to say that, it being the performance of a certain perfidious act in order that Tilden might be elected—and because this commission will not count a vote of that character to elect Mr. Tilden, it is all fraudulent, it is all wrong, it is all hypocritical, it is all a cheat, it is all a sham.

No, sir, you mistake yourselves when you think that the country is going to swallow all this stuff that is put forth about frauds, and about tricks, and everything of that kind. The sensible people of this country want this question decided; they want it decided honestly; they want it decided without filibustering; they want it decided in a cool, calm, and dispassionate manner; and they are willing to abide by it. The telegrams that are coming to Congressmen asking them to filibuster and prevent the count come from the lower class of politicians; a class of people who love nothing; but their hates are always foremost. They do not love their country; they are devoid of patriotism; they would rather see the star of this magnificent Republic sink into the deep, dark sea of blood and gloom, than be disappointed in that which they desire, the forthcoming inauguration of their candidate for President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss this question, but to express my deep gratitude to one member of the electoral tribunal for the very calm and dispassionate judgment which he has given us to-day. I allude to the commissioner from Indiana [Mr. MORTON.] It was a judicial opinion delivered with great calmness, based doubtless upon testimony, for he volunteered to say to the Senate of the United States that there had been frauds, bloodshed, and murders committed in Louisiana and in South Carolina. Yet if I understand the facts, the commissioner from Indiana, the honorable Senator, refused to hear any of that evidence before the tribunal.

He spoke of the number of votes. I want to say a word about the number of votes. Samuel J. Tilden has received in round numbers three hundred thousand majority of the popular vote of this country, and Samuel J. Tilden has received a million majority of the white vote of this country, the thinking, reflecting vote of the country. This million majority of voters, quietly, acting under the advice of leading gentlemen, submitted this case to a tribunal, which it was supposed would be governed by law, by equity. Has that tribunal been so governed? Will that be the expression of the people of this country?

Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] has just said that nobody but the lower classes of the community say one word in objection to the decisions of this tribunal. The honorable Senator from Illinois is mistaken. I wish to read a telegram to show that distinguished Senator under what a mistake he labors. I hold in my hand a telegram containing a resolution written by one of the most eminent men in the United States, sent to me by twenty-one men representing 65,000 democrats in the State of Connecticut, be they of the lower or of the higher classes:

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT, February 27, 1877.

Hon. WILLIAM W. EATON, United States Senate:

Please communicate the following to our delegation in Congress:

At a meeting of the democratic State committee, held in Hartford on the 27th of February, 1877, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted:

Mark the language following, which I say is written by one of the most eminent men in this broad land:

Whereas the electoral commission designed and instituted to ascertain who by the votes of the people cast on the 7th day of November last was duly and justly elected to the Presidency for the four years ensuing from the 4th of March next, has by a partisan majority vote of its members—

In doing what?

in excluding evidence and by utter disregard of law, justice, equity, truth, honor, and fidelity to official oath and consistency in its decisions, defeated the purpose for which it was formed, disappointed the just expectation of the country, condoned fraud, and set a premium upon crime against the dearest rights of every freeman:

Resolved, That it is the duty of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State to exercise every constitutional power in them vested to prevent the consummation of a fraud which, by condonation, will become prosperous and habitual, to the early and certain destruction of our free institutions.

Resolved, That the chairman of this committee be, and he hereby is, instructed to forward immediately the foregoing to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

I beg leave to say to the Senate, and I beg leave to say to my distinguished friend from Illinois, that no better men breathe than the men who sent these resolutions to the Representatives and Senators in Congress from my State.

I want to say another thing to the Senator, that, so far as we have the power, we will exert it to prevent this condonation of fraud and this making and paying a premium upon crime, which in the end must prove the destruction of the institutions of the country.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. EATON. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. When I made allusion to these telegrams that were coming to Members and Senators I spoke of telegrams encouraging them to filibuster. Now, I ask the Senator when he says he proposes to use all means, if he intends to include filibustering among the means?

Mr. EATON. I mean all constitutional means. That is my answer, and the honorable Senator from Illinois knows the full breadth of the constitutional means that I speak of.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know whether I do or not. Will the Senator give the name of that great man in Connecticut who sent this telegram?

Mr. EATON. No, sir; I will not.

Mr. LOGAN. Ah, then I cannot judge of him.

Mr. EATON. I did not say that any great man had sent me the telegram. I said it was drawn by one of the most eminent men in the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator give the name of the gentleman who drew it?

Mr. EATON. I do not feel inclined to be questioned on that subject.

Mr. LOGAN. Then I should like to ask the Senator how I am to judge whether he belongs to the higher or lower classes?

Mr. EATON. If the Senator is a judge, as I believe him to be, of good writing and good language, let him read the paper as it will be printed, and then he will know that the telegram came from the hand of a master. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind the occupants of the galleries at this time that if there is any applause or any demonstration one way or the other he will order the galleries to be cleared.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I trust we have now come to the close of a long-contested presidential election. It will be memorable as long as the history of the United States endures. It is an election that turns upon one vote in an aggregate vote of three hundred and sixty-nine. If such an election had occurred in any other nation in the world it would have been followed by turmoil, and violence, and perhaps civil war. I know of no historical parallel in the records of ancient or of modern times where millions of people have been so evenly divided in the choice of their chief ruler, or even in the civil policy of opposing parties in monarchical governments.

If we can close this memorable contest by an act of hearty acquiescence in the judgment of tribunals created by law, we will present the most magnificent spectacle that has ever been known in the governments of men; and I, for one, this day, shall say nothing to disturb my sincere hope that such will be the result of this presidential election. It must be remembered that the tribunal which has been selected is composed of men, every one of whom we know, who are Senators and members and judges; and no man has a right, without accusing himself, to accuse that tribunal. No man dreams that they have been influenced by corruption, fraud, or a desire to promote fraud. They are honorable men, no doubt all of them governed more or less by party zeal and party feeling; but who is not, and who is so free from party convictions as to give him a right to accuse them? What Pharisee can cast the first stone? I did not favor the organization of that tribunal, because I thought the Constitution provided for a plain and simple method of counting, and that the law and the courts already provided could determine afterward whether the count was made according to the Constitution.

Look at the case as it stands. There are four disputed States that have been acted upon by the commission, and by the Senate and the House acting separately. In the case of Florida, committees of the two Houses, after full examination, differed as to which set of electors had the majority vote. The election was so close in that State, that the democratic committee claimed that the democratic electors had a majority of only 40 votes, while our committee of the Senate decided that the republican electors on the face of the returns had about 100 majority. And further, our committee, headed by its chairman, the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT,] declared that upon the actual proof of the right of the thing, the majority was much larger—so close was the election in Florida. What right have we, not so familiar as the members of these committees, in whose word and judgment we so often confide, to charge either side, or the commission who decided the controversy to arraign either for promoting fraud.

In regard to Louisiana I have already expressed all that I desire to say. I do believe that if the election in Louisiana had been conducted fairly, as a free election, the vote for the republican candidates would have been larger than has been certified to by the returning board. But that debate has passed away. I have had my say upon it. No man has a right to say that there was not such proof of fraud, violence, and collusion in Louisiana as to convince an honest man that a fair election was prevented by intimidation, and to justify under the law, the decision of the returning board. It was a dispute in which honest men, with the strongest conviction of right on either side, might differ without reproach.

Every Senator knows that in Oregon the people intended to elect, and did elect, three republican electors, and that vote ought to be recorded in favor of Governor Hayes. In the forum of honor and right there ought to be no question about it. I will not go beyond this mere fact to discuss the incidents of that contest, for no one impugns the conduct of any republican in that election.

In the case of South Carolina both parties admit that the Hayes electors had a majority; and why should not that settle it?

Here are the four cases upon which this contest hangs. I believe they have been decided rightly before God and man, according to the will of the people and the laws of these States; and that the election thus announced rests upon the voice of the majority. At any rate, the election was so close and doubtful in each of these different States that honest men may differ as to the result.

Party passions and party feelings sway Senators and Members and judges, and all men in every country. This fact ought, at least, prevent men who, like us, are moved by such passion and feeling, from accusing this tribunal from making a wrong or a corrupt decision. Who among you is purer or better than they or either of them?

As to the questions made of ineligible electors, I have thought that all these objections were frivolous, and I will not debate them. The judgment of the people and the will of the people ought to prevail, and when they have elected a man whom they supposed to be eligible and that man has cast his vote, that ought to be the end of argument. No question ought to be made in such cases. No such question was ever before made in our history; and there never was an election for President when there were not more than one or more or even ten or twelve ineligible electors. Never before except in one historical case was the matter questioned, and then it was dismissed without excluding a single vote.

As to the popular majority, I am amazed to hear those Senators who talk about the rights of States talk about the popular majority. There have been other elections in this country where the popular majority differed from the electoral majority. I will not be led into a discussion of the character of this popular majority, the nature of it, and how it was created in certain States. That is out of the question, but not out of mind. We are to be governed by the Constitution and the laws. Twenty-one States have voted for Governor Hayes; the rest have voted for Mr. Tilden, and the majority of the electoral vote is 1, the count standing 185 to 184. The question though close is now settled by law, by the decision of the tribunal that you yourselves have created, and that should be the end of it.

I appeal to Senators, therefore, actors as we are in a great historical scene, to allow us to go on and finish the business of this session, pass the appropriation bills; and let the judgment of the court stand, under the law, as the judgment of the two Houses. Let Governor Hayes be peacefully inaugurated. Make your party opposition, if you please, to his policy when it is developed; see that he does not win you to his support; fight him, if you please, in every manly and patriotic way; but let the judgment of the court and the judgment of the people, as proclaimed in the electoral college, stand. Let our acquiescence in the result of legal processes demonstrate the strength of republican institutions and stand forever as a monument of our obedience to law.

Forty millions of people over this broad country of ours look down with anxious care upon your deliberations. When your decision is announced they will spring at once with joy and hope to their ordinary occupations, and peace and order and prosperity will again crown our favored land. A dread suspense has hung over them, which you can lift in a moment. I saw a telegram a few moments since from Europe, asking the probable result of our action this day. It will affect the public credit and great operations now going on in the public service. The whole world will be pleased with the spectacle of the American people deciding this question now in quiet, in harmony, in dignity, and in peace. It will add greatly to the honors we have won. Let our party contests come up hereafter, but now since we agreed upon a tribunal to decide this contest, it has seemed to me, and I beg pardon of my democratic friends for so saying, a question of honor as well as a question of law. I for one say now that if the judgment of this tribunal had been in favor of Mr. Tilden, I would have resisted to the uttermost every effort made by any man, whether he be republican or democrat, who sought by any motion whatever to delay or defeat the prompt declaration of that result.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, it was not my intention to say anything on this resolution. I thought the decision of the electoral commission was a better speech than I could make; but I cannot sit still and hear Senators give utterance to such sentiments as were uttered by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MCDONALD.] The objection made to South Carolina by the Senator from Indiana is that the United States troops were sent to South Carolina, and that they throttled the will and the wish of the people of that State. Now, I say before the Senate and the country that the facts and the figures of the election go to prove that that is not true; and before a Senator, in his high place, presumes upon the ignorance of this country to make such an utterance he should hesitate. The republican party of South Carolina has nothing to conceal. The Republican party of South Carolina want the election in that State investigated; we want the action of every soldier and every officer who was sent to South Carolina investigated; we want the action of every republican officer of the election in South Carolina investigated; but we want the action of the democratic party in South Carolina also investigated.

Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate and of the country to the figures; figures will not lie. It is said that the soldiers were sent to South Carolina to throttle the people of that State and defeat their will. Is there any sane man in this Chamber, is there any sane man in the United States who supposes for one moment that the troops were sent to South Carolina to throttle the negroes? I reckon not. Our democratic friends do not say so; but, if I understand my friend from Indiana, he says that the troops in South Carolina prevented the white people from voting for Mr. Tilden; for he did not add the colored people.

Let us look at the figures. By the constitution of South Carolina we are required to take the census every five years. A census was taken in 1875, and that census shows that there had been an increase of population in the State of 223,000 in five years. Our democratic friends claim that the census was an error, that it was too high, but in order to give them the best case I possibly can, I propose to give them the benefit of that census. By the census of 1875 there are 74,199 white voters in South Carolina, and by the same census there are 110,744 colored voters over the age of twenty-one, making 184,943 voters in the whole State. Let us see how many white votes the democratic ticket got. This is an official statement. Our democratic friends got into trouble down there. They went before the supreme court and asked for a mandamus upon the returning board to make them recanvass the returns. They said if they would go and foot up the returns of the precinct managers there would be a majority for Tilden as well as a majority for the democratic State ticket. The supreme court appointed a referee. The referee went into that question. He examined the precinct returns, and he reported that the aggregate of the precinct returns would elect not only the Hayes electors, but Mr. Chamberlain and the whole republican State ticket, by 300 or 400 majority; and they immediately said to the court, that they did not care anything more about that mandamus. Now, I propose to stand right on the figures as approved of by the supreme court. In South Carolina we are required to keep separate lists of the white and colored voters. We find that at the election of 1876 the excess of white voters, white men who actually voted, over the white vote of the State according to the census, is 6,531. I wish the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] were here, because he is an honest man, and he wants to do what is right, if he only knew how, and I should like to ask him how he can say that the United States troops throttled the white people of South Carolina when our democratic white friends down there can poll 6,531 more white votes than there have ever been in any State! That may do very well to tell the people of Indiana, but I do not believe that anybody in Indiana would believe it.

I should like to ask another question. I will ask every Senator and every man in this broad country if he does not know as a rule that every white man in the South, particularly if he has been a rebel, is a democrat. I do not use the term rebel in any offensive sense. This is a practical question and I ask it because I am down to figures and must hasten, as I have only a few minutes. Does not every man know that the white men are all democrats? Does not every man in this country know that it is just as natural for an ex-slave to be a republican as for an ex-rebel to be a democrat? Will any one dispute that proposition? That is very certain; there is no question about it. There are exceptions and the exceptions are necessary to prove the rule. I know some of the exceptions. I know some gentlemen who have been in the confederate army and who are first-rate republicans. I know some colored men, but they are mighty few, who were slaves and are democrats.

The election in South Carolina shows that the democrats managed to get 6,531 more white votes than there were white voters in the State. Now, look at the colored vote. By the census we have 110,744 colored votes. Mr. Chamberlain and the republican ticket got about 92,000 colored votes. There is no going back on these figures. The Senator from Indiana may declaim until he is blind and my friend from Delaware may declaim until he is blind but it will not change these figures. There are just 99,000 colored men who voted in South Carolina. Now, if you take it for granted that all the white vote according to the census in South Carolina was cast for Tilden—and I am sure I am a white man and that I was there on the day of the election, and I know that I did not vote for Tilden; but suppose I did and suppose that every white man in South Carolina voted for Tilden—and I give Tilden the benefit of all the colored men who voted in excess of the republican State ticket and the Hayes ticket—we find that putting these together, including an excess of 6,531 white votes over the census, makes about 3,000 less than the vote claimed by the democrats. Giving them 6,500 obtained by fraud, it makes about 3,000 less than the vote that is claimed for Hampton and Tilden. Now, I ask my Christian, and honest, and conscientious democratic friends, because I love them all, particularly since they have got so badly beaten, where, in the name of God, the 3,000 other votes came from, in addition to the 6,531 white votes cast in excess of the 74,199 white votes in the State, as appears by the census of 1875.

These are the facts, these are the figures; and I ask any man upon this floor, as I will ask any man in South Carolina, to tell me where they got that vote for the democratic ticket, except by fraud. I will show where they got some of it. In the county of Edgefield, we find, by the census of 1875, there were 2,722 white votes and 4,400 colored votes. How many votes did Tilden get in that county, do you think? Recollect that the 2,722 white votes are supposed to be democratic, and there are 4,400 colored votes. I want to tell you how many votes Tilden got in that county. Tilden got 6,297 votes and Hayes got 3,107. How about the white vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BLAINE. I will take the floor and yield my time to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am much obliged to the Senator from Maine.

The election shows that twenty-two hundred and fifty-two more white men voted in Edgefield County than ever lived there or ever existed there; and that is the way Mr. Tilden got his 6,200 votes. Twenty-two hundred and fifty-two more white men voted in Edgefield County than every lived there, and they do not live there to-day. Where did they come from? Our friends across the river in Georgia sent them over to see us and while they were there they thought they might as well make good use of their time, and they voted, and they voted right, they all voted for Tilden, just as you would expect them to do.

That is where part of this fraud came from, and yet the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Indiana and other Senators on this floor charge upon the republican party of South Carolina the design of fraud. But I say to these gentlemen the less they say about fraud the better. Let them come before the people of this country and apologize for their murders. The republicans of South Carolina never asked for troops to come to South Carolina to protect the people in their right to vote. We asked troops to come there to protect human life. They were murdering our people; they murdered them at Hamburgh; they murdered ninety-eight in Aiken and Barnwell; and we asked the President of the United States to send troops to South Carolina to protect our people in their lives. He did it, and because the democrats in South Carolina did not carry the State by 40,000 majority, because they did not dare to commit murder in the presence of the troops, they cry "fraud." They tried the Mississippi plan. They carried Mississippi in 1875, because the troops were not there, by 40,000 majority, by murder and violence. Every man in this country knows this to be true and the widows and orphans and the new-made graves in Mississippi will prove the fact. Because they could not accomplish that in South Carolina they cry fraud. We, the republicans of South Carolina, will apologize for fraud if we have done any when you, the democrats of South Carolina, will apologize for your murders. The republicans of South Carolina are ready to-day to answer to the Senate and to the American people for their conduct in this election and we challenge the democrats to go before the people of this country and answer for theirs.

I am sorry that time would not permit for this electoral commission to go into the conduct of the election in South Carolina. Cheerfully would I have voted for the resolution of the Senator from North Carolina if we had had time, but I say right here to-day, representing Governor Chamberlain and the republicans of South Carolina, that we are ready to submit the election in South Carolina to any fair tribunal and if they say Wade Hampton is elected we will say amen. We will submit this election, all the returns and all the facts, to any fair tribunal and we will be just as confident as that we live that Governor Chamberlain will be declared elected by 20,000 majority as well as the Hayes electors.

Talk about fraud! The Senator from Illinois has spoken of the Oregon frauds. Did not your democratic party come into South Carolina and attempt to bribe the poor negro? Did they not come there and attempt to bribe a man of this race that they had tried to beat down, upon whose neck they set their heel until the loyal men of this country made them take it off? They went into South Carolina and tried to bribe a black man. O, democracy and reform, what crimes are committed in thy name! In Oregon by a white man; in South Carolina by a negro! Democracy and reform will resort to every crime, fraud, murder, intimidation, violence, and bribery. Let it be said to the honor of that colored man that when he was offered your $10,000 of dirty gold and your $40,000 of bonds in addition, he said, "No, no, I am the representative of the republican party of South Carolina; my vote will say whether my race shall be put back into slavery, or whether they shall be for all time to come free; and you should be ashamed to try to buy the rights of my people by my vote." And yet democracy with all the sanctimonious airs of the hypocrite talks about perjury! Great God! O, but there could be a book written on this election, a story that would shame and shock the nation. I wish I had time; I have very much more to say about this election. I propose to take the time hereafter. I am not going to talk about the election in Louisiana, but I do know what I am talking about when I am talking about the election in South Carolina.

Gentlemen talk about the election in the city of Charleston. I was there on the day of the election in the city of Charleston. No man who was not there knows more about it than I do. I went around the city of Charleston visiting, different polls, and I never saw a more quiet, peaceable, and orderly election than the one held there on the 7th of November last. How much time have I got, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two minutes.

Mr. PATTERSON. By the election returns in South Carolina we find that in every county in South Carolina, with the exception of two, the white vote was largely increased over the census. Is there a State in this Union—has an election ever been held where the whole vote was polled? Yet in South Carolina they pretend to have voted every man in the county and 6,531 more, and in every county except two the white vote has been increased. In Charleston County, where the allegation is that there was so much fraud and violence, there are 17,687 colored voters, according to the census, and there are 7,398 white voters. The republicans cast 15,032 votes and the democrats 8,809 votes, so that every white man in that county must have voted with the democrats and some 1,100 or 1,200 colored men. Now when you have an array of figures that shows that the white democratic vote has been increased about 18 per cent. over the census and the republican vote reduced about 12 per cent., do you not think that this cry of fraud comes with pretty bad grace? I do not believe that any person who thinks right and means right will believe any story of that kind. The election in Charleston City was fair, and every democrat there knows it.

I will say that the commissioners of election of the county of Charleston did notify the richest man in that county, who had given it out that he would take his negro laborers to the election on the day of election and would march them up, that he should not do it, and I am here as their representative to say that I believe it was right and I advised it, for I say that no man in America, be he employer or what not, has any right to lead his employés up to the polls.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is one which concerns the State of South Carolina. Upon that I have little to say. I did suppose, however, when the political committees of both parties reported to the public that the republicans had a majority in South Carolina, that that would be an end of the contest in respect to that State, and I deem that that at least is sufficient prima facie evidence to justify any member of the Senate in voting for the resolution now before us.

In respect to the State of Florida the majority claimed by the democrats was, as has been before stated here to-day, only forty. The majority claimed by the republicans was much larger. I believed that in that State the decision of the lawful returning board should be binding; and upon that I based my vote.

In respect to the State of Louisiana I desire to say a word or two in answer to what has been said by other Senators on this floor. I was one of the committee that went down to that State and spent some five weeks in investigating political affairs there, hearing witnesses upon both sides and trying the case as a court would try it as near as we could. There are certain figures, there are certain indubitable facts which prove beyond all question that in that State there was the intimidation of which the republicans complained and which the returning board made the basis of their action, which is now complained of by the democrats in this and the other House.

In forty parishes or counties of that State all parties admitted there was comparatively a free election. No complaint was made of any violence in those parishes. It might be claimed that in those parishes public opinion was influenced and the republican vote decreased by the outrages committed elsewhere; but there was no claim but that in those forty parishes the election was free, fair, and peaceable. In those forty parishes the colored people had a registered majority of 15,965. It is a fact—a fact not denied in Louisiana, by either democrat or republican—that as a general rule heretofore the colored people voted the republican ticket. In those forty parishes the republican majority upon the day of election is admitted to have been 6,355 votes; that is, upon a registered majority of 15,965 they obtained on the day of the election an actual majority of 6,355. But there were fourteen other parishes in that State in which intimidation was charged to have been practiced by the democratic party or its agents. The registered colored vote in those fourteen parishes was 21,368; the registered white vote was 14,579. In those fourteen parishes the colored people had a registered majority of 7,059 votes. Upon the day of election in those fourteen parishes there were cast 16,367 democratic votes and 9,123 republican votes, giving the democrats a majority of 7,244, against a registered colored majority of 7,059.

We investigated a certain number of those fourteen parishes, all that we could, and I say here that the testimony showed a condition or affairs disgraceful to humanity, disgraceful to the American people. Murder was committed, all crimes were committed in those parishes to prevent the colored people from voting the republican ticket. That appeared as plainly as the sun at noon-day, and yet there were certain excuses given for this great change in the parishes in which these proceedings were going on, and those excuses the committee investigated. The main excuse for that remarkable change in the vote, which did not occur where no intimidation was practiced, was that the colored people were sick of republican rule; that they therefore joined the democratic clubs and voted the democratic ticket freely and fairly. It was claimed also that in this election a different mode of electioneering was adopted by the democrats from what they had previously practiced; that is, they put themselves upon an equality with the colored people and endeavored to gain them by persuasion; and they account for this change in that way. But the same method of electioneering, that of persuasion, was adopted by them in the forty parishes, and no such change of majorities occurred there, and therefore there is nothing in that argument.

Now, Mr. President, I have this to say: It is true that many colored men joined the democratic clubs; it is true that many of them were compelled to vote the democratic ticket. The argument that was used with them, the mode of persuasion that was adopted, was for the most part not committed to writing, and therefore could not be proved; but it so happens that before our committee there came the printed resolutions of the democratic-conservative club of Laurel Hill, in the parish of West Feliciana, which show exactly the mode of argument adopted to induce the colored republican to join the democratic club. Upon the 12th day of February, in the year 1876, at a meeting of that club, at which there were present men from various wards in that parish, these resolutions were adopted:

Whereas the peace of the parish has been disturbed by the presence of armed men visiting plantations at night and firing pistols or guns at or in the direction of certain persons, thereby greatly disturbing the peace and quiet of families, both white and colored;

And whereas such incursions are not only violative of all law, but seriously injurious to the interests of the best members of society, and most annoying and vexatious to our respective citizens, and have been made and are a matter of scandal to our parish throughout the whole State and the United States;

And whereas our Senators in Congress have advised the citizens to take measures to put a stop to this state of affairs:

Resolved, That we, the Union Conservative club of Laurel Hill, issue the most earnest appeal to all citizens of this parish to abstain in future from all lawless and violent measures, and, among others, especially the armed visitation to plantations at night.

Resolved, That we call upon all citizens to respect the certificates of membership issued by this club, and sacredly to observe the rights of life and property of every member of this club, and to extend to each and every member a cordial approval and protection.

That conclusively shows the mode of electioneering that was adopted by the democrats in these bull-dozed parishes to get the colored people into the democratic clubs. Outrages were committed at night by armed democratic ruffians; the colored people were alarmed. They were poor; they feared that they were in the midst of their enemies; they found no protection. In one single parish there were hundreds of armed white men riding about at night with Winchester rifles, shooting, murdering, committing numerous crimes upon the poor colored people of that parish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, it seems that an appeal to reason and truth here is fruitless. Perhaps the American people will hear it; and therefore this debate is not out of place or without profit. I do not hope to change by anything I may say a predetermined result. "Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone." He is deaf to the voice of reason, truth, justice, and patriotism. He seems to be following after strange and fraudulent gods, and I apprehend in the end he will reach the goal of his ambition.

I do not contend that the electoral vote of South Carolina ought to be counted for the candidates of the democratic party in this struggle. What I do contend, however, is this, that the vote ought to be rejected, because there was no election there in contemplation of the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the State of South Carolina. Now, let us see exactly what is the issue before the Senate, apart from declamation, misrepresentation, and pointless facts.

I do not contend that the electoral commission should have gone behind the State authorities and ascertained how many votes were cast in South Carolina; I do not contend that it was the business of that commission to inquire about whether any voters there were intimidated or any way inveigled into voting for one ticket or another, I do not believe that was the office of the commission or is the office of Congress in counting the electoral votes; but what I do contend for is this, that it was the duty, the essential duty of the commission to ascertain whether there was a State of South Carolina in harmonious relations with the Union, whether it had a lawful governor and a lawful Legislature, and whether it had lawful State officers to conduct an election and ascertain the result, and whether in fact according to the Constitution and laws an election was held there and the result duly ascertained.

This commission were charged by the statute by which they were created and under which they were acting, and the Congress is charged by the Constitution of the country, to make that solemn inquiry when a question is properly raised that presents any issue on that subject. Ordinarily, Congress sitting to count the electoral vote would take official notice of most of these things; but when an issue is raised in a proper way, then evidence must be received to establish every important allegation necessary to make count of an electoral vote. The commission have failed to do that. They have stolidly, and by a strict party vote, refused to receive evidence to show whether there was such a vote, whether there was such a Legislature, whether there were such State authorities, and whether an election was held in South Carolina according to the Constitution and laws. They have refused it in the face of an allegation properly and legitimately made alleging that such was not the fact.

It was solemnly alleged before the commission that there was a conspiracy in South Carolina, by a prostitution of the Army of the United States, to prevent a fair election and compel the voters of that State to vote for the electoral candidates in the republican party. That was the allegation; and further that the Army of the United States was prostituted—that by improper, false, fraudulent, and corrupt means large detachments of the Army were taken into the State of South Carolina and used for the express and the mere purpose of preventing a free and fair election in that State—for the purpose of producing such a state of things as that, if the majority should turn out in favor of the democratic electoral ticket, then the vote should be rejected and not counted; or to induce, or by the presence of the Army compel, a sufficient number of the voters of the State to vote for the republican ticket, carry it, and then insist that it be counted. That was the plain allegation, the material allegation; and it was plainly competent, I insist, not only competent, but it was the solemn, high, and patriotic duty of that commission to receive any testimony tending to support that allegation; and they refused to do it, I repeat, by a strict party vote.

I insist that now it is competent for the Senate to hear that testimony, but the Senate has here by a solemn vote refused to hear testimony to support these allegations. What must all just men, the American people think, of such a manifestly false ruling?

I was on the subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections that went to South Carolina to examine into the question whether there had been intimidation in that State. I am familiar with many of the facts connected with the election, and I stand here to tell the Senate and to tell the American people that in my judgment there was a conspiracy to prostitute the Army of the Union for the purpose of controlling that election in the interest of the republican party, and that the Army was prostituted to such an extent as to vitiate and corrupt the election in South Carolina so as that what purports to be the electoral vote of that State ought to be rejected and counted for no one.

Why, sir, the testimony taken before the committee of which I was a member shows beyond any sort of reasonable question that the governor of that State, before the late political contest there had hardly opened, with the view to use the Army to control the election, made a false proclamation of insurrection in that State. He made a proclamation of insurrection then when all the judges in the State, except one or two, declared and stated in effect under their hands that his proclamation was false. The sheriff in the county where it was alleged there was insurrection particularly stated that what he had said was false and that he, without the aid of a posse or any one, could execute in his county anywhere any civil process that might come into his hands. The governor issued that proclamation, made his application to the President of the United States for troops to go there and suppress insurrection. He manifestly, by design, did not pursue the course prescribed by the Constitution and convene the Legislature, to the end that the Legislature might consider the facts and see whether the occasion had arisen for making a requisition on the President of the United States, for Federal aid to suppress insurrection, but, in the exercise of his own judgment, in pursuance of a false proclamation, he himself made the application to the President, and the President sent the troops there by thousands, and then troops were stationed in almost every county in the State prior to the election and on the day of the election. The natural effect of sending troops there was to intimidate the people. The law contemplates that the presence of troops under such circumstances is intimidation. The very result proved that it had the effect to intimidate them, and the facts go to show that the people of that State, and particularly the colored people, were influenced by the presence of the troops. One distinguished witness, a man whose veracity cannot be questioned, of large opportunity to observe and of large observation, swears that the negroes were given to understand by the republican leaders all through the State where he went that the Army was sent down there for the express purpose of compelling them to vote the republican ticket.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senators' time has expired.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, by the favor of the Senate, I was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections sent to South Carolina for the purpose of investigating affairs in that State. I did not intend to take any part in this discussion; but after hearing what the Senator from North Carolina, who was one of my colleagues upon that subcommittee, has said, I cannot refrain from saying a single word.

The Senator says that he stands up here to tell the Senate and to tell the country that a conspiracy was entered into for the purpose of preventing a free expression of the political opinion of the people of that State, and that in furtherance of that conspiracy the Army was brought into the State of South Carolina. I heard all the testimony that was given before that subcommittee. The Senator heard all the testimony that was given before that subcommittee. I do not question that he has honestly come to the conclusion which he has expressed here to-day; but I must say for myself, and I can say for my other colleague upon that committee, that we did not think we were justified in coming to any such conclusion.

A great deal of testimony was given before the committee in reference to the action of the Federal troops in the State prior to the election and on the day of the election. Testimony was given by democratic witnesses and by republican witnesses; and without a single exception—and in this statement I know that I am correct—every witness, republican and democratic, who testified in regard to the action of the Army, the officers or the soldiers, testified that no officer, no soldier at any time or at any place attempted in any way to influence the action of a single voter. It was the uniform testimony of democratic witnesses as well as republican witnesses that the officers of the Army and the soldiers of the Army acted with the greatest prudence and the greatest circumspection, and not in a single instance attempted to influence the action of a single voter or attempted to prevent a single voter from going up to the polls and voting exactly as he pleased. I understand that the Senator from North Carolina agrees with me in this.

Mr. MERRIMON. I did not say that any officer or soldier had attempted to influence a single vote. I said that the presence of the Army there itself, of itself, had the effect, and I can produce the testimony to show it, that my colleague on the committee will not deny.

Mr. BLAINE. What was the influence that did it?

Mr. MERRIMON. A moral influence. As I said in my place a moment ago, it was in proof that the negroes were told that the Army had been brought there for the purpose of compelling them to vote the republican ticket, and they were largely influenced. A man swore to that fact whose testimony and veracity will not be questioned.

Mr. BLAINE. Did the negroes swear to that?

Mr. MERRIMON. No, but a man of very high character did so. If you want to know his name, I will give it.

Mr. BLAINE. It is a very extraordinary statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. My time is running on. The Senator concedes that the Army did not, by direct action, influence the vote of a single person in that State, but he says that the moral influence of the Army did have such an effect as to prevent democrats from voting.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to interrupt him? I want to get what the position of the Senator from North Carolina is. I understand him that the negroes in large numbers were eager and anxious to vote the democratic ticket, but were prevented for fear the Army was going to outrage them if they did.

Mr. MERRIMON. When the Army first went there they were told—and it is in evidence, and I will produce it before the Senate at the proper time—that the Army was brought there for the purpose of compelling them to vote the republican ticket; and this same person, General McGowan, swore that the presence of the Army cost the democratic party ten thousand votes.

Mr. BLAINE. I want it to go on record that the negroes in South Carolina were so eager to vote the democratic ticket, after the Hamburgh massacre, that it took the entire Army of the United States to restrain them! [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, the presence of the Army in some localities did have some influence on the result of the election in those localities. Scores and scores of republican witnesses testified before the committee that they attended at such a box; that they voted the republican ticket; and when asked if there were any troops there they answered yes. Then we asked them, "If there were no troops there could you have gone to the poll and voted?" Scores and scores of them said that they would not; that they would not have dared to come out of the swamps, where they had been skulking for fear of their lives for months, if there were not troops at those polls. I am free to admit that the result of the election in South Carolina might have been different if there were no troops in the State; but the difference would have been produced by the fear that the negroes of the State had. They would not have gone to the polls and voted if they did not know that there were troops there to protect them. But I deny, and I do not think the Senator will claim, that the vote of a single white man was influenced by the presence of the Army in South Carolina.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I was also of the committee with the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from North Carolina. We took testimony there over one month, and I concur fully in every word that my colleague, the Senator from Wisconsin, has stated in reference to the evidence before the committee. There was not one iota of testimony, not a shadow of testimony by any party, by any witness, that any single individual voter of any color whatever had been influenced in his vote by the Army of the United States; and many, many democrats, intelligent men there, representative men, declared that from the action of those troops they could not have ascertained their politics and did not know what their politics were. This was the uniform testimony of all parties.

How was the Army used there? Simply to repress violence and protect the lives of the colored people, who were fleeing to the swamps, as stated by my colleague; and I have no doubt the Army there did influence the vote in that State, and that but for the Army the election in that State would have been an egregious farce; it would have been no election. Witness after witness when he came upon the stand testified how he had been driven from his home, how his life had been threatened, how he had been threatened with the destruction of his property and everything of the kind unless he would join a democratic club. When asked by our colleague from North Carolina, "did you not vote?" he would answer "yes." "Did you vote the republican ticket?" "Yes." And our colleague from North Carolina seemed to exult that he had proved a very important point. But ask him one more question, "had the Army not been there would you have dared to go to the polls?" and he said "no." So much for the use of the Army in the State of South Carolina.

Now, I do not wish to have it understood because I testify in this way as to the action of the Army of the United States that I am in favor of permanently governing these States by the Army. I believe it to be a policy that must be abandoned; and on some other occasion I shall take the opportunity of saying a few words upon that point.

Mr. President, if my time has not yet expired, I have a few words more to say. It has been said here that it was expected this commission would go behind the returns and inquire into the question of fraud. If we should go behind them at all for this purpose, we must go through; otherwise there would be no fairness in the inquiry; and if all the frauds pertaining to this or any other presidential election were to be determined, and the result of the presidential election were to depend upon determining those facts, a single presidential term would not be long enough to determine them. And now I tell those who say so much about our refusal to go behind these returns and inquire into the question of fraud, that no Senator here should have expected that we were to make that inquiry, when that bill was passed, because we well knew that we could scarcely have entered upon it at all before the 4th of March, when the commission will expire. No man had so absurd an expectation. No man could have had.

Now, one word more as to what has been said about the popular vote. A great deal of reliance has been placed upon the fact that Mr. Tilden has the majority of the popular vote. Mr. President, our system of Government is not one in which the aggregate popular vote of the United States can of itself determine a presidential election. There is nothing under our Constitution or form of government which will allow 80,000 majority in the State of Georgia given for Mr. Tilden to be used to overcome a majority in the State of Michigan the other way; and so on of other States. We all know that. We all know that the popular vote of the United States taken as a mass is not what, under our Constitution, is to determine the election of President. We all know another thing, that very many democratic Presidents of the United States whose title to office was never questioned were minority Presidents, elected by a minority of the popular vote. What then is meant by appealing to this fact, that a majority of the popular vote has been in favor of Mr. Tilden? If that were to govern, what would become of State rights? But I shall not occupy further time.

Mr. KERNAN. How much time is there?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are but two minutes left before the vote is to be taken.

Mr. KERNAN. I will occupy the time to state that I give my vote against counting the votes sent here in certificate No. 1 from South Carolina because evidence was offered to be given before the commission which, if received, would have shown, as was alleged, that there was not a free election in the State of South Carolina. I do not know that the evidence would have come up to proving a state of facts which would have induced me to reject the vote, but I vote as I do because the offer was made to prove to the commission in substance that the Executive of the United States sent to that State troops which did overawe and interfere so as to prevent a free and fair election, and changed the result from what it would have been except for such interference. That was rejected, and the answer given was, "if he did that, impeach him." But I insist that if he procured electoral votes by an act which was impeachable, I for one would not consent to count them.

Now, I do not know that the evidence would have been sufficient to establish the alleged facts, but I mean to say that the commission decided that it could not hear evidence to show that troops were sent there for the purpose, and that through their instrumentality the purpose was effected, of giving the electoral votes which were offered to be counted; and inasmuch as the evidence was rejected we could not decide upon it, and a rule was settled which I believe to be wrong, and with such an offer of proof shut out I would not consent to count the votes. The rejection of the offer was equivalent to saying "If the Executive for any reason sent to a State that was weak or that could not resist, troops enough to coerce the people to give electoral votes one way rather than the other, there is no power in the commission or in this Government to hear evidence that that was so and to reject the vote thus coerced." This is the reason I cannot vote for this resolution approving the decision of the commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate has lasted two hours. The time allowed for debate has now expired. The question is on the resolution of the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. ROBERTSON,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of South Carolina stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] being ill left the Chamber sometime ago asking me to pair with him on this vote. I did so. Were he here he would vote against the resolution and I should vote in favor of counting the electoral votes of South Carolina—counting the votes of those electors referred to in the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am requested to state in this connection that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] are necessarily absent from the Chamber on a conference committee at this time.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HAMLIN] is absent from the Senate Chamber on an important committee of conference. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is also absent from the Chamber on an important committee, and if he does not return to vote before the vote is announced it will be understood that he is prevented for that reason. He would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. WITHERS. I desire to state that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] is absent from the Chamber on an important committee of conference. If he were here he would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] I should vote in the negative if I were at liberty to do so.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 39, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, and Wright—39.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bogy, Cockrell, Conkling, Davis, Dawes, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Thurman, West, and Windom—14.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the House of Representatives be informed of the action of the Senate, and that we are now ready to meet them and continue the count.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will notify the House accordingly.

At six o'clock and thirteen minutes p. m. Mr. G. M. ADAMS, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that the House have—

Resolved, That the objections to the decision of the electoral commission upon the electoral votes of South Carolina be sustained by the House, and that said votes be not counted in conformity with the decision of said commission.

And that the House is now ready to receive the Senate in the Hall of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives, and returned to its Chamber at seven o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.; when the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF VERMONT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having withdrawn from the joint meeting on objections submitted to the certificate from the State of Vermont, the Secretary will now read the objections.

The Secretary read as follows:

OBJECTION No. 1.

The undersigned, Senator and Members of the House of Representatives, object to the counting of the vote of the State of Vermont, for the reason that two returns or papers purporting to be returns of the electoral vote of said State were forwarded to the President of the Senate, and that only one of said returns has been laid before the two Houses, the President of the Senate having stated that but one return has been received by him from said State, and a duplicate copy of one of said returns is herewith submitted for the consideration of the Senate and House of Representatives.

A. S. MERRIMON, Senate.
WILLIAM M. SPRINGER,
A. H. HAMILTON.
Members of the House of Representatives.

BURLINGTON, VERMONT, February 28, 1877.
[Received at 2.26 p. m.]

To S. J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Certificate of Amos Aldrich as elector was deposited in this office December 13.

B. B. SMALLEY,
Clerk United States District Court for Vermont.

OBJECTION No. 2.

The undersigned, Senator and Representatives, object to the return from the State of Vermont on the grounds following, namely:

1. That Henry N. Sollace, who is certified to have been elected on the 7th of November, 1876, was at that day, and for a long time before had been, a postmaster of the United States, and therefore held an office of trust and profit under the United States, and could not be constitutionally appointed an elector of said State under the Constitution of the United States.

2 That the law of Vermont did not authorize the election of said Sollace to fill the vacancy alleged to have been the result of the absence of said Sollace from the college of electors.

3. It does not appear that said Sollace had resigned his office of postmaster at the date of his appointment by the college of electors.

4. That Amos Aldrich, who received the highest vote at the election on the 7th day of November, 1876, next to that cast for said Sollace, should have been allowed to cast one of the electoral votes of the State of Vermont.

OBJECTION No. 3.

The undersigned, Senator and Representatives, object to the return No. 1 from the State of Vermont on the grounds following, namely:

1. That Henry N. Sollace, who is certified to have been elected on the 7th of November, 1876, was at that day and for a long time before had been a postmaster of the United States, and therefore held an office of trust and profit under the United States, and could not be constitutionally appointed an elector of said State under the Constitution of the United States.

2. That the law of Vermont did not authorize the election of said Sollace to fill the vacancy alleged to have been the result of the absence of said Sollace from the college of electors.

3. It does not appear that said Sollace had resigned his office of postmaster at the date of his appointment by the college of electors, which fact is proper to be inquired of by the commission established by law.

4. It is proper for the said commission to inquire and report whether Amos Aldrich, who received the highest vote at the election on the 7th day of November, 1876, next to that cast for said Sollace, and who is certified as an elector by certificate No. 2, is not the duly appointed elector for the State of Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I venture to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry N. Sollace as an elector for the State of Vermont be counted together with the other four electoral votes of that State, the objections to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I wish to say, touching the first exception read at the Clerk's desk, that I learned from sources which I regarded as reliable that in a regular and orderly way a return was forwarded to the President of the Senate of an electoral vote cast in the State of Vermont. The Chair stated that the return had not come to him. Believing what I learned, and regarding the matter as of sufficient importance to have it brought before the Senate and the House of Representatives in the proper way, I consented to sign the objection.

This case, then, is presented. There are, as is alleged, dual returns from the State of Vermont. One set of returns have reached the President of the Senate in a regular and orderly way. The other set of returns, which ought to have come to him in that same regular and orderly way, have not come. Now, the question is, and it is the question that I am willing to see decided in some proper way, how is this difficulty to be solved? If there was another body of persons in the State of Vermont different from that which sent the regular returns to the President of the Senate, which purported to be an electoral college and acted in that capacity, and if they forwarded a return to the President of the Senate, it surely seems to me that there must be some means to get at that return.

From the State of Florida there came dual returns. They came in a regular and orderly way, according to the Constitution and laws. About these returns there was no question, but I put this inquiry: suppose that one of those returns had not reached the President of the Senate, and we had been in as full possession of the facts as we are to-day, except that we had not received one of the returns, is there no means by which the House of Representatives and the Senate could come in possession of that return? Is it absolutely cut off? If so, then there is nothing in this point. If, however, there is any remedy, then it is worth while to inquire whether there was such return as that suggested, as I understood and understand now, in good faith.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I think a little attention to the Constitution and the laws would have made this case exceedingly plain. The Constitution provides that the electors shall meet in their respective States, that they shall cast their votes, and that they shall make out lists of the persons voted for as President and Vice-President, and transmit them to the President of the Senate. The law of 1792, which has been on the statute-book for a few years, and ought to have been understood, provides that the electors shall meet and give their votes on the first Wednesday in December, and—

That the executive authority of each State shall cause three lists of the names of the electors of such States to be made and certified, to be delivered to the electors on or before the said first Wednesday in December, and the said electors shall annex one of the said lists to each of the lists of their votes.

They are required by this law of 1792 to deliver one of these lists to the judge of the district in which the electors shall assemble, and they are required to send another to the President of the Senate by a special messenger appointed by them before the first Wednesday in January next ensuing, and they are required then to forward another by post-office to the Pesident of the Senate at the seat of Government. If there is an electoral college in a State and that college acts, it makes three lists of its votes; it sends one by mail to the President of the Senate, one by a special messenger appointed by its own body; and the other is deposited with the judge of the district court in which the electors meet.

Section 4 of the same act provides—

That if a list of votes from any State shall not have been received at the seat of Government on the said first Wednesday in January, then the Secretary of State shall send a special messenger to the district judge in whose custody such list shall have been lodged, who shall forthwith transmit the same to the seat of Government.

It does seem to me, Mr. President, that these provisions are ample, and manifest and unmistakable in their meaning, and that there can be no controversy about it. Further, section 7 of the act of 1792 provides—

That the persons appointed by the electors to deliver the lists of votes to the President of the Senate shall be allowed, on the delivery of the said lists—

A certain amount of mileage; and section 8 provides—

That if any person appointed to deliver the votes of the electors to the President of the Senate shall, after accepting of his appointment, neglect to perform the services required of him by this act, he shall forfeit the sum of $1,000.

If these electors were representing the State of Vermont, and have failed to perform their duties, the State of Vermont has ample means of protecting herself and the people, and the other electors could appoint a messenger, or if there should be but one elector, he could appoint himself to come here to deliver the vote just as well as to cast the vote of the electoral college. Therefore, whether there be one or ten electors makes no difference, and if action is taken refusing to receive an electoral vote offered at this time I think it will be perfectly right, not only in accordance with the Constitution and the law of 1792 but in strict accordance with the law which was passed at this session.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has spoken once.

Mr. MERRIMON. I did not understand that we were running on time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate has commenced. It commenced at seven o'clock and twenty-two minutes.

Mr. MERRIMON. I only want to make one remark.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will be permitted by unanimous consent to make his remarks.

Mr. SARGENT. Will not the Senator from Vermont yield it out of his time?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly I will yield part of my time.

Mr. MERRIMON. I simply want to say that there is no question about the law which the Senator from Missouri read, but it does not meet this case.

Mr. LOGAN. No law meets this case, nor does anything else.

Mr. MERRIMON. It is very easy for Senators to laugh. It is sometimes more difficult than it is to laugh, to reason about a thing. Sometimes people laugh because they cannot reason about a thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will address the Chair.

Mr. MERRIMON. The remark I wish to make, Mr. President, is that the case before the Senate is one where it is alleged an electoral college, or a body purporting to be an electoral college, in the State of Vermont, assembled and cast what purported to be the electoral vote of that State. Triplicates were duly issued as the law requires, one sent by messenger, another by mail, and another to the judge of the court. The triplicate sent by mail to the President of the Senate never reached him. The messenger did not deliver the triplicate intrusted to him. Whether the judge has one we cannot now know, because so far as we see the secretary of state or the proper officer of the State government has not sent to the judge that triplicate. Now, that is this case; it is a possible case. Therefore, I do not controvert anything about the law, I understand that; but what I do not understand so well is how an actual case such as this, and we take it that this is an actual case, is to be solved. It may be that it is to be rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I will occupy the time to which I am entitled by asking for the yeas and nays on the adoption of this resolution. I do not wish to dignify this performance by a single remark.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. Let the resolution be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry N. Sollace as an elector for the State of Vermont be counted, together with the other four electoral votes of that State, the objections to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DENNIS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] on questions connected with the count. I presume he would vote "yea" on this resolution, as I should vote "yea" myself. [Laughter.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 47, nay 0; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Cockrell, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Logan, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—47.

NAY—0.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Blaine, Bogy, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hereford, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—28.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Secretary inform the House of Representatives of the action of the Senate, and that the Senate is ready to meet the House to proceed with the duties required under the act.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will excute the order of the Senate.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at ten o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator to withdraw that till I put a question.

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Has the House taken a recess?

Mr. CLAYTON. The Speaker of the House was just here, and I heard him say it had.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has been informed that the House of Representatives has taken a recess. The Chair saw the Speaker in the Chamber.

Mr. SARGENT. The Speaker informed me that the House had taken a recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLAYTON] moves that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at ten o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at seven o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, March 1, 1877, at ten o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 28, 1877.

The House re-assembled at twelve o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the Journal of yesterday is not completed and therefore cannot be read.

Mr. FIELD. I am directed by the committee on the powers and privileges of the House of Representatives to report the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I object, and call for the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that the Journal is not ready and therefore cannot be read.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Then I object to any other business.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I object to any business being done.

Mr. SCALES. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and pass at this time the Senate bill to remove the disabilities of General D. H. Hill, of North Carolina.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I object.

Mr. LAMAR. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules of the House be suspended so as to discharge the Committee on the state of the Union from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 14, and to immediately consider the same.

Mr. FORT and Mr. HOLMAN objected.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask unanimous consent to take up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 4261) to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, which has been returned from the Senate with amendments, that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and a conference asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. EDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to gentlemen that it is hardly worth while for them to make efforts to be recognized for the purpose of taking up public business, because there are gentlemen here who do not desire that any legislation shall be done.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PIPER. I ask unanimous consent to present the report of the joint select committee on the Chinese question, and also the report of the expenses of the House part of the committee.

There was no objection, and the reports were received.

Mr. PIPER. I ask unanimous consent that the reports be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The reports are as follows:

REPORT OF THE JOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The joint special committee of the Senate and House of Representatives appointed to investigate the character, extent, and effect of Chinese immigration report as follows:

On the 6th day of July, 1876, the Senate passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That a committee of three Senators be appointed to investigate the character, extent, and effect of Chinese immigration to this country, with power to visit the Pacific coast for that purpose, and to send for persons and papers, and to report at the next session of Congress."

On the 17th day of July, 1876, the House of Representatives passed the following resolution:

"Whereas the Senate has passed a resolution authorizing the appointment of a committee of three Senators to visit the Pacific coast and report to Congress at its next session upon the character, extent, and effect of Chinese immigration to this country:

"Resolved, That the Speaker is hereby authorized to appoint three members of this House to proceed to the Pacific coast, after the adjournment of Congress, to investigate conjointly with said Senate committee, or otherwise, the extent and effect of Chinese immigration to this country, with power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ a stenographer, and to take evidence; said committee to report to Congress at its next session."

Subsequently, at the same session, by concurrent resolution, the said special committee of the two Houses were authorized to act as a joint special committee for the purposes aforesaid, and with the powers conferred by the resolutions appointing them.

In conducting the investigation required by the resolutions the joint committee visited the Pacific coast and examined one hundred and thirty witnesses. The testimony so taken covers over twelve hundred pages of printed matter and embraces the views of all classes of the community and every variety of interest. The committee found a great diversity of opinion, resulting from different standpoints of the witnesses who were examined.

In conducting this examination the committee divided their work so as to first hear persons opposed to the unlimited introduction of Chinese, and to this branch of the subject a limited time was given. They then heard the testimony of persons favorable to such introduction, and concluded by affording time for witnesses in rebuttal. Although the subject by this means was pretty fully covered and the inquiry perhaps exhausted, the conclusions to be drawn from the mass of testimony may be different to different minds. In the opinion of the committee it may be said that the resources of California and the Pacific coast have been more rapidly developed with the cheap and docile labor of Chinese than they would have been without this element. So far as material prosperity is concerned, it cannot be doubted that the Pacific coast has been a great gainer.

This is true, at any rate, of the capitalist classes. If the inquiry should stop there; if it should be satisfied by the certainty that money is made out of the present condition of things, and not look to the present or future moral or political welfare of our Pacific States, it must be conceded, at least, that many enterprising men find their profit in Chinese immigration, and the general resources of the Pacific are being rapidly developed by means of Chinese labor. Among others who testified were those who largely employ Chinese or are interested in their transportation, and who find a profit therein. These testified that the results of Chinese immigration had been invariably beneficial in enhancing the material prosperity of the coast, but some were not entirely clear that there were not social and moral evils springing from this immigration which in the future would counterbalance the advantages gained by the present rapid production of wealth.

Opposition to any move restricting the immigration of Chinese was also developed among religious teachers, who testified before the committee that the presence of Chinese among us imposes a duty and gives an opportunity of Christianizing them. On the other hand, the committee found that laboring-men and artisans, perhaps without exception, were opposed to the influx of Chinese, on the ground that hard experience had shown that they are thereby thrown out of employment and the means of decent livelihood are more difficult of acquisition. But the opposition to Chinese immigration was not confined to laboring-men and mechanics. In the testimony will be found that of lawyers, doctors, merchants, divines, judges, and others, in large numbers, speaking of their own observation and belief, that the apparent prosperity derived from the presence of Chinese is deceptive and unwholesome, ruinous to our laboring classes, promotive of caste, and dangerous to free institutions.

In the progress of their investigation the committee called before them the municipal authorities of San Francisco, including the executive, legislative, health, and police departments, to ascertain the numbers, habits, and modes of life of the Chinese in San Francisco. The number of adult Chinese residents in that city averages at present during a year about thirty-five thousand. The testimony shows that the Chinese live in filthy dwellings, upon poor food, crowded together in narrow quarters, disregarding health and fire ordinances, and that their vices are corrupting to the morals of the city, especially of the young.

Among the testimony will be found that of some twenty operatives, numbering nearly as many trades, in which details are given in relation to different industrial pursuits which are either monopolized by the Chinese or are fast becoming so. This evidence shows that the Chinese have reduced wages to what would be starvation prices for white men and women, and engrossed so much of the labor in the various callings that there is a lack of employment for whites; and young men are growing up in idleness, while young women, willing to work, are compelled to resort to doubtful means of support. The hardships resulting from these causes bear with especial weight upon women.

It is also shown that this distinctive competition in some branches of labor operates as a continual menace, and inspires fears that the establishment of these ruinously low rates will extend to all employments and degrade all white working-people to the abject condition of a servile class. From this cause, among others, has sprung up a bitterly hostile feeling toward the Chinese, which has exhibited itself sometimes in laws and ordinances of very doubtful propriety and in the abuse of individual Chinamen and sporadic cases of mob violence. The influence of the better class of society is thrown against all violence toward the Chinese, although those exercising that influence may be convinced that the presence of the Chinese in California is undesirable. As long as there is a reasonable hope that Congress will apply a remedy for what is considered a great and growing evil, violent measures against the Chinese can be restrained.

As the safety of republican institutions requires that the exercise of the franchise shall be only by those who have a love and appreciation for our institutions, and this rule excludes the great mass of the Chinese from the ballot as a necessary means to public safety, yet the application of the rule deprives them of the only adequate protection which can exist in a republic for the security of any distinctive large class of persons. An indigestible mass in the community, distinct in language, pagan in religion, inferior in mental and moral qualities, and all peculiarities, is an undesirable element in a republic, but becomes especially so if political power is placed in its hands.

The safety of the State demands that such power shall not be so placed. The safety of the class, however, seems to depend in a measure upon that power.

There are, therefore, springing from this subject antagonistic considerations, the only way to reconcile which would seem to be that the laws should discourage the large influx of any class of population to whom the ballot cannot be safely confided.

To any one reading the testimony which we lay before the two Houses it will become painfully evident that the Pacific coast must in time become either American or Mongolian. There is a vast hive from which Chinese immigrants may swarm, and circumstances may send them in enormous numbers to this country. These two forces, Mongolian and American, are already in active opposition. They do not amalgamate, and all conditions are opposed to any assimilation. The American race is progressive and in favor of a responsible representative government. The Mongolian race seems to have no desire for progress and to have no conception of representative and free institutions. While conditions should be favorable to the growth and occupancy of our Pacific possessions by our own people, the Chinese have advantages which will put them far in advance in this race for possession. They can subsist where the American would starve. They can work for wages which will not furnish the barest necessities of life to an American. They make their way in California as they have in the islands of the sea, not by superior force or virtue, or even industry, although they are, as a rule, industrious, but by revolting characteristics and by dispensing with what have become necessities in modern civilization. To compete with them and expel them the American must come down to their level or below them; must work so cheaply that the Chinese cannot compete with him, for in the contest for subsistence he that can subsist upon the least will last the longest.

It must not be understood that these views are unchallenged by a considerable and respectable class in California. Many persons of intelligence consider that this very cheapness of labor of the Chinese and the extreme docility of his habits are a strong consideration in his favor. More money can be made by employing him than can be by the employment of white men and women with the payment of adequate wages. Admitting this, yet it would seem that an unlimited influx of Chinese might be a great future evil; that the population of the Pacific coast by a people of cognate language, religion, habits, and traditions would be better than its population by Asiatics; that its people should be like those of Iowa or Illinois rather than like those of Peking and Canton. When considerations relating to the future health of the body-politic were called to the attention of witnesses, scarcely any dissented from the idea that great numbers of a people of the average mental capacity of the Chinese, having no inclination to adopt this country as their permanent home, who come and return as pagans, having a total disregard for our Government and laws and the servile disposition inherited from ages of benumbing despotism, were undesirable.

By the judges of the criminal courts of San Francisco it was shown that there is a great want of veracity among Chinese witnesses, who have little regard for the sanctity of an oath, and hence convictions are very difficult for offenses committed against each other or against the public at large. The testimony seemed to be concurrent that the Chinese are non-assimilative with the whites; that they have made no progress, during the quarter of a century in which they have been resident on the Pacific coast, in assimilation with our people; that they still retain their peculiar costume and follow their original national habits in food and mode of life; that they have no social intercourse with the white population; that they work for wages which will not support white men, and especially white families; that they have no families of their own in this country, or very few of them; and that by the small amount and poor quality of food which they consume, and their crowding together in close quarters, reducing individual expenses of rent, their having no families to support or educate, they are able to compete with white labor in all departments and exclude it from employment.

Testimony was further taken upon the question of any radical differences existing between the Asiastic and Caucasian races, and in the evidence will be found much valuable information upon this point peculiarly interesting to the ethnologist. The deduction from the testimony taken by the committee on this point would seem to be that there is not sufficient brain capacity in the Chinese race to furnish motive power for self-government. Upon the point of morals, there is no Aryan or European race which is not far superior to the Chinese as a class. Full and interesting details of Chinese morals and habits in their own country will be found in the testimony, fully warranting this assertion. That testimony comes from intelligent travelers, ship-captains, merchants, and others, and some of it is too revolting for miscellaneous reading. But it was proved satisfactorily that the Chinese merchants in San Francisco are honorable in their dealings with other merchants. The only testimony affecting the integrity of this comparatively small class was that they evade to a considerable extent the United States revenue laws.

There is no intermarriage between the Asiatics and the Caucasian race.

The presence of the Chinese discourages and retards white immigration to the Pacific States. This clearly appeared in evidence, and probably arises from their monopoly of farm and mechanical work through the low price of their labor, making subsistence difficult to procure by the poorer class of emigrants.

There was some conflict of testimony upon the question as to what is public opinion on the Pacific coast as to the desirability of the influx of Chinese; but it is fairly inferable from the evidence that, without very considerable exceptions, public opinion there is that Chinese immigration is exceedingly pernicious; that the presence of that element, perpetually alien in feeling and ideas, is a great disadvantage to the community.

This opinion is shared by some of the religious teachers in California, and very interesting testimony of the deleterious effects of Chinese immigration upon the morals of the Pacific coast will be found given by some of these persons. It is very clearly in evidence that the number of the Chinese on the Pacific coast is rapidly increasing, not by births, for there are few of these, but by importations, so that the same uneducated class is supplied perpetually.

The Chinese do not come to make their home in this country; their only purpose is to acquire what would be a competence in China and return there to enjoy it. While there is a constant and increasing incoming tide there is a constant outflow also, less in volume, of persons who have worked out specified years of servitude and made money enough to live upon in China, and who sever their connection with this country.

It further appears from the evidence that the Chinese do not desire to become citizens of this country, and have no knowledge of or appreciation for our institutions. Very few of them learn to speak our language. They do not desire the ballot, and there is danger that if they had it their "head-men" would control the sale of it in quantities large enough to determine any election. That it would be destructive to the Pacific States to put the ballot in their hands was very generally believed by the witnesses. Their want of knowledge of our language and institutions would prevent an intelligent exercise of suffrage; while their number in California at the present time is so great that they could control any election if the ballot was put into their hands. The number of adult Chinese is, at the present time, as great as that of all the voters in the State, or nearly reaching that number, and they increase more rapidly than the other adult population of the State. To admit these vast numbers of aliens to citizenship and the ballot would practically destroy republican institutions upon the Pacific coast, for the Chinese have no comprehension of any form of government but despotism, and have not the words in their own language to describe intelligibly the principles of our representative system.

It was proved before the committee that Chinese women in California are bought and sold for prostitution, and are treated worse than dogs; that they are held in a most revolting condition of slavery. It was further shown that the Chinese have a quasi-government among themselves, independent of our laws, authorizing the punishment of offenders against Chinese customs, even to the taking of life. It was further shown that violent hostilities exist between Chinamen from different parts of China, who, coming together in California by accident or otherwise, engage in deadly feuds and riots, to the disturbance of the public peace. Large numbers of them, notwithstanding the difficulty of conviction, owing to the looseness of the Chinese oath, occupy the State's prison and jails.

They are cruel and indifferent to their sick, sometimes turning them out to die, and the corpses of dead Chinamen and women are sometimes found in the streets by the policemen, where they have been left by their associates at night. The climatic conditions of San Francisco are unfavorable to the prevalence of pestilence, but it was in testimony that the conditions existing in the Chinese quarter of this city transferred to New York, Saint Louis, Cincinnati, New Orleans, or other large cities east of the Rocky Mountains, would make those cities uninhabitable. The Chinese quarter already extends over a considerable area in the heart of San Francisco, and is growing year by year. The progress is steady and constant, and the business portion of the city is already cut off by the Chinese quarter from a portion where are many of the most elegant residences.

Such Chinese quarters exist in all the cities and towns of the Pacific coast. The tide of Chinese immigration is gradually tending eastward, and before a quarter of a century the difficult question that now arises upon the Pacific coast will probably have to be met upon the banks of the Mississippi, and perhaps on the Ohio and Hudson. Many people of the Pacific coast believe that this influx of Chinese is a standing menace to republican institutions upon the Pacific and the existence there of Christian civilization.

From all the facts that they have gathered bearing upon the matter, considering fairly the testimony for and against the Chinese, the committee believe that this opinion is well founded. They believe that free institutions founded upon free schools and intelligence can only be maintained where based on intelligent and adequately paid labor. Adequate wages are needed to give self-respect to the laborer and the means of education to his children. Family-life is a great safeguard to our political institutions. Chinese immigration involves sordid wages, no public schools, and the absence of the family. We speak of the Chinese as they have exhibited themselves on the Pacific coast for twenty-five years past, and as they are there at the present time. They show few of the characteristics of a desirable population and many to be deprecated by any patriot.

This problem is too important to be treated with indifference. Congress should solve it, having due regard to any rights already accrued under existing treaties and to humanity. But it must be solved, in the judgment of the committee, unless our Pacific possessions are to be ultimately given over to a race alien in all its tendencies, which will make of it practically provinces of China rather than States of the Union.

The committee recommend that measures be taken by the Executive looking toward a modification of the existing treaty with China, confining it to strictly commercial purposes; and that Congress legislate to restrain the great influx of Asiatics to this country. It is not believed that either of these measures would be looked upon with disfavor by the Chinese government. Whether this is so or not, a duty is owing to the Pacific States and Territories which are suffering under a terrible scourge, but are patiently waiting for relief from Congress.

In pursuance of a resolution of the House of Representatives, passed August 15, 1876, directing the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay from the contingent fund the sum of $3,500 to the chairman, on the part of the House, of the joint select committee to investigate Chinese immigration, I herewith submit an account of the disbursements made in virtue of the same.

Voucher No. 1, stenographic work	$2,012 85
Voucher No. 2, traveling expenses	140 50
Voucher No. 3, board stenographers	224 00

WM. A. PIPER,
Chairman House Committee.

I have examined the aforegoing statement of account, and find the same correct.

CHARLES B. ROBERTS,
Chairman Committee Accounts.

Mr. MEADE. I ask unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as a part of the debate, some remarks in relation to the report made in regard to Chinese immigration.

There was no objection, and the leave was granted.

ELECTION IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as a part of the debates, some remarks touching the South Carolina election report.

There was no objection, and the leave was granted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 1223) which is a pension bill, be taken from the Speaker's table and the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that the Senate is at our doors.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I withdraw the request.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTES.

At twelve o'clock and thirteen minutes p. m., the Doorkeeper announced the Senate of the United States, who then, headed by their President pro tempore and accompanied by their Sergeant-at-Arms and Secretary, entered the Hall, the members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate took his seat as Presiding Officer of the joint meeting of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying a chair upon his left.

Senators INGALLS and ALLISON, the tellers appointed on the part of the Senate, and Mr. COOK and Mr. STONE, the tellers appointed on the part of the House, took their seats at the Clerk's desk, at which the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House also occupied seats.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint meeting of Congress for counting the electoral vote resumes its session. The two Houses having separated upon the submission to the commission of the objections to the certificate from the State of South Carolina, have reconvened to consider and determine the decision of that tribunal.

The decision, which is in writing, by a majority of the commission, and signed by the members agreeing therein, will now be read by the Secretary of the Senate and be entered in the Journal of each House.

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

ELECTORAL COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., February 27, A. D. 1876.

To the President of the Senate of the United States presiding in the meeting of the two Houses of Congress under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-president, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved January 29, A. D. 1877:

The electoral commission mentioned in said act, having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates, and papers accompanying the same, of the electoral votes for the State of South Carolina, and the objections thereto submitted to it under said act, now report that it has duly considered the same pursuant to said act and has by a majority of votes decided and does hereby decide that the votes of C. C. Bowen, J. Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnston, Timothy Hurley, W. B. Nash, Wilson Cook, and W. F. Myers, named in the certificate of D. H. Chamberlain, governor of said State, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificate submitted to the commission as aforesaid, and marked number one (1) N. C. by said commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely:

Seven (7) votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President; and Seven (7) votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice-President.

The commission has by a majority of votes also decided and does hereby decide and report that the seven persons first above named were duly appointed electors in and by the State of South Carolina.

The brief ground of this decision is that it appears, upon such evidence as by the Constitution and the law named in said act of Congress is competent and pertinent to the consideration of the subject, that the before-mentioned electors appear to have been lawfully appointed such electors of President and Vice-President of the United States for the term beginning March 4, A. D. 1877, of the State of South Carolina, and that they voted as such at the time and in the manner provided for by the Constitution of the United States and the law.

And the commission, as further ground for their decision, are of the opinion that the failure of the Legislature to provide a system for the registration of persons entitled to vote does not render nugatory all elections held under laws otherwise sufficient, though it may be the duty of the Legislature to enact such a law. If it were otherwise all government in that State is a usurpation, its officers without authority, and the social compact in that State is at an end.

That this commission must take notice that there is a government in South Carolina, republican in form, since its constitution provides for such a government, and it is and was on the day of appointing electors so recognized by the executive and by both branches of the legislative department of the Government of the United States.

That so far as this commission can take notice of the presence of the soldiers of the United States in the State of South Carolina during the election, it appears that they were placed there by the President of the United States to suppress insurrection, at the request of the proper authorities of the State.

And we are also of opinion that from the papers before us, it appears that the governor and secretary of state have certified under the seal of the State that the electors whose vote we have decided to be the lawful electoral vote of the State were duly appointed electors, which certificate, both by presumption by law and by the certificate of the rival claimants of the electoral office, was based upon the action of the State canvassers. There exists no power in this commission, and there exists none in the two Houses of Congress in counting the electoral vote, to inquire into the circumstances under which the primary vote for electors was given. The power of the Congress of the United States in its legislative capacity to inquire into the matters alleged, and to act upon the information so obtained, is a very different one from its power in the matter of counting the electoral vote. The votes to be counted are those presented by the State, and when ascertained and presented by the proper authorities of the State they must be counted.

The commission has also decided and does hereby decide by a majority of votes and reports that as a consequence of the foregoing and upon the grounds before stated the paper purporting to be a certificate of the electoral vote of said State of South Carolina signed by Theodore G. Barker, S. McGowan, John W. Harrington, John Isaac Ingram, William Wallace, John B. Erwin, and Robert Aldrich, marked No. 2 N. C. by the commission and herewith returned, is not the certificate of the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that they ought not to be counted as such.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any objections to the decision of the commission?

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. I send up an objection signed by Senators and Representatives, and along with it I present the evidence upon which the objection is founded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The member from Missouri [Mr. PHILIPS] having presented an objection, it will be read by the Clerk of the House.

The Clerk of the House read as follows:

The undersigned, Senators and Representatives, do hereby object to counting the votes cast by C. C. Bowen, J. Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnston, Timothy Hurley, W. B. Nash, Wilson Cook, and W. F. Myers, alleged electors of the State of South Carolina, in conformity to the decision of the electoral commission, and as reasons therefor assigned the following:

I.

Because no legal election was held in the State of South Carolina on the 7th day of November last past for presidential electors in compliance with section 3, article 8 of the constitution thereof requiring a registration of the electors of the State as a qualification to vote.

II.

Because in consequence of frauds practiced in said election, and the interference with and intimidation of the electors in said State by the Federal Government prior to and during said election, stationing in various parts of said State near the polling-places detachments of the Army of the United States, a full and free exercise of the right of suffrage was prevented, in consequence of which there was no lawful election had.

III.

Because in violation of the Constitution of the United States the Federal authorities, at the several polling-places in said State on the day of election, stationed over one thousand deputy marshals of the United States, who by their unlawful and arbitrary action in obedience to the unauthorized instructions from the Department of Justice, so interfered with the full and free exercise of the right of suffrage by the voters of said State that a fair election could not be and was not held in said State on the 7th day of November, 1876.

IV.

Because the certification of the election held by said electors on the 6th day of December, 1876, was not made by the lawfully constituted governor of said State.

V.

Because the said electoral commission, contrary to its duty and the authority vested in it by law, neglected and refused to inquire into the facts and allegations aforesaid, and their said decision is contrary to the law and the truth.

VI.

Because at the time of the pretended appointment of the said electors in the State of South Carolina, it was under duress from the power of the United States unlawfully exerted upon it, and said pretended appointments were made under such duress.

VII.

Because the certificate numbered 1 was and is void.

First. For irregularity in that the electors were not sworn, as by the constitution of the State of South Carolina they were required to be.

Second. The certificate does not state that said electors voted by ballot, as required by the Constitution of the United States.

Third. The certificate upon the envelope in which the said certificate and accompanying papers were inclosed was not the certificate required by the laws of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the decision of the commission?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I send up in duplicate an objection, signed by Senators and Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The member from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] submits an objection, which will be read by the Secretary of the Senate.

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

The undersigned, Senators and members of the House of Representatives, object to the counting of the electoral vote purporting to come from South Carolina, in conformity with the decision of the majority of the electoral commission, for the reason that the said electoral votes, as well as the votes of the people of said State at the presidential election on the 7th day of November last, were given under duress caused by the unlawful exercise of Federal power.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the decision? [After a pause.] If there be none, the Senate will now withdraw to its Chamber, that the two Houses separately may consider and determine the objections.

Accordingly (at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the Senate withdrew.

The Senate having withdrawn, the House was again called to order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House now take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. WOOD of New York. I hope not. Let us proceed with the count.

Mr. SPRINGER. If discussion is to be indulged in, I would like to say something on the subject myself.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 92, nays 170, not voting 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ashe, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Faulkner, Field, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Henkle, Hooker, Humphreys, Hunton, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lane, Lynde, Mackey, Maish, McMahon, Meade, Mills, Morrison, Mutchler, O'Brien, Payne, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Rea, Rice, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Miles Ross, Scales, Schumaker, Sheakley, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stanton, Stenger, Stone, Terry, Thompson, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Warner, Whitthorne, Wigginton, and Wike—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Bell, Blair, Blount, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Buttz, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Egbert, Evans, Felton, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gause, Goode, Goodin, Hale, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Holman, Hoskins, House, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Levy, Lord, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Morgan, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, Odell, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Reagan, John Reilly, John Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Seelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Stowell, Strait, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Thomas, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—170.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Bass, Beebe, Bland, Bright, Durand, Ellis, Gibson, Robert Hamilton, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hopkins, King, Lewis, Luttrell, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Money, Purman, James B. Reilly, Roberts, Schleicher, Stephens, Waldron, Ward, Wheeler, and Jere N. Williams—28.

So the motion for a recess was not agreed to.

Before the vote was announced,

Mr. WHITTHORNE stated that his colleague, Mr. ATKINS, who was absent on a conference committee, would if present vote in favor of taking a recess.

Mr. O'BRIEN and Mr. SHEAKLEY, (simultaneously.) I move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. HOSKINS. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I make a point of order on the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that the motion is not in order.

Mr. SHEAKLEY. I wish to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOSKINS. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. SHEAKLEY. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I ask the Speaker whether he entertains the appeal?

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the appeal, of course.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I submit that it should not be entertained because it is a dilatory motion, made evidently for the purpose of delay.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware that he might in his discretion decline to entertain this apppeal; but the House may as well say promptly whether the Speaker is right or wrong.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is not the question whether the appeal shall be sustained debatable? [Cries of "No! No!" "Vote! Vote!"]

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman who took the appeal is still on the floor.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I call for the yeas and nays on laying the appeal on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHEAKLEY] will yield to me——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to give my reasons for voting to sustain the appeal taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SHEAKLEY.]

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. EDEN. Is this debate in order pending the motion to lay on the table?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order on an appeal where the original proposition upon which the decision appealed from is based was not debatable.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would like to raise a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I shall have to ask the indulgence of the Chair for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will indulge the gentleman any reasonable time.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The point is this: that the motion I made for a recess till half past seven o'clock this evening should have been entertained by the Chair; but as I understand the Chair has overruled it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair the other day decided that point and sees no reason now to change it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. At the same time I should be indulged by the Chair in stating briefly my reason.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is willing to indulge the gentleman to any reasonable extent.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. I object to anything out of order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is not in the nature of debate, and I shall use no argument to convince members the motion is in order, but shall merely refer to the facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask that the gentleman from Maryland may be allowed reasonable time to state his point of order.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. He must speak to the question.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The point of order I raise is this——

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have objected and now again object to anything out of order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. In the electoral bill, beyond all question, we have the power to take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning. There is no doubt or dispute about that. Now, the greater always includes the less, and if we have the right to take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow we must have the right to take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It may be that the House has no desire to take a recess for a longer time than ten o'clock to-morrow, and it may also be, as it is in this case, that a large majority of the House interested in the discussion of the question in relation to the objection to counting the vote of South Carolina——

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Is this discussion in order?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Those so interested desire time for reflection and consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects, and the gentleman from Maryland is not in order.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. For the fourth time I object to anything out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman from Kentucky will not suppose the Chair did not hear him, but because of the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair it has been his desire to hear upon what possible grounds it could be based.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. The Chair twice announced his decision, and further stated that he would not change it, and afterward that debate was not in order, and I have repeatedly objected to any debate and to anything not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects, and the gentleman from Maryland will resume his seat.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise to a point of order, and to object to hearing the ground of the point of order is indelicate and improper, because the Speaker desires to be heard through the members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to be heard except in his rulings.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope refusal will not be persisted in to giving gentlemen the opportunity to state briefly the reasons of the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky to allow debate for ten minutes——

Mr. EDEN. I object.

Mr. KEHR. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER, (continuing.) On a question which is to determine whether this House has power enough left——

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Everybody objects.

Mr. SPRINGER, (continuing.) Whether we have power enough left to prevent the consummation of this great wrong——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is violating the rules of the House in insisting on debate when objection is made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask gentlemen to hear me on a subject of so great importance.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the gentleman.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Then let us have the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the appeal upon the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. There is so much confusion in the Hall we cannot hear the names of the members as they are called.

The SPEAKER. Until the House comes to order the public business will be suspended.

Mr. WALLING. I ask whether the roll-call has been commenced?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. WALLING. Is it competent to offer an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois at this time?

The SPEAKER. Nothing is in order but the roll-call.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 184, nays 61, not voting 45; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Buttz, Cabell, Candler, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, Clymer, Conger, Cook, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Egbert, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Flye, Forney, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gause, Goode, Goodin, Hale, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Holman, Hopkins, Hoskins, House, Hubbell, Hunter, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lord, Lynch, Mackey, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Morgan, Mutchler, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, Odell, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Payne, Phelps, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Schleicher, Seelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Stowell, Swann, Strait, Teese, Thomas, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I.

Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Watterson, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—184.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, John H. Bagley, jr., Beebe, Blackburn, Boone, Bradford, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Collins, Cowan, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Finley, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henkle, Hooker, Humphreys, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lane, Levy, Luttrell, Lynde, McFarland, Meade, Mills, O'Brien, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Rice, Riddle, Miles Ross, Scales, Schumaker, Sheakley, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stanton, Stone, Terry, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Walling, Walsh, Warner, Whitthorne, and Wigginton—61.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Bass, Bright, Buckner, Campbell, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Cox, Culberson, Douglas, Durand, Ellis, Field, Gibson, Gunter, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Hartzell, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, King, Lewis, Maish, McMahon, Metcalfe, Milliken, Money, Morrison, William A. Phillips, Purman, James B. Reilly, Roberts, Sayler, Stenger, Stephens, Tarbox, Thompson, Waldron, Gilbert C. Walker, Ward, Warren, Wheeler, White, Jere N. Williams, and Wilshire—45.

So the appeal was laid upon the table.

The Clerk proceeded to read the list of names.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I ask that by unanimous consent the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. WALLING and others objected.

The reading of the list was completed, and the result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I now move to proceed to a consideration of the report of the electoral commission in the South Carolina case.

The SPEAKER. That is the regular order.

Mr. SHEAKLEY. I move that the House now take a recess till ten o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain that motion.

Mr. SHEAKLEY. Business having intervened——

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the motion.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would like to know the reason. We are entitled under the law to make this motion.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I rise to a question which I suppose is in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand the Chair to decide that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHEAKLEY] is not in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the motion.

Mr. WADDELL. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. Some one has taken away from the desk or borrowed for the moment the decision of the electoral commission. The Chair requests that it be returned to the desk.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope it has been taken to some remote part of the earth, whence it will not be brought back again.

Mr. WALLING. And that the commission have leave to go with it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the decision of the electoral commission.

The Clerk commenced to read the decision.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHEAKLEY] made a motion that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman understands also that the Chair declined to entertain the motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was about to state that—that the Chair declined to entertain the motion. It seems to me it is unusual for the Chair to refuse to entertain any motion which is provided for by the parliamentary rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires——

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Chair will pardon me, I wish to say it is the duty of the Chair to entertain any motion that may be made in a parliamentary form. It is the privilege of the Chair to decide it out of order, and upon that decision the House may take an appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has allowed great latitude in reference to this matter. The Chair, in fact, was not bound to entertain the appeal as made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SHEAKLEY,] and could have cited former decisions to sustain him in that position; notably, the decision made by the then Speaker in 1869, when the occupant of the chair at that time stated that he declined to entertain the appeal on the well-known ground that when a point of order is once decided it cannot again be renewed, although additional reasons may be assigned for it.

Mr. SPRINGER. There has been no point of order on this question for a recess.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided, he thinks twice, the same point of order. But the Chair was desirous that the House might have an opportunity of expressing its opinion upon the position which he took in reference to that question. The House has now decided in accordance with the decision of the Chair, and the Chair for that reason declines to entertain the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is this: I state the question with full deference to the decision of the Chair——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If the motion to take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow is not in order—and I presume that is the reason why the Chair refuses to entertain it—when will it be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say to the House that he does not, of course, know what the intention of these motions is. He has only to look at the effect of them. The effect of these motions is dilatory, is delay. That is all that the Chair looks at—the effect of the motions. He criticises in no manner whatever either the intention or the motive of anyone.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to say, as nobody on this side of the House desires delay, [laughter,] we do not object to the decision of the Chair. [Great laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the decision of the commission.

Mr. SPRINGER. The point of order to which I rose has not yet been decided. It is this: that it is the duty of the Chair to entertain any parliamentary motion that is submitted; that it is the privilege of the Chair to decide the motion out of order, and that it is the privilege of the House to sustain or overrule that decision. I desire the Chair to give a decision on the point of order, that the House may exercise its prerogative of determining whether the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in order or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has declined to entertain the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. And everybody understood the Chair but the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the decision of the Chair, and that it is such a decision as may be appealed from, as I understand it. Therefore, not desiring to offend the Chair——

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. I object to further debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. But standing on my rights as a representative of the people I respectfully appeal from that decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair declines to entertain the appeal.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will appeal from the decision of the Chair to the people, who have elected a President of the United States who is now about to be counted out under this ruling.

The SPEAKER. In that particular the fullest sympathy of the Speaker is with the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I know that very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will resume the reading of the decision.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the decision.

The Clerk then read the objections.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. I now ask that the testimony accompanying the objections be read.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I hold in my hand the report of the testimony of the South Carolina case.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I object to the reading on the ground that there are twelve hundred and sixty-six pages of the report and testimony, which, at ten pages an hour, will take over five days to read. The object of calling for the reading of it is therefore intended to defeat the count altogether.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The Chair will submit the question to the House. The rule is that—

When the reading of a paper is called for and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House.

The Chair will submit the question to the House whether this testimony shall be read or not.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I repeat that it would take five days to read it.

[Loud cries of "No debate!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will listen to no debate, but now submits the question to the House whether this testimony shall be read.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 90, noes 138.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, and Mr. WALLING called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put; and there were—yeas 87, nays 175, not voting 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Andrew H. NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Blount, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object.

The Clerk completed the reading of the roll-call; and the result was announced as above recorded.

So the House refused to permit the testimony to be read.

Mr. WALLING. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to allow the testimony to be read.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. STANTON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. HUNTON. I want a division of the question so that we may vote first on the motion to reconsider and then on the motion to lay upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] moves to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to hear the testimony read, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] moves to lay that motion on the table, and the question is first upon the motion to lay on the table. The question is not divisible in any way the Chair knows of.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. How did the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] vote upon this question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio voted with the majority.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. WOOD, of New York; and on a division there were ayes 150, noes not counted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 73, not voting 40; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Walker, Walsh, Wheeler, and Young—40.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

At the conclusion of the roll-call,

Mr. MACDOUGALL said: I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. WALLING and Mr. RICE objected.

The Clerk read the list of names, and the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I move that parts one and two of the testimony be read.

The SPEAKER. The House has already refused to have the testimony read. The greater includes the less, and therefore the Chair rules that the motion of the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I move that the report of the committee be read.

The SPEAKER. What committee?

Mr. FRANKLIN. The report of the committee on the election in South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. That report is not before the House, and can be read only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a part of the papers sent up with the objection filed by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHILIPS.]

The SPEAKER. And the House has refused to have those papers read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Non constat, that the House may not desire to have a portion of the papers read.

The SPEAKER. The House having refused to have the testimony and the papers sent up to the desk read at this time, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] surely will not say that it is competent now for the Chair to entertain a motion to read a portion of those papers.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is the report of a committee of this House, the reading of which I suppose will not be objected to.

The SPEAKER. The real difficulty in this matter, the Chair desires to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] is the law. The law is binding upon the Chair. The Chair had nothing to do with the reporting of the law, but the Chair is bound to abide by the terms of the law.

Mr. SPRINGER. To that I have not objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes not, for the gentleman himself reported the law in part.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I call for the regular order.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire to offer a resolution.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to make——

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] to open the debate.

Mr. COCHRANE. I desire to offer a resolution. Is there anything before the House?

The SPEAKER. There is. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COCHRANE] himself notified the Chair that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] would open the debate, and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Mississippi as now entitled to the floor.

Mr. COCHRANE. I desire to submit a resolution, in order to bring the matter properly before the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the objections to the decision of the electoral commission upon the electoral votes of South Carolina be sustained by the House, and that said votes be not counted.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] desire to submit a resolution?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I think it will save time to take the vote on the resolution which has just been read.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Pending that resolution I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will listen to it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I respect the sentiment just now announced by the Chair, that the Speaker was acting under the law. Therefore, under the law, I desire to inquire whether it is not now in order for the House to take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has answered that question many times to-day personally and at least once publicly.

Mr. O'BRIEN. We have had intervening business since the motion was made to take a recess. The law gives us the right to take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock. I do not make the motion for delay, but merely in order that the House may have time for reflection and consideration.

The SPEAKER. The entire spirit of this law, and in fact the letter of it, which binds the Chair, is that dilatory motions cannot be entertained by the Chair.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not make the motion for any such purpose.

The SPEAKER. The motion is of a dilatory character in effect.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I appeal to the Speaker to state whether he is willing from his high place to say that there are members of this House [cries of "Regular order!"] in favor of dilatory motions? I inquire at this time, as I inquired an hour ago, whether the motion I have indicated is in order. If it is, I desire to submit it.

The SPEAKER. It is not; the Chair cannot entertain the motion.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Very well; I submit to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, the objection presented to the consideration of the House against the finding of the commission in the case of the electoral vote of South Carolina is predicated primarily upon the objection which has been presented generally to the action of the commission in refusing to go into the merits of these cases. By the action of the House, acting separately for itself, the commission was invested with authority to act as computers of the electoral vote and judges of what constituted "the true and legal electoral vote of a State." Failing to take jurisdiction of the subject-matter referred to them to the extent intended by the spirit and language of the law creating the commission, they have, in my judgment, failed to discharge the duty which devolved upon them, and, in the language of the gentleman from New York who addressed the House the other day upon a similar finding, the parties who have given them this authority are bound neither in law nor in morals to abide by the finding of the commission.

They were constituted under the terms of an act so plain and simple in its language, so obvious in its import and purpose, that it required the skill of lawyers to detect anything else in it than this plain and simple meaning. The second section of the act, which clothed the commission with power to decide in the case of dual returns from a State, declares that "all such returns and papers shall thereupon be submitted to the judgment and decision of the commission as to which is the true and lawful electoral vote of such State." That was the question and the sole question, under that clause of the act, which was submitted to the consideration of the commission—"to ascertain what constituted the true and lawful electoral vote of a State."

Again, in the same section it was provided that they "shall constitute a commission for the decision of all questions upon or in respect of such double returns named in this section." I call attention further to the oath of office prescribed in this section, by which each member of the commission swears, "I will impartially examine and consider all questions submitted to the commission of which I am a member."

The law further provides that "when there shall be more than one such certificate or paper, as the certificates and papers from such State shall so be opened, (excepting duplicates of the same return,) they shall be read by the tellers, and thereupon the President of the Senate shall call for objections." And when all such objections have been received "the papers, with the objections, proofs, and depositions, shall be sent to the commission." For what purpose? In order, in the language of the law, that they may decide—

Whether any and what votes from such State are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and how many and what persons were duly appointed electors in such State, and may therein take into view such petitions, depositions, and other papers, if any, as shall, by the Constitution and now existing law, be competent and pertinent in such consideration.

Suppose, Mr. Speaker, it should be alleged that the great seal of the State affixed to the certificate is a forgery, or that the signature of the governor is a forgery. Does the commission mean to say that the two Houses could not inquire into that, or that the commission, under the law of its existence, could not inquire into such frauds? or if the great seal of State be genuine, and the signature of the governor be genuine, but the return of the canvassers be false and fraudulent, that the certificate of the governor can sanctify the fraud and thus cheat the people out of the "true and legal electors voted for?"

I say, sir, that if it had not been distinctly and fairly understood by the terms of this act that the commission should be clothed with power to investigate what constituted "the true and legal electoral votes of a State" where there were dual returns and a dispute of what constituted a real electoral vote, the commission would never have been created. It could not have received a dozen votes on this side of the House. That commission stands with reference to the two Houses precisely in the attitude of a commissioner in chancery to whom an account had been referred to be settled between contesting parties, one of them alleging that there was fraud in the account and the other denying it. If such a commissioner should undertake to refer the matter back to the tribunal which clothed him with authority without settling the very question for the decision of which he was constituted a commissioner, he would be in a similar position to this commission to-day.

More than that, Mr. Speaker; in this very case of South Carolina which we are now to vote upon the question was whether or not South Carolina had been overrun with troops by the order of the Federal Government and of the Department of Justice, so as to suppress the actual vote of her people. Yet, when you come to the finding of the commission, upon which we are now passing, you find a most extraordinary statement embraced in that finding. After passing upon the question of the failure of registration; after passing upon the question whether there was in South Carolina a republican form of government such as the Constitution guarantees to all the States, the republican party having said with reference to Louisiana in 1873 that her electoral vote should not be counted as she had no republican government;) after passing upon all these questions and coming to the consideration of the main objection, so ably and eloquently presented to the commission by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] and Mr. COCHRANE, of Pennsylvania, and by the counsel in the case, what do the commission say? They use these words, and I invite the attention of the House to the terms of the finding: That—

So far as the commission can take notice of the presence of the soldiers of the United States in the State of South Carolina during the election, it appears that they were placed there by the President of the United States to suppress insurrection, at the request of the proper authorities of the State.

How did it "appear" to the commission? How could it "appear" except upon evidence, taken on the one side and the other?

Yet, sir, when the objectors on the part of the House undertook to show by competent and satisfactory proof that these troops were not there according to the terms of the Constitution and the law, were not there upon the call of the Legislature of the State, were not there under the forms of law—when that proposition was made before the commission, they declined to entertain it. I say therefore that it is palpable that the commission have refused to take jurisdiction of the subject-matter which was submitted to them in this case.

I am not here to deal in epithets with regard to that commission. I am not here to characterize it as my distinguished friend from New York did, as having made a finding which is binding neither in law nor in morals. I am not here to refer to this commission, as did the caustic and eloquent gentleman from Missouri, as infamous in its partisan findings. I do not propose so to speak of it; but I do propose to say that in the case of South Carolina, as in the case of Florida and the case of Louisiana and the case of Oregon, they have refused to perform the function with which the House by its separate vote invested them. They have refused to take evidence upon the subject-matter submitted to them; and therefore the House is not bound by the action of a tribunal which has refused to consider the very question submitted to it, and to take evidence upon the very subject which the House intrusted and confided to it.

This is patent, not only from the language of the law, but it is manifest that was the opinion of the joint committee of the Senate and the House, composed of seven of the House and seven of the Senate, in a report which they made with reference to this bill; for they said—and I do not presume they undertook to deceive this House or to deceive the Senate when they made that report—they said in that report:

All will agree that the votes named in the Constitution are the constitutional votes of the States, and not other; and when they have been found and identified, there is nothing left to be disputed or decided—all the rest is the mere clerical work of summing up the numbers, which, being done, the Constitution itself declares the consequence. This bill, then, is only directed to ascertaining for the purpose, and in aid of the counting, what are the constitutional votes of the respective States; and whatever jurisdiction exists for such purpose, the bill only regulates the method of exercising it.

Further they said in that report:

However important it may be whether one citizen or another shall be the Chief Magistrate for a prescribed period, upon just theories of civil institutions it is of far greater moment that the will of the people, lawfully expressed in the choice of that officer, shall be ascertained and carried into effect in a lawful way.

That was what this committee of conference of the two Houses reported to this House was the purpose and the object of this bill. At one time we find the commission receiving evidence as to the ineligibility of an elector, and at another time we find them refusing it; and promulgating the strange, startling doctrine that a person holding an office of "trust and profit" under the Government of the United States may be appointed or elected (for they are convertible terms) an elector though the Constitution expressly says that he "shall not."

The third ground of objection to the finding of the commission is in these words:

III.

For that the Federal Government prior to and during the election on the 7th day of November, 1876, without authority of law, stationed in various parts of the said State of South Carolina at or near the polling-places detachments of the Army of the United States, by whose presence the full exercise of the right of suffrage was prevented, and by reason whereof no legal or free election was or could be had.

The commission refused to receive evidence as to this objection, and yet decide "that it appears to them" that the call for troops, and the use, or rather the abuse of them, in the late election in South Carolina was constitutional and rightful, and in accordance with the laws, and that too in face of the provisions of existing law making it a penal offense to station troops at or near a voting-polls on the day of election.

In support of this view I read the following section of the Revised Statutes of the United States:

No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to keep the peace at the polls.

Section 5528 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides:

Every officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls, shall be fined not more than $5,000, and suffer imprisonment at hard labor not less than three months nor more than five years.

Section 5532 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides as follows:

Every person convicted of any of the offenses specified in the five preceding sections, shall, in addition to the punishments therein severally prescribed, be disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the United States.

Who pretends there were enemies to the United States to be overcome in South Carolina, or that troops were necessary to preserve the peace at the polls? No, sirs; these troops were sent to South Carolina in the interest of party, and not of the country. The gallant officers and men of the Army were prostituted to a mere police force, to carry the State for the republican party, and to support and abet the vast army of United States deputy marshals, who were scattered all over the State by the illegal order of the Department of Justice in the interest of the same unscrupulous party. And to-day the gallant Wade Hampton and W. D. Simpson, the legally elected governor and lieutenant-governor, are deprived of the power and authority to restore peace, quiet, and prosperity to the grand old State by the presence of these troops sustaining a usurper defeated by the clearly ascertained will of the people of South Carolina.

Now, sir, if this commission, acting within the powers and duties conferred and imposed upon it, where there were dual returns from a State, had proceeded to take proof to ascertain who were "the true and legal electors of the State," I am free to admit that I should have been prepared to stand by their findings, however unjust it may have been. But when they refuse to receive any evidence of such fraud alleged or of illegality and disqualification of the electors decided by them to be chosen, I hold that the House is not bound by their action, and that they have failed, refused, and neglected to perform the very duty they were created to discharge, and that in effect they have done nothing more than the opponents of the bill claimed was within the powers and duties of the Presiding Officer of the Senate, namely, to open and count the electoral vote.

This commission was created and grew out of the difference of opinion existing as to the powers and duties of the Presiding Officer of the Senate in reference to counting the electoral vote, and never would have had existence but upon the idea that it was, in equity and good conscience, bound under the law to take proof wherever there was an allegation of fraud, and to find who were "the true and legal electors" chosen by the people at the ballot-box in the late election.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. Speaker, I was one of those who entertained the opinion that there was no power under the Constitution to create this electoral commission. I also opposed the passage of the bill creating it as not a measure of practical legislation. I am now called upon to defend the action of the commission against the assaults of a portion of those who clamored for its creation.

What has this electoral commission done to bring upon it this great reproach? It has decided the principal question which was submitted to it for its determination: the question whether the two Houses of Congress, acting separately or acting conjointly, have any power under the Constitution and the laws to go behind the electoral certificate coming from the State in the mode provided by such constitution and laws. But for the difference between the two Houses upon this question, there would have been no occasion for creating this commission. It was the first and paramount question for its determination, upon which there was a radical and irreconcilable difference between the two parties.

How has it determined it? It has decided it in accordance with the uniform practice of the Government from the adoption of the Constitution to this time. It has decided it according to the unanimous judgment of both Houses of Congress in the proposed legislation in the year 1800.

They inserted this proviso:

Provided always, That no petition or exception shall be granted, allowed, or considered by the grand committee which has for its object to dispute, draw into question the number of votes given for an elector in any of the States, or the fact whether an elector was chosen by a majority of votes in his State or district.

I think the members of the commission, whether they belong to this House or to the Senate, or whether they come from the Supreme Court, can well afford, when they are charged with being perjurers and corrupt men, to repose for their defense upon the action of the statesmen of the year 1800, precisely in accordance with the decision the commission has now made.

Mr. Speaker, when this decision was announced, there was an end, practically, to the electoral controversy of the year 1876, and gentlemen on the other side, if they had acted fairly, as a portion of them do seem inclined to, upon the pledges made to secure the adoption of this electoral commission, would have withheld any further opposition to the electoral count except, perhaps, in the case of the State of Louisiana.

And yet what is the history of the action of these objectors down to the present time? We have had objections not only to the vote of the State of Louisiana, which were perhaps justified by the constitutional question there raised, but to the State of Michigan; so frivolous they were unworthy of notice. We have had objections to Nevada equally frivolous. We have had objections to Pennsylvania equally frivolous. We have had objections to the count of the electoral vote of the State of Oregon, so weak that the entire fifteen members of the commission decided that the pretense upon which that objection was made was utterly without foundation.

And now we are brought to the question arising in the State of South Carolina, and what are the facts surrounding this case? On the first day of the session a committee was appointed to go to that State for the purpose of investigating the question of its electoral vote. I had the honor to be one of the members of that committee. I have before me the report of the majority, and I know what is the report of the minority, and the committee are unanimous in deciding that upon the face of the returns the electoral vote of the State of South Carolina was given to Hayes and Wheeler.

Upon that committee was one of the honorable gentlemen [Mr. ABBOTT] now composing the electoral commission. He has himself sent to this House over his own signature a report that the Hayes electors, upon the face of the returns, have 851 majority in the State of South Carolina, and yet he voted in the commission yesterday to reject the vote of that State for Hayes, after the fifteen commissioners had decided the vote of the Tilden electors should not be counted, thus voting to disfranchise the State, and his friends here now clamor and talk about partisanship in the action of the commission. Another member of that committee was the honorable gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHILIPS,] who this morning rose in this House and asked that all the evidence which has been taken in that case should be read at this time, which would have occupied from three to four days, and yet he complains when we say his object is to delay the electoral count!

Mr. Speaker, the conduct of those who are struggling by these technical objections and efforts at delay to defeat the consummation of this count will admit of but one interpretation. The motives which prompt it are fairly indicated in what was said in the meeting at Tallmadge Hall in this city last evening:

Hon. R. M. T. Hunter, of Virginia, believed it was their duty to stop the count; ANYTHING TO BEAT HAYES!

This appeal, sir, comes from the men who four years ago abandoned the high position theretofore occupied by the democratic party of the nation and went about in disregard of its cherished principles, clamoring for the support of a man who had done more than any other man then living to traduce the party and vilify its record, under the rallying cry, "ANYTHING TO BEAT GRANT!" Now the shout is, "Anything to beat Hayes!" It was so announced, as I have quoted, in the democratic indignation meeting in Tallmadge Hall.

Those who make these complaints talk about fraud in the face of the fact that $50,000 was offered to purchase an electoral vote for Tilden in South Carolina; that $100,000 was offered to purchase another vote for Tilden in Louisiana; and that $17,000 was expended for the manufacture of one out of Cronin's nose in the State of Oregon. The "Gobble" dispatches have all come to light. The cipher dispatches have all been proved and interpreted. They point to a private office at No. 15 Gramercy Park, New York, as naturally as the needle points to the pole. And yet Mr. Tilden says he did not do it. Pelton says he did not do it. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. KELLY] says he did not do it. Patrick, if he were here, would I have no doubt swear he did not do it. It is a queer freak of the lightning. It did it itself. [Laughter.]

And thus, Mr. Speaker, the electoral count, over which so much ado is being made, has come down at last to this complexion. It reminds me of a colloquy between two editors in the city of New York on Saturday last. One of them said to his companion, "What do you think of this electoral commission, and what is going to be the result?" "I do not know," replied the other, "and I do not care much. It has come to be only a strife and controversy between eighty thousand office-holders on the one hand and five hundred thousand office-seekers on the other." The gentlemen on this floor who imagine or presume that the people are going to take notice of their factious opposition to this proceeding in any other way than to condemn it, mistake the obvious result of the course of action which they have adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had adopted a resolution that the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of South Carolina stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The message further announced that the Senate was now ready to meet the House to proceed with the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. GOODE. No gentleman upon this floor supported the bill creating the electoral commission more cordially and earnestly than I did. No gentleman here is more willing to accept his full share of the responsibility attaching to the creation of that commission. No gentleman here or elsewhere was more grievously disappointed when it became apparent that a majority of that commission were unwilling to hear and determine the matters submitted to them according to the truth and the very right of the case. I supported the bill in the interest of peace, of law, and of order. I believed, whatever might be said of Senators and Representatives, that five judges of the Supreme Court might be found who would be willing and able to rise superior to considerations of party and of section and to decide the question in the fear of God and in the spirit of the oath which they were required to take.

But, sir, the question now arises, what shall be done by the representatives of the people in this great public emergency? I answer unhesitatingly that we must do unto others as we would have them do unto us under like circumstances; that we must accord to the republican party what as a party we would unanimously have demanded if the decision had been favorable to us and adverse to them. If the pound of flesh must be paid, and Shylock will have it, let him have it, because it is so nominated in the bond; but let him see to it that in taking the forfeit he shall not spill one drop of Christian blood. This bill was passed by democratic votes. It was hailed by the country as not only a peace measure, but a democratic measure. And, sir, my deliberate judgment is that it would be not only unwise, but unmanly, to attempt to reverse the decision by any indirect method or by any clamorous complaints. In my judgment, it is the dictate of wisdom, of policy, of manhood, and of honor to stand by the compact into which we have deliberately entered, and to execute in good faith the law which we have made. So much on that point.

Now, sir, as to the matter under consideration. The time was, in the golden age of the Republic, when the voice of South Carolina was potential in these legislative halls. The names of her Lowndes, her Pinckney, her Rutledge, her Hayne, her MacDuffie, her Calhoun, her Legare, and other illustrious sons will be cherished as household words in the land so long as liberty has a votary or the nobler attributes of humanity find a location in the breasts of our people. To-day South Carolina is voiceless here, so far as the intellect, the intelligence, the real worth of that once proud State are concerned.

The harp that once through Tara's halls
The soul of music shed,
Now hangs as mute on Tara's walls
As if that soul were dead.

Louisiana and Florida, through their noble Representatives on this floor, have been heard in eloquent and indignant protest against the grievous wrong which has been inflicted upon them, and

Against the deep damnation of their taking off.

So far as those young Commonwealths are concerned, the deed has been done, the books have been closed, the fiat of the electoral commission has gone forth, and now the lifting of the curtain in the closing act of the drama discloses to the gaze of forty millions of freemen South Carolina, one of the original thirteen States, sitting, like Niobe, all tears, mute and voiceless in her woe, with manacles on her limbs and the hand of the despot upon her throat.

Sir, I announce it as a fundamental proposition, upon which I wish to invoke the deliberate judgment of the American people, that on this roll-call of States in the selection of Chief Magistrate the vote of no State should be counted which has been carried at the point of the bayonet; and if the enunciation of that proposition does not touch a responsive chord in the breasts of the American people, then is their glory departed and the blood of the Saxon no longer courses in their veins.

If military interference on the part of the Executive with the freedom of elections in the States of this Union shall be permitted to go unchallenged by the representatives of the people and to pass into history as a precedent, then it is useless to deny the fact that the public liberties are seriously imperiled. Edmund Burke said:

It is by lying dormant a long time or being at first very rarely exercised that arbitrary power steals upon a people.

No greater danger could possibly threaten us than the interposition of the military arm of the Government in the conduct of elections. The voices of the past, the traditions of the mother country, and the warnings of the fathers of the Republic, all furnish beacon-lights to guide us upon this subject.

In the reign of George II, the British Parliament enacted a law that no troops should come within two miles of any place except the capital or a garrisoned town during an election. And when the military had been called out to quell an alleged riot at Westminster election in 1741 in was resolved "that the presence of a regular body of armed soldiers at an election of members to serve in Parliament is a high infringement of the liberties of the subjects, a manifest violation of the freedom of election and an open defiance of the laws and constitution of this kingdom;" and the House of Commons ordered the persons concerned to attend the house where they were compelled to submit to a severe reprimand from the speaker. And so cautious was George Washington in the exercise of the military power while he was President that he would not even call out the militia to put down the whisky insurgents in the State of Pennsylvania, who had been hardy enough to perpetrate acts which amounted to treason, being overt acts of levying war against the United States, without first sending commissioners to represent to them "how painful an idea it is to exercise such a power, and that it is the earnest wish of the President to render it unnecessary by those endeavors which humanity or love of peace and tranquility and the happiness of his fellow-citizens dictate."

What are the facts in regard to South Carolina? We have seen her State government overthrown, her Legislative Assembly dissolved, and an alien adventurer installed as her governor by the power of the Federal bayonet. We have seen her patrimonial estate confiscated by the hungry vultures who have flocked there to feed and fatten on her vitals. We have seen the mandate of her supreme court nullified by the simple edict of a Federal judge, who has exhibited all the subservience and servility of a Jeffries without any of his talent or ability. We have seen her proud-spirited, but helpless and unarmed people disfranchised and subjected to the arbitrary rule of military masters. We have heard the wail of agony and of woe as they reel and stagger under the grievous load of a burdensome taxation and cry out in bitter agony of soul, "How long, O Lord, how long!"

The testimony of our committee shows that in the recent campaign and on the day of election there were United States troops posted all over that State; that they were sent there, without legal excuse, to control the election, to overawe the people, and intimidate them in the exercise of the elective franchise. It shows that even while this Congress has been in session the American people have seen the State-house at Columbia filled by soldiers of the Regular Army, with fixed bayonets, guarding the entrance to its halls, while the corporal of the guard inspected and decided upon the credentials of the members. They have seen an armed soldiery employed for the illegal and unconstitutional purpose of sustaining a bogus governor and a usurping Legislature, against the solemn judgment of the supreme court, composed of republican judges. And, as if to cap the climax of the iniquity and to fatigue the indignation of the American people, we have had issued by the President of the United States within the last few days an imperial edict forbidding the citizen soldiers of South Carolina to assemble peaceably for the purpose of celebrating the birthday and commemorating the virtues of the Father of his Country.

And all this was done that order might reign in Warsaw, and upon the ridiculous assumption that it was necessary to preserve the public peace. Mr. Speaker, under a full sense of the responsibility resting upon me, I declare in the presence of this House and the country that the real disturbers of the public peace in South Carolina have been General Grant and his coadjutors, while the only promoters of the public peace, have been that Chevalier Bayard, that king of men, Wade Hampton and his devoted followers. [Applause.]

I have, I believe, but a minute and a a half left and I will yield that time to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHILIPS,] who had the courtesy to yield his place in the debate to myself.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. Having lost my place in the discussion, I do not wish to interject my speech at this point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that any time which is not consumed by the members speaking will be reserved so as to give an opportunity to other gentlemen to be heard, and the Chair reserves the minute and a half not occupied by the gentleman from Virginia for that purpose.

Mr. LAWRENCE. If I could shorten this debate and induce the House to vote upon the resolution before us, I would willingly consent to be silent. But I know very well that two hours will be consumed in debate whether I speak or not, and hence I will occupy ten minutes of the time. We are confronted with a great question, and it becomes us here and now to meet it in a spirit of patriotism and, if we can, with a purpose which shall fill the measure of statesmanship. Shall a State of this Union be disfranchised and denied any share in determining who shall be President and Vice-President of the United States? This is the question which meets us now. I implore gentlemen upon the other side of the House to pause before they set a precedent which will invite the action of Congress to go into a State of this Union to investigate the matter of its election and then say to that State that it has not been conducted according to our liking and that therefore it shall have no share in the election of President and Vice-President of the United States. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] who first spoke upon this question to the result which may follow the decision of the House. If this House can make inquiry now whether an election has been interfered with by the soldiers of the United States in South Carolina, can it not in years to come equally make inquiry whether the votes of the "bull-dozed" districts of his own State may fail to represent the wishes of the people and should therefore be rejected from the count when the Houses of Congress may come to ascertain how the vote of the State has been given for President and Vice-President?

Let me ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] whether he is willing that we shall set a precedent now by which at the next presidential election we may go into that State and by proof ascertain whether the vote given in the city of New York was fairly obtained, was a fair representation of the wishes of the people, or whether there was repeating and ballot-box-stuffing and other election frauds, and if this should be ascertained by the action of Congress that the vote of the State should then be thrown out for that reason? Sir, if such a doctrine as this is once established, the election of President forever hereafter may not depend upon the returns which shall be sent up from the States, but it may be controlled by the action of Congress; and a party majority in the two Houses of Congress may really and practically elect the President of their choice, whatever may have been the returns of the election sent up from the States.

I know some of the objections that are made to the vote of South Carolina. It is said that troops of the United States were there on the day of election. How many soldiers were there? The State has thirty-two counties, with four hundred and ninety-one voting precincts and polling-places. By the census of 1875 it had a total population of 925,145, including 110,744 colored, and 74,199 white voters. On the 30th September, 1876, there were in the State only five hundred and eighty-nine officers and soldiers of the United States, or one soldier for every sixteen hundred and seventy of the population. On the 7th of November, the day of the election, the number of officers and soldiers was fifteen hundred and twenty-six, or one for every six hundred and six of the population. These were distributed in small squads at sixty-seven different places, at thirty-six of which the number did not exceed thirteen. Not one in seven of the voting-precincts had any soldiers therein. There were four hundred and twenty-four of the four hundred and ninety-one precincts without a soldier.

Now, why were the soldiers there? The act of Congress provides that—

No * * * officer or person * * * in the military * * * service * * * shall have * * * any troops * * * at the place where any * * * election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls. (Revised Statutes, section 2002)

Here then is an express statute which authorizes troops to be used for the purpose of keeping the peace at the polls.

Will any gentleman on this floor say that when there is intimidation and violence, when armed men are hovering around the polls for the purpose of keeping citizens away, for the purpose of depriving them of the right which is given to them by the Constitution of the United States to vote for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, that there shall be no protection afforded to them? Sir, Congress by this law has determined otherwise, and I now say here that an American soldier can never be better employed than when he is giving protection to an American citizen in his attempt to exercise the right of suffrage. South Carolina, and probably every State in the Union, has provided by law for such protection under State authority by civil officers and with power to call on the posse comitatus and even the State military forces.

It is not necessary that I should remind gentlemen upon this floor that South Carolina has been afflicted during the past year with the massacres of Hamburgh and Ellenton, with the riots of Charleston and Cainhoy and other similar disturbances; in all of which the unfortunate colored men, the republicans of the State of South Carolina, suffered at the hands of the democrats who were armed for the occasion and who repeatedly committed acts of violence and followed them by murders in large numbers, to the eternal disgrace of that State. It was because of these facts that troops were sent to the State of South Carolina.

It is abundantly shown by the testimony taken by the committee which investigated the election in South Carolina that no voter of the State, not one, was ever interfered with by any soldier of the United States; that not one solitary voter of the State was ever denied the right to freely exercise the privilege of voting, either by any soldier or any deputy marshal of the United States. These are the facts.

I have not time to go into this testimony in relation to South Carolina, nor is it material that I should do so. I have heard a great deal said against the electoral commission in the debates on the presidential question. I did not vote for the bill to create that commission. But after some examination of the authorities upon the several questions submitted to that tribunal, I undertake to say that they decided them in accordance with law and principle. There is not one respectable decision by any respectable court in this country that contravenes any one conclusion arrived at by the electoral commission.

If I were to make any criticism at all, I would say the commission had no power to inquire into the eligibility of an elector, but I do not understand the commission maintained that it had any such authoity; and with this understanding I now say that the decisions of this august tribunal will be approved by the legal mind of the country, and will be followed by all political parties hereafter. It has given to an important branch of law a vast fund of useful information, and established great principles which may avert confusion and controversy if not civil war hereafter. How any member of this great tribunal could, without evidence to impeach the electoral vote of the State of South Carolina, solemnly record his opinion against receiving it is one of the marvels which no man can satisfactorily explain. Such opinion finds no sanction in law; none in precedent; none consistent with safety to the States; none consistent with popular liberty, with the peace of the country, or the preservation of the Republic.

My friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] has read from the report which was submitted to the House when the electoral bill was first reported. Sir, the foundation of this and all laws is in the Constitution of the United States, which provides that—

> The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates [of the votes by electors] and the votes shall then be counted.

Here is the whole authority with which the two Houses of Congress are clothed; and all the authority which could be given to the electoral commission is simply the authority to count the votes.

Now will it be said that this authorizes the commission to "go back of the returns" to hear proof, to go into the State and make inquiry? If you were to adopt that construction of these words of the Constitution, a similar construction would enable every returning board in every State of this Union to refuse to receive the returns sent up by the county canvassing officers, and to proceed to hear proof and to determine whether the election in each county was fairly conducted, and to decide it, not according to the ideas of the local officers intrusted by law with the power to make the decision, but according to the ideas of the returning boards themselves.

That is the very matter of which gentlemen on the other side of this House have complained in the case of Louisiana. In that State the returning board was authorized by law to hear proof and make the inquiry. That law grew out of a very peculiar condition of things in Louisiana, which I hope will not continue to exist, and which does not exist in other States, or at least in but few of the States. But there is no such law here and no such authority, and these words of the Constitution cannot by any known rule of interpretation or construction be read as conferring any such authority.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina.) The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to enter into an extended discussion in the short time I am allowed under the rule. The end of this thrilling drama is rapidly approaching. The beginning of the second century of the Republic will be marked by a great political crime against the liberties of the American people. Unless this House interposes in behalf of their constitutional rights; unless the unjust, illegal, partisan, and infamous action of the majority of the electoral commission be reversed and this House prevent its consummation, a usurper, close upon the heels of the dying hours of this Congress, will be installed as the Chief Executive of the nation.

When the electoral bill became a law its passage was met with acclamations of joy by the whole country. A vast majority of the people approved it, indorsed it, and hailed it as the harbinger of peace and good government. This House presumed, the country presumed, and the presumption was justifiable, because all thought that in a body composed as this tribunal was, of five distinguished members of each House of Congress, and five of the justices of the Supreme Court, the highest tribunal in the world, that a full, free, careful, and searching investigation and analysis would be made into the alleged frauds and corruptions in connection with the elections of November last for President and Vice-President. The greatest question that was ever submitted to any tribunal on earth was submitted to this.

I, in common with the entire delegation from my State in both branches of Congress, gave this measure my hearty support, and with the same lights before me I should do so again. I did not think then, nor do I now think, that we exceeded our constitutional powers in doing so.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the country knew full well that the republican candidates had a prima facie case so far as Louisiana and Florida were concerned. But, sir, the country expected, and had a right to expect, that this commission would inquire and ascertain who were the true, lawful, and constitutional electors chosen by the people. Men of high distinction in both branches of Congress asserted that that was the prime object sought. Yet, sir, instead of making a careful inquiry as to who were the truly and lawfully elected electors in the disputed States, they have, from the time of their first sitting, persistently refused to receive any evidence necessary to ascertain such fact. In doing so they have totally disregarded the law under which they are acting, and in the language of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FIELD,] used some days ago, their opinion is entitled to no respect; and such, in my opinion, will be the judgment of the country.

Suppose that this foul wrong be done? What a mockery of justice it will be! When your President stands on the eastern portico of the Capitol to deliver his inaugural, he cannot, as his predecessors have done, stand there in the full blaze of the light of heaven and say he has been called to the highest position on earth by the voice of his countrymen. He cannot say that he is the chosen ruler of the people. He can only say, "I stand here by the grace and favor of returning boards, whose fraudulent action has shocked the sense of justice throughout the whole land." He cannot congratulate himself that a majority of the people of this country have reposed in him the high trust of Chief Executive of the nation. As he journeys from the Capitol to the White House it would not be inappropriate for him to read what President Grant has said in reference to this matter. It is this:

> No man worthy of the office of President of the United States should be willing to hold it if counted in or placed therein by fraud. Either party can afford to be disappointed in the result, but the country cannot afford to have the result tainted by the suspicion of illegal or false returns.

This should not escape his memory. He should hang these words in the East Room of the Executive Mansion and daily reflect upon them.

Ah! how uneasily he will rest beneath the robes of ill-gotten power. How unshapely they will fit about him, and how unseemly they will appear. He will enjoy the unenviable distinction of knowing that he is a President by fraud, by perjury, and by the manipulations of illegal and unconstitutional returning boards. The proof to sustain this has been offered, and it was the duty of the commission to receive it. But forgetting that they were to decide this question according to the grand principles of law and justice, they have acted as though they were delegated as mere partisans to devise a mode under which the election of the republican candidate could be declared. Look at your party. Scarcely a decade of years ago it walked like a giant through the land. It was invincible in numbers in almost every State in the Union; its decrees were uttered only to be obeyed. It ruled with kingly power. It held States as provinces, and with its military heel upon the necks of prostrate peoples, it through its National Legislature made the organic law for once sovereign and independent Commonwealths, and with regal arrogance and insolence said, "This shall be your constitution or the sword shall rule in your land." It went with the bayonet and the law and compelled obedience.

Behold how changed the scene! Now more than half the States have enlisted under the banner of democracy, and this once invincible republican party has been defeated for the Presidency by a majority of more than a quarter of a million of votes, and is sustaining the illegal and fraudulent action of returning boards that have been denounced as infamous by every patriot in the land. All this is now necessary to prolong your power. This is no victory for you. The better men of your party so regard it. It is fruit that will turn to ashes upon your lips. This is the crowning outrage that will sweep you from power forever.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] seems to fear that the State of South Carolina will be disfranchised. He is afraid that some of her rights will be invaded or denied by the action of this House. Whence this sudden zeal in behalf of this oppressed State? Many glorious memories cluster around the honored name of South Carolina. She was one of the thirteen colonies that assisted by her valor and heroic patriotism in the establishment of American independence. She was one of the first colonies that rallied under the banner of freedom in the war of the Revolution. Her name is historic. The deeds of her sons in behalf of liberty are a part and parcel of the glory of this country.

Your party, taking advantage of her prostrate condition, filled her borders with Federal bayonets, and reduced her from the high position of a sovereign and independent State to that of a province. We desired and offered to show to this commission that no free and fair election for President and Vice-President had been held there; that the people were under duress; were overawed by your military power, and yet all this was denied by the majority of the commission.

Sir, recollecting the high-handed tyranny of the republican party; remembering its acts, disfranchising whole commonwealths; remembering how, with the aid of Federal bayonets, it has hushed to silence the voice of the American people, it seems strange to me to hear one of its representatives talking of disfranchising a State. It seems absurd, and should cause the blush of shame to redden the cheek of him who utters it.

You talk of the rights of States! You cannot invade their false certificates, you cannot go behind them; forsooth it would invade the doctrine of State rights. Ah, what a mockery! Why, sir, your party has trampled upon State sovereignty from the day of its accession to power until the present hour. Unconstitutionally and illegally it laid its mailed hand upon Virginia, and without the warrant of law rent the grand old Commonwealth in twain—a State the mention of whose name recalls the glorious record of our revolutionary fathers. She gave an empire to the Union. She did more to constitute and frame this Republic than any of the colonies; and the labors of her sons, both in the councils of the nation and in the field, will be revered among all men who love liberty as long as an English-speaking people inhabit the earth.

You say you cannot go behind the action of the returning boards. You dare not go behind them, for if you do the truth will be asserted, and when that is done your defeat will follow.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] says that South Carolina will cry in her anguish "How long, O Lord, how long shall these things be!" I tell him they will continue just so long as we, the Representatives of the American people, stand here and allow them to be continued. Just so long as we support the Army to invade and tear down the sovereignty of these States, these things will exist. We on this side of the House have denounced the action of this commission as an infamy; almost every member of the democratic party who has raised his voice has so denominated it. We tell the country that this commission has not obeyed the law; that it has refused to exercise the powers delegated to it. We say it has trampled under foot the law we gave to it, and in so doing has committed a grievous wrong upon the people of the country. Yet, sir, I undertake to say that if we stand here and acquiesce in it, and do not exercise the powers given us by the Constitution and the act itself to prevent this wrong being done, we become a party to it. This is a plain question. I ask you how can we go before the American people and say that the action of this commission is infamous, say that it is illegal, say that it disregarded the law under which it acted, say that it has violated the rights of forty millions of people, and justify ourselves, unless we use all the constitutional means in our power to prevent the consummation of this fraud. I for one, sir, do not intend to rush with unseeming haste to its consummation. This House should, in the exercise of its constitutional power in the interests of the country, prevent the completion of this wrong. I shall never consent to ratify the action of the electoral commission, because in doing so I would esteem that I had proven recreant to the rights of the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, a few words upon the objections to the count of the electoral vote of South Carolina will be all that I desire to say at this time. By misrepresentation and vituperation the country was led to believe that the condition of that State was such that it would be impossible to give any honest or just representation of the opinions of the people, and that at each election heretofore and now fraud, corruption, and violence had invalidated any expression of the will of the people. When I went there as a member of a committee of the House I had something of that feeling myself. But when, with my associates on that committee, I went to that State to investigate the condition of political affairs and the proceeding as to the electoral vote, we were astonished when we ascertained the facts. Taking every vote that had been given by everybody on all sides, making no question of violence or intimidation, or the interference of armed men, or the failure of incapable or unscrupulous officers to make the returns; taking twenty-five or thirty precincts that were absolutely without any sufficient claim in law to be counted as the votes of the people—taking all these, the vote of South Carolina for the republican electors was as indisputable as the vote of Massachusetts or any other State in the Union; and there was not one member of the committee that could raise a question upon the proceedings in that election or the result as it was ascertained and declared by the returning officers of that State; so far as the returns upon their face indicated the action of the people as to any action of the canvassing officers of the State thereupon.

But, sir, objection is made upon another ground; and the nature of this objection not only justifies the people of that State and their proceedings in the late election, but it vindicates absolutely and perfectly the integrity of the electoral commission and their adherence in every decision that they have made to the principles of law, constitutional and statutory, as the rule of their judgment.

I do not share the objections which have been made to the proceedings of the electoral commission on the ground of their yielding to partisanship or sectional influence. I see in these proceedings nothing but the strictest and the clearest adherence to law and to justice. Since the beginning of the Government there have been two methods of interpretation of the law and of the Constitution. One was what was granted to the Government to keep it in existence; to continue its authority; to execute its laws, and to perpetuate its power. In the opinion of one class of people and one class of judicial officers, that which was necessary for this purpose was legal and constitutional; while in the opinion of another class of judicial officers and another class of citizens, anything which enabled the Government to perpetuate its existence was illegal and unconstitutional. That is the method and basis of interpretation of this statute and the proceedings of this electoral commission. What was necessary to execute the law for counting the vote was in their opinion illegal and unconstitutional; and, on the other side, that which was necessary to ascertain and declare the vote and prepare for the inauguration of officers who were elected by the people was legal and constitutional.

Now, see how this principle applies to the first objection that is made. It is said the constitution of South Carolina requires a registration law to qualify its citizens for voting, and because the Legislature has not passed a registration law, therefore the electoral vote of that State is invalid and ought not to be counted. It is certainly a new principle and an unjust principle in the interpretation of a law which deprives any man of the exercise of his rights because of the default of another. There is not a voter in the State of South Carolina who had it in his power to pass a registration law, and there is not a voter under any sort of just interpretation who is deprived of his right because there was not a registration law. If the constitution requires it, and the Legislature fails to execute that provision, the people who had the right to vote under the laws which existed ever since the creation of a State cannot be deprived of their long-time privileges and franchises, which they have the right to claim and have been accustomed to exercise, because of that failure on the part of the Legislature.

But supposing we admit because there is no registration there can be no electoral vote, what follows? That there is no State government; because its officers are elected by the very same men who voted for the electors. There can be no courts of justice; there can be no constitutional assessments or collections of taxes; no schools for the children; no means of defense against domestic violence and the invasion by foreign enemies, and none of those privileges and powers which attach to the very existence of a State, and which cannot be taken from it without destroying the State itself.

These gentlemen say unless you deny all these rights to the State, unless you deny to the State the right to defend itself against domestic violence and foreign invasion, the electoral vote is not to be considered valid. To make this interpretation in regard to South Carolina, so to judge the action of that people, would be to make that State the brainless and soulless offspring of a brainless and soulless people. Gentlemen say because soldiers have been sent there the electoral vote must not be counted. Sir, the soldiers have been sent to the State of South Carolina because, under the Constitution, the executive officer of that State required them for the purpose of suppressing domestic violence. The whole State swarmed with armed men. Every man capable of duty in the city of Charleston is to this day and this hour armed to the teeth and organized into military companies and attached to regular associations, not to sustain the laws of the State or the constitution of the State, but as enemies of the State and the government, and it is so in every part of the State of South Carolina.

Mr. HOAR. You do not mean to say blacks as well as whites?

Mr. BANKS. I mean every white man. The same is true of every other part of the State. The committee saw these men at Columbia when they went there. They were hurried away by the orders of their leaders, but there were enough to give us an idea of their purpose. Every white man, every democrat capable of bearing arms, is organized in those military associations, and opposed to the State government, and, if they dared, to the United States Government as well.

That which the gentleman from Virginia calls citizen soldiery, and for which he mourns because these men were not allowed, with their arms and in their military organizations, against the proclamation of the governor and the President of the United States, to celebrate the birthday of Washington; these men whom he calls citizen soldiers are men armed against the law for the destruction of the State government as it exists, and without doubt hostile to the Government of the United States as it exists.

Are we to say, then, these objections are to be admitted which destroy not only the character of the State, but deny the power and right of the people to preserve the integrity of their government and to defend themselves against domestic violence? If we so declare, then all that which admits of the right of defense on the part of the Government of the United States and the capacity to defend its rights, is illegal and unconstitutional and despotic, while that which destroys the State and the Union is legal, constitutional, patriotic, and just. So the honorable gentleman from Mississippi declares the commission is unworthy of respect because it assumes to decide what powers have been conferred upon it and what not by the law which created it. Sir, the honorable gentleman——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the discussion of the but little-varying issues arising on the electoral count is growing monotonous. Invective has about exhausted itself, reason is deaf, and conscience has taken refuge in a casemate no missile of truth can penetrate. In the closing scene of this great drama it only remains for me to utter my lament.

Contemning all lawful authority and the voice of the people, the eight commissioners—who have achieved for themselves an immortality of infamy—have done their work as basely as Joab when he smote Amasa in the fifth rib while holding him by the beard to kiss him. The member of the commission from Massachusetts may in his self-complacency regard himself a martyr to democratic abuse. We complain of him not without cause. We had that trust in his integrity that begat the conviction that when confronted with the choice of a party triumph or the vindication of the truth he would face the responsibility and espouse the latter. I know not what transpired in the secret deliberations of the committee that framed the bill, but I know that he invited our confidence when he stood on this floor and with eloquent pathos appealed to us to embrace it. He had heretofore denounced the Louisiana returning board as a monstrous iniquity.

He knew that the dread of the democracy was the assumption that the President of the Senate was authorized do the counting, looking no further than the face of the certificates. Did he then invite us to accept the commission with the covert purpose of dwarfing this great umpirage to the narrow practice of a common-pleas court? Did he believe that we and the country contemplated the solecism, the sublime farce of erecting a solemn tribunal of five commoners, five reverend Senators, and five grave judges to go through the highly intellectual process of opening the certificates, sorting out those for Hayes, and casting up the figures? That was what the President of the Senate, with less parade and greater facility, could do.

If such were his construction of the duties and powers of the commission when he stood on this floor and delivered his apostrophe to the triumphs of peace, "justice, and righteousness;" if it were not in fact a false pretense, hollow and hypocritical, it was on all-fours with the morality of the injunction of Peggy Lob to her boy Paul:

> Mind thy kittychism child, and reverence old age. Never steal, specially when any one be in the way. Read your Bible, and talk like a pius un. Peoples goes by your words more than your actions. If you wants what is not your own try and do without it, and if you cannot do without it, take it by insinivation, not bluster. They as swindles does more and risks less than they as robs.

The gentleman attempted to parry the force of the criticism of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] by likening himself to one of Massachusetts' great Senators. It suggested to my mind a contrast. When, in the far-off time, the archæologist shall wander amid the tombs and monuments of the Senators of the Old Bay State, as he pauses before that of her Webster he may read in letters of living light the words, "Liberty and union, one and inseparable, now and forever." On her Choate's he may read, "A thing that's most uncommon: an honest, learned, modest, reasonable man." But when he pauses before that which shall mark the resting-place of her first Senator chosen in the second century of the nation, he will exclaim, "How the mighty have fallen," as he calls to mind the words, "Ordered, That evidence (of fraud) be not received." What an epitaph for the successor of Webster, Choate, and Sumner. His monumental column should be surmounted with the representation of the stealthy fox devouring the Louisiana pelican.

Akin to his immodest comparison is the impudent assumption that he, as a member of the commission, vindicated the docrine of State rights. What are State rights? This, essence and soul, is the right of the people of a State to erect and control their own local governments. Has this right been permitted to Louisiana and South Carolina since the war? The governments there were bold, bald usurpations, propped up and sustained by Federal bayonets against the will and right of the people. When it was proposed to show what was the State government he said, "Ordered, That no evidence be received;" and with his iron heel planted on the corpse of murdered States, stricken down with the mailed hand of Federal power, he rises to the sublimity of impudence in claiming to be the defender of State rights.

So monstrous and iniquitous are the governments in Louisiana and South Carolina, whose electoral votes the commission have counted, that the President, before the outcry of an indignant nation, has in effect just disowned them. The dreaded Italian hand showed itself from out the ermine of the judiciary in deciding the Florida case. They say:

> That it is not competent, under the Constitution and the law, as it existed at the date of the passage of said act, to go into evidence aliunde on the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the governor of the State of Florida, in and according to the determination and declaration of their appointment by the board of State canvassers of said State prior to the time required for the performance of their duties, had been appointed electors.

What follows the word "governor" was not necessary to a judgment. But it was necessary to cover the Oregon case. Here then were these sworn judges putting an addendum to the case in hand to meet the exigencies of a case not yet submitted. And from that day to this we have witnessed the shameless spectacle of the judge on the bench and the counsel pleading before him, juggling, counseling together in order—

> To veer and tack and steer a cause
> Against the weather-gauge of laws.

Take your victory, gentlemen, because I cannot get enough democrats to wrest it from you. Blurred with fraud and cursed with perjury, exult over it if you can. Your exultation is the "io triumphe" of treachery. Our exclamation to your honorable commissioners is "et tu Brute."

We will at least have learned from you the philosophy of Pistol's injunction to his wife on leaving for war:

> The word is, Pitch and pay;
> Trust none;
> For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer cakes,
> And hold-fast, is the only dog, my duck.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina.) The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WALLACE] is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina. I have not often troubled the House since I have been a member of Congress; nor would I do it now had I not heard my State assailed by gentlemen on the other side of the House; had I not heard them either willfully or ignorantly maligning us. Sir, this howl raised over the vote of South Carolina would not have been heard in this House if on the 7th day of November last we had been permitted as freemen to cast the vote of that State.

What was the condition of things there at that time and previously? It was declared by the democratic party of South Carolina that they intended to carry this election. "How can you do it?" was the inquiry; "you have not got the numbers." "We do not care for that; we intend to do it anyhow." And they thought they had done enough to do it, but they failed by a little.

Mr. Speaker, my time is very short. I must content myself with stating a few points as directly as I can. We have never voted since reconstruction more than 148,000 votes. The republican party are 90,000 strong. The democratic party there are not more than 60,000 strong. This year we have voted nearly 183,000 votes, while the republican vote has fallen off nothing. Now, where did it come from? A howl is made over prostrate South Carolina by gentlemen who do not know much about us and perhaps care less. They ought to know that there are at least 20,000 fraudulent votes in the returning box of South Carolina to-day, cast for Tilden and Hampton and against all the delegates from South Carolina as it came to their turn.

Now, why, Mr. Speaker, were soldiers there? Because the citizens were armed. Because we were not permitted as citizens to speak and address our constituents, but a force of armed men and armed mobocracy attended us everywhere, hunted us down by night and day, and prevented a free discussion before the people.

I regret that the gentleman from Eastern Virginia should have made some of the remarks in which he indulged. I remember some charges that have been made against him. Although the honorable gentleman occupies a seat in this House to-day, yet there is great doubt entertained by at least this side of the House, and by many on the other side, whether or not he might not have something to look up at home that might trouble his conscience both by night and by day. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that his charges against South Carolina at least will not blot out the State. Give us a fair chance, a fair expression of opinion, and we will not come here to complain of anything. We are more than able to take care of ourselves. But we cannot take care of ourselves when a portion of our people are encouraged by mobocracy from New York; we cannot take care of ourselves when firebrands are thrown from the other side of the House among our people, and when they are driven to madness and fury in their efforts to suppress a free expression of the opinion of the people of South Carolina.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, the brevity of the time allotted to me through the courtesy of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to discuss this question will preclude the possibility of my entering into it as elaborately as I should have desired. This is a question in which I naturally feel a deep interest, not only on account of my State being the subject under discussion, but because I represent the constituency that has been unwarrantably assailed on this floor, and which in all the discussions appertaining to the southern question has been entirely ignored by the gentlemen on the other side of the House.

It is a matter of great surprise to me that in discussing this question the gentlemen on the other side of the House should not bear in mind or call to their recollection the fact that the Southern States are not composed now of the same voting element as they were composed of previous to the rebellion; that there has been an accession to the voting population of those States, and that that accession must necessarily have a tendency to wield an influence different from that which was wielded in the Southern States previous to the war. Sir, it is for that reason that I am here to-day; it is for that reason that

I stand here to speak, not in defense of any one man, not in defense of any set of men, but to speak in defense of an enfranchised people, one and all, white and colored, in South Carolina, made to enjoy the immunities and privileges of citizens subsequent to the war.

It has been charged that on account of the military power being in South Carolina it was impossible to have a fair and honest election. That is the argument of the gentlemen on the other side of the House. That was the argument before the commission yesterday. Now, if the whole of the argument as to that submitted here and submitted before the commission be taken for granted, why, sir, South Carolina was the very State in which military power should have been exercised. It has been declared that it had no government at all no government whatever. Why, sir, if it had no government, I ask you then must it not have been in a state of anarchy? And if it was in a state of anarchy, what was more essential than that that anarchy should be subdued by the strong arm of the Government? But I say that while it was not precisely in a state of anarchy, nevertheless it was so near to it in some respects that it was a godsend to my people, who were being assailed and murdered, that the Army did come down and by their presence exercise a moral influence that has saved the lives of many men in South Carolina.

I want now to say a word to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE.] He said that South Carolina had no voice on this floor. I say to the eloquent gentleman that I agree with him to a certain extent that she has no voice here. She has not the voice of the former slaveholder and oppressor, but she has the voice of one of the oppressed race who stands here to vindicate the rights of his people whenever an opportunity is accorded him on this floor. Sir, I am here to speak for South Carolina, and although the face of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] is white and his mind cultivated and he is possessed of all the advantages belonging to his race, yet I stand here to-day and will endeavor to do my duty as one of the Representatives of South Carolina as well as I can, without comparing my record with his, or with that of Calhoun or any of the distinguished citizens of that State whose names he has mentioned here.

Sir, I love South Carolina. I am a native of the State, and, to add force to the emphasis of the argument I am trying to educe, I will take no background upon any question designed for the weal of South Carolina. I would not do anything that I believe to be wrong. I would not countenance fraud or intimidation on the part of my own people to deprive any one of their rights who was opposed to them.

But when I know we are assailed and oppressed and that attempts are made every day to drive them again under the heel of the oppressor, I can only raise my voice, and I would do it if it were the last time I ever did it, in defense of my rights and in the interests of my oppressed people.

I want to say to the democracy: Gentlemen, the colored people of the South do not hate you; they do not hate the democratic party, but I tell you that we always find our principal oppressors in that party. Therefore, we tremble with fear and apprehension when we are informed that a democrat is about to regain power, and it is for that reason that we want the State of South Carolina to-day to have a republican as governor, and rejoice that now, under the just decision rendered by the commission, we shall have a republican for President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, an eminent political writer of England has said:

As conquest may be called a foreign usurpation, so usurpation is a kind of domestic conquest, with this difference: that an usurper can never have right on his side, it being no usurpation but where one has got into the possession of what another has a right to.

The man whom the people have designated as their choice through the methods of the Constitution and laws has rightful claim to the presidential office. If the reckless, partisan judgment of the majority of the electoral commission shall override that choice and place another in the office, whatever may be the practical effect, it is none the less a real usurpation, though it be surrounded with the barren forms of law. Its solemnities cannot conceal the fraud or right the wrong. A de facto President he may become who is thus installed, but the President de jure he can never be.

This "domestic conquest" was begun in South Carolina, to end, I fear, in the conquest of the whole nation. The President of the United States ordered the military there pending the election—this on pretense of insurrection or domestic violence beyond the control of the State. If that be true, the people were not free to exercise the right of voting, and ought not to decide the presidential succession. But if such were not the condition of the State, the very presence of national troops was without warrant of law and in flagrant violation of the essential principles of our elective system. The very essence of republican government is the freedom of the ballot. If the Executive of this nation may wield the Army and Navy at his will for the purpose of controlling elections, he may perpetuate the succession of his party, and republicanism becomes a mockery. It is a notorious fact that there was no such domestic violence in South Carolina as authorized the use of Federal troops, and their presence must be accounted for on some other hypothesis.

The conditions upon which a call might rightfully be made upon the President for aid did not exist. The Legislature of the State made no demand for troops. The governor did not even attempt to convene the Legislature or give reasons why it could not be done. There was not the slightest obstacle however to its peaceful assemblage. The courts of the State, too, were all open and their process was unobstructed. The local authorities were amply able to deal with all violations of the law and to maintain the peace and good order of society.

Yet in the face of all this the President issued his proclamation declaring the State in insurrection.

All available forces were immediately ordered to proceed to the State, and it was made one common camping-ground for Federal troops till after the election.

Who will say the people were free to exercise the elective franchise under these circumstances, or that the vote of the State ought to decide the presidential issue?

The supreme executive—

Says Locke—

who has a double trust put in him, both to have a part in the legislative and supreme execution of the law, acts against both when he goes about to set up his own arbitrary will as the law of society. He acts also contrary to his trust when he either employs the force, treasure, and officers of the society to corrupt the representatives, and gain them to his purposes, or openly pre-engages the electors, and prescribes to their choice such whom he has by solicitations, threats, promises, or otherwise won to his designs, and employs them to bring in such who have promised beforehand what to vote and what to enact. Thus to regulate candidates and electors, and new-model the ways of election, what is it but to cut up the government by the roots, and poison the very fountain of public security?

The fitting type of all these baleful influences is found in the instrumentalities employed in the late elections in South Carolina and other Southern States—culminating as they have in rascally returning boards and false certifications of presidential electors, which, strange to say, have received the approval of the majority of the electoral commission which was created by Congress to determine the right. They have shut their eyes to the truth and lent their high functions to the consummation of a great wrong against popular government. This is the conviction of the hour, as it will be the verdict of impartial history. Fraud vitiates everything, in the language of the law, and these decisions will prove no exception in the judgment of all right-thinking men. That they should not be permitted to become of binding effect all should agree, if it can be avoided by any lawful means. Faith to them is faith to fraud and usurpation, but it is faithless to the rights and liberties of the people. To the Constitution and laws we owe allegiance, and they should be employed to overthrow what is clearly ruinous to free government. But we are told that we must accept these decisions as final, for just beyond lies anarchy. No one should court anarchy, but it does not follow that we should be swift to sanction palpable usurpation, which is little better. I can see little difference between usurpation before the 4th of March and usurpation after that date. I would avoid both, and would exhaust the last moment and the last expedient for this purpose.

It has been said in the progress of these discussions by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] that we should

Rather bear those ills we have
Than fly to others that we know not of!

I answer, this breathes not the spirit of heroic deeds or patriotic achievements. Listen to the continuance of the soliloquy:

Thus conscience does make cowards of us all;
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought;
And enterprises of great pith and moment,
With this regard, their currents turn awry,
And lose the name of action.

"Enterprises of great pith and moment" may extricate from the difficulty far short of the dire results of either anarchy or usurpation. Seek the remedy; this is our duty. The bill which has just passed this House providing for a new election, in the event the count shall not be completed in the allotted time, would avoid discord and anarchy if it should become a law. It means peace and justice. It carries the question back in that event to the people, and provides, in the mean time, for a rightful succession of the Presidency. I can imagine scarcely anything worse than the lesson of legalized fraud. It is most demoralizing on the popular mind, and will sap the foundations of faith in the future of the Government. What! Shall the American people be taught that there is no power in their Government to resist open and unmistakable fraud in the choice of the Chief Executive? Can they reasonably entertain hope for the preservation of their liberties or the continuance of peace if this outrage is to receive final sanction? Sooner or later, sir, it must lead to revolution or despotism. Like him who has been despoiled of his property, the people should "appeal to the law for justice," but if there be no law, no court to appeal to, wherin justice may be had, they will ultimately be compelled to appeal to a higher arbitrament and to struggle on "till they have recovered the native right of their ancestors," which is to install into office the President whom they have chosen by their ballots.

Mr. GOODIN. Mr. Speaker, the end of the electoral count draws nigh, and it is not difficult to predict the character of the farce with which the performances will be closed. This is no time for idle whimperings or repinings. What ought to have been done is one thing; what is best now to be done is quite another. I voted for the bill creating the commission because I believed it to be equitable, fair, just; because in it I saw, as I thought, the only hope of averting great national commotion if not bloodshed. With that vote I am content; under similar circumstances to those surrounding us at the time of the passage of the bill my vote would be recorded the same to-day. I can discover no trick, no snare in the enactment of that law, as others claim now to see them.

That the commission disappointed the democracy in the determination of the grave questions submitted is apparant; that the decisions thus far made will meet the approval of fair-minded republicans throughout the country I do not believe. We will soon be called upon to witness the humiliating spectacle of seeing counted in as President and Vice-President men who as candidates for those positions were overwhelmingly defeated at the polls. The high commission has so decreed, and so it will be. Let the final result be reached as early as possible. Honor and enlightened statesmanship alike demand that no unnecessary obstruction be thrown in the way of a further count. If the tribunal acted unwisely, if it acted contrary to justice, contrary to the reasonable expectations of the country, it unquestionably had the power to do so. We invested it with large discretion, with the fullest judicial power. Like every other body quasi-judicial, or wholly so, the determination of the extent of its jurisdiction rested with it, and its adjudications can be overturned, according to the act creating it, only by a "concurrence of the two Houses."

We may censure, we may remonstrate, we may be buried in regrets, but we cannot undo the work of the commission, except it should be by means savoring strongly of revolution. This we cannot afford. The people of all parties demanded a peaceful adjustment of the vexed question; the entire business interests of the country were almost boisterous in appeals for some pacific settlement. The electoral bill was hailed with shouts of rejoicing everywhere. Many hearts are bowed in disappointment at the partisan decisions; many feel that our country is disgraced in her most eminent public servants; that the ermine of the highest court of judicature in the land is henceforth polluted beyond the hope of cleansing; that the method of making Presidents by returning boards will hereafter supplant the old-fashioned way of sclection; that fraud and perjury will rise in market and ever command a premium over honesty and truth; that revolution, anarchy, forcible resistance to treachery and usurpation, if applied now, might serve to mitigate, if not to relieve us, from some of our anticipated evils in the future.

The picture drawn is a sad one; but, however unsightly, the remedy to be applied, if it could serve to divert our attention, would bring us to gaze upon another more horrible in its make-up.

Mr. Speaker, in this hour of conflict of opinion, of frenzy, I welcome reason and struggle to quench the rising sparks of passion. Anger and judgment bear little affinity to each other. He who counsels with rage in this trying hour will, when the quiet of reflection comes upon him, regret the ill-timed counselor which led him astray. My friends, be not too ready to despair. Many of you, I know, according to the laws of human longevity are close upon retirement from the theater of life. A few years—even four of them—may seem a long time. But in the life of a republic it is inconsiderable. The hopes and aspirations of the American people are not to be quenched by a single act of fraud upon their rights, nor by a succession of them. The people are forbearing and long-suffering. A submission to the forms of law is a trait which has been long fostered and is strong in them. Peaceful methods are far more congenial than desperate expedients, and I have an abiding conviction that however earnest their protestations against the means by which their expressed will has been thwarted, against the palpable frauds committed, against the blind partyism which has brought the blush of shame to the honest cheek, and well-nigh banished respect for the Federal judiciary, they will not countenance violence or factious delay in preventing a declaration of the result of this most unhappy question.

Then, sir, let us nourish our patriotism; let us preserve untarnished our honor; let us not be tempted to sacrifice statesmanship upon the altar of passion, and from defeat before a partisan tribunal, which to serve the ends of party announces itself absolutely powerless to hear evidence of fraud and perjury, appeal once more to that innate sense of right and fair-dealing so strongly intrenched in the popular heart, for the reversal of this most unrighteous decision.

Thomas Benton once said:

> The troubles of the country come from uneasy politicians; its safety from the tranquil masses.

After the first flush of indignation at the outrage committed, the people will listen to the oft-told history of perfidious returning boards, and the solemn decrees of this remarkable commission, which sought to affirm their unjust doings, thus transferring the well-merited odium of the former to the latter, and listening, a rebuke will come to the perpetrators of these wrongs, so significant, so overwhelming, that even their impious heads will hang, if not in shame, in sorrow and in anguish at their condemnation.

Mr. Speaker, I envy not him who through subversion of law and a disregard of the will of the people succeeds to power. While the masses will make no resistance to his performance of the functions of the presidential office, he will ever be looked upon with distrust, and no wisdom of administration can atone for the manner in which the position was obtained. Power wrongfully secured will torment its possessor to the end.

Mr. Speaker, in the latter stages of ancient Rome, Cæsar relied for support upon an armed force devoted to his interests. Pompey sought popular favor through popular laws, while the opulent Crassus endeavored to secure it by making dinners, and feeding the rabble at his own expense, expending in nine months' time ten millions of dollars. The dazzling splendor of Cæsar for a time failed as against the wholesome laws made and promised by Pompey, while the sumptuous dinners of Crassus, though devoured with a relish, would not bind the populace to him. So, sir, will it be with Rutherford B. Hayes, ushered into official life out of the womb of fraudulent returning boards. Whether he may adopt the expedients of a Cæsar, Pompey, or Crassus, he will fail to command that confidence, that respect, that esteem due from the people toward him who by their suffrages is chosen to the most exalted station within their gift.

Courage and patience then! Courage to do right and patience to bide the good time when the verdict upon legalized wrong shall be given; for I believe as sure as I believe in the existence of God that the victory which my republican friends now foresee so clearly will be turned into a defeat so stunning, so bewildering, that they themselves will feel like cursing the day and the forces which gave it to them.

Mr. COCHRANE. I yield one minute of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX. I am allowed one minute to reply to the honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] who impugned the election in New York City and desired to go below it for some purpose. A committee of this House has been in session in New York City and that committee examined into that election. No man can say that that election was not a fair one, and upon the authority of the testimony of Federal officers taken by that committee, which I have here, I can verify my statement anywhere inside or outside of the House.

The gentleman from Ohio says that we have no right to go behind the returns, but he charged some kind of fraud in the city of New York. Sir, I undertake to say that out of 183,000 votes cast there there were not thirty bad votes, and the city of New York is in no hurry to inaugurate anybody elected in a different way.

Mr. COCHRANE. Mr. Speaker, we have again heard from the majority of the commission, and it becomes the duty of the House to determine whether the decision of that majority shall be the decision of this House or whether this House shall repudiate it.

Gentlemen upon the other side of the House have seen fit to make statements about what they know as to the condition of affairs in South Carolina. Several members of the committee who went to South Carolina, of which committee I had the honor to be a member, have stood in their places on this floor and have declared that the facts alleged by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] and others who have addressed the House are not founded on fact and are totally and wholly untrue. Now, sir, that is the very matter that we proposed to inquire into before the joint commission. If these gentlemen were prepared to show by competent and satisfactory evidence that a state of violence and lawlessness was not engendered by the introduction of Federal bayonets into South Carolina, why did they not go before the commission and say, "Let us have an inquiry into this matter; let us hear the truth; let the commission pass upon the evidence?"

O, no, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] who was one of the objectors were both silent when the objectors on the part of the House proposed to show—what? We proposed to show that before the date of the election the State of South Carolina was peopled with Federal troops; we proposed to prove that Federal soldiers, with fixed bayonets, surrounded the polls at the various voting-precincts throughout that State; we proposed to show that those Federal soldiers, aided and abetted by the State militia, by an army of United States marshals, and by another army of deputy sheriffs, the creatures and appointees of C. C. Bowen, one of the republican electors, stood at the polls and in defiance of the rights of the people of South Carolina did prevent white and colored men from voting the democratic ticket; that it was by such means as these that in the county of Charleston, instead of a majority of 2,000 votes, they rolled up a majority of 7,000 votes; that, if the 5,000 votes to which they were not entitled were excluded, there would not have been upon the democratic ticket a single candidate for elector with less than a majority of 4,000 votes.

That was the proposition before this commission. It will not do for the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] to stand up in this House, as they have done to-day, and say to their fellow-members and to the American people that the facts we allege are not true. You dare not allow us to prove them; that is the why we complain. Your eight partisan commissioners knew full well that if we had the opportunity we would have shown a state of facts to exist there which would have necessitated the throwing out of the electoral vote of South Carolina. Yet they come into this House and in the report which they submit they say:

> So far as this commission can take notice of the presence of soldiers of the United States in the State of South Carolina during the election, it appears that they were placed there by the President of the United States to suppress insurrection, at the request of the proper authorities of the State.

"So far as this commission can take notice." Why, sir, the commission would not allow the production of any testimony. What knowledge, therefore, could it have had as to the facts? Mark you, we offered to prove that the President of the United States, in sending these Federal troops into the State of South Carolina, violated both the Constitution and the law. We offered to prove, we have the proof in our hands to-day and can furnish it upon an hour's notice, that General Ruger, the officer in command of the troops in South Carolina, on the 16th day of October, 1876, telegraphed to the President of the United States that all was quiet, that he did not need any more troops. "If I need more troops, I will send you a dispatch telling you I need them."

Yet upon the 17th of October, the very next day, in the face of that official dispatch from General Ruger, the President of the United States issued his proclamation, declaring the people of that State in insurrection and sending down there all the soldiers he could gather from Maine to Fortress Monroe.

"In accordance with law," says the commission; "so far as we can notice." Sir, we offered to prove that the Legislature of the State of South Carolina was never convened by the governor, that the matter of the intervention of Federal troops on the ground of the existence of an insurrection never was submitted to the Legislature, although it could have readily been convened at the time. "So far as the commission can know anything about it." Why, sir, it was a violation of law, a violation of the Constitution of the United States from beginning to end. It was a deliberate and vile conspiracy between Government officials at Washington and Chamberlain and his hirelings in the State of South Carolina to wrest from that people the power which they would otherwise have exercised at the ballot-box. We offered to prove all these facts; here are the offers of record.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina.) The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOGE. The short time that I have to address the House upon this subject I propose to devote mostly to showing the necessity for the use of United States troops in the State of South Carolina during the recent election. The better to show to this House the necessity for troops I will describe one of our political meetings, which was a fair sample of all that I attended while addressing the people of South Carolina on behalf of the nominees of the republican party.

I attended a public meeting called by the republican party at Abbeville Court House. I attended it in company with Governor Chamberlain and the superintendent of education, Mr. Jillson. We were waited on by a committee of democrats on our arrival at Abbeville Court House and told that they desired to divide the time with us. Their request amounted to a demand, and upon consultation we felt that we were obliged to consent to a division of the time with the democracy.

The next morning the meeting assembled at ten o'clock, and when we went to take possession of the stand which had been erected by the republican party and to address the people of that county, we found in front of the stand some three thousand white people, members of the democratic party, every man of whom was armed with from one to three revolvers. After we had taken our place upon the stand I heard, what was very familiar to my ears, the old rebel yell; I looked up, and saw approaching the stand the head of a column of cavalry. They came up and formed around the stand, to the number of sixteen hundred, inclosing the entire audience, consisting of about three thousand white men, on foot, who were democrats, about twelve hundred or fifteen hundred colored men, and perhaps a hundred white men belonging to the republican party.

After encircling us in a hollow square, which I have no doubt many of my old friends here who have been soldiers have formed more than once to protect themselves upon the battle-field, but that was the first time that I found I had been placed in a hollow square formed by the enemy—after surrounding us, they detailed twelve men and placed them on the stand immediately behind the speakers. I noticed that the man who stood behind me was armed with four revolvers, and it seemed to me that they were about as long as my arm. [Laughter.] These men were all pretty well filled with whisky, and they made use of a good deal of plain talk about killing radicals, republicans, carpet-baggers, and so on.

Governor Chamberlain first addressed the meeting. He was followed by a gentleman from Abbeville County, who, having all this protection behind his back, pointed his finger in Governor Chamberlain's face and called him a thief and a liar. During that meeting men came upon the stand from the democratic party in the audience and called upon General McGowan and other leading democrats to protect Governor Chamberlain's life, because the democrats intended to kill him.

The democrats started out with the doctrine that they intended to carry South Carolina; peaceably if they could, but that they intended to carry it; and in every meeting that I attended, every place that I went the people who surrounded me were from five to ten democrats to one republican, and every man of them armed to the teeth. That was the bull-dozing process adopted by the democratic party in South Carolina to carry the State for Tilden.

Nobody dreamed that South Carolina could ever be carried for the democratic party on an honest vote; everybody knew it could not be done; hence they resorted to that plan. They sent to Mississippi for an ex-major-general of the confederate army; they had him there at the democratic State convention; and he held a private meeting in the secret halls of the State-house for the purpose of instructing the democrats of South Carolina how the democrats had carried Mississippi, telling them that if they in South Carolina would adopt the same plan they could carry that State. They did adopt it; and it was only in consequence of a miscalculation of 1,200 or 1,500 votes—a mere accident—that they did not do it.

The democratic investigating committee, of which the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COCHRANE] who has just addressed the House was a member, came there to investigate the facts; and I would to God that we had time for the House and the country to hear all of that testimony. In that case my democratic friends would have heard some testimony that would have brought the blush of shame to their faces to think that they belonged to a party that would tolerate any such system of outrage and violence as was practiced upon the republicans in my State.

The gentleman says there is no representation here from South Carolina. Well, it is true that we have not Calhoun; but I represent the old district that was once represented by him. [Laughter on the democratic side.] I do not know how much he weighed; but I know that I come here with nearly 4,000 republican majority behind me, after running against the ablest man in the State of South Carolina to-day—General McGowan; and I did not have to come here like the the distinguished gentleman on the other side [Mr. GOODE] and be voted into my seat by a vote of the House. [Laughter.] I do not pretend to compare myself with the distinguished statesman of Carolina; but I do say that I equal him in loyalty to the Constitution and to the Republic. In that respect I equal him as I equal any other man who represents any one of the Southern States on this floor.

I thank God that this commission has arrived at such satisfactory conclusions and that we are to have a peaceable inauguration of a President, not an appeal again to arms. I tell you, gentlemen of this House, the men on both sides who fought the battles of the last war had as much fighting as they wanted, and they are not ready for a fight. They want this matter settled here and now. They want Rutherford B. Hayes, who has the honest majority of the people of this country, installed into office on the 4th of March; and it is going to be done.

I have stated the condition of South Carolina during the last campaign. When the soldiers came there they were called upon by republicans to defend them in the right the Constitution gave them to vote for the people of their choice. That right was guaranteed to republicans and democrats alike, for both parties called upon the soldiers to protect them. The white men in the upper portion of the State were bull-dozing the negroes; and it was claimed by the democracy that the negroes in the lower portion of the State were bull-dozing the democrats. [Laughter.] I do not believe much of that, but I give it for what it is worth. I do know and state the fact that troops were called upon by both parties to protect both parties; and, in my judgment, their presence saved bloodshed in the State.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TEESE. Mr. Speaker, the time for argument has passed. I will not presume at this late time to travel the beaten track of reviewing the proceedings of the commission. I only rise to enter my protest against its decisions and to express my regret that a blow, which I fear will in the near future be fatal to our form of Government, should have been dealt partly by Jerseymen, two of whom sat upon the commission.

Search the annals of the world and no more unjust decision can be found than that of this commission in deciding that Hayes was elected President of the United States, for that is the sum and substance of their finding.

It seems to me that some of the objections of the commission to giving consideration to what are known facts are not worthy even of the name of technicalities.

What does the bill constituting this tribunal contemplate it should do? The duty of its members is comprised in the oath each one took, as follows:

I, ——— ———, do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that I will impartially examine and consider all questions submitted to the commission of which I am a member, and a true judgment given thereon, agreeably to the Constitution and the laws: so help me God.

Now how was this oath "to impartially examine and consider" observed? I will read from the record of the proceedings of the commission, as a specimen only, some of the offers to prove that the returns and certificates from the State of Louisiana were illegal, fraudulent, and void. I read from the RECORD of Wednesday, February 21.

Mr. Commissioner ABBOTT offered the following as a substitute:

"Resolved, That evidence will be received to show that the returning board of Louisiana, at the time of canvassing and compiling the vote of that State at the last election in that State, was not legally constituted under the law establishing it, in this: that it was composed of four persons all of one political party, instead of five persons of different political parties, as required by the law establishing said board."

The question being on the adoption of the substitute, it was decided in the negative:

Mr. Commissioner ABBOTT offered the following as a substitute:

"Resolved, That testimony tending to show that the so-called returning board of Louisiana had no jurisdiction to canvass the votes for electors for President and Vice-President is admissible."

The question being on the adoption of the substitute, it was determined in the negative:

YEAS	7
NAYS	8

Mr. Commissioner ABBOTT offered the following as a substitute:

"Resolved, That evidence is admissible that the statements and affidavits purporting to have been made and forwarded to said returning board in pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of the election law of 1872, alleging riot, tumult, intimidation, and violence at or near certain polls and in certain parishes, were falsely fabricated and forged by certain disreputable persons under the direction and with the knowledge of said returning board, and that said returning board, knowing said statements and affidavits to be false and forged, and that none of the said statements or affidavits were made in the manner or form or within the time required by law, did knowingly, willfully, and fraudulently fail and refuse to canvass or compile more than ten thousand votes lawfully cast, as is shown by the statements of votes of the commissioners of election."

The question being on the adoption of the substitute, it was decided in the negative:

Yeas	7
Nays	8

Mr. Commissioner HUNTON offered the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That evidence be received to prove that the votes cast and given at said election on the 7th of November last for the election of electors, as shown by the returns made by the commissioners of election from the several polls or voting-places in said State, have never been compiled or canvassed, and that the said returning board never even pretended to compile or canvass the returns made by said commissioners of election, but that the said returning board only pretended to canvass the returns made by said supervisors.

The question being on the adoption of the substitute, it was decided in the negative:

Yeas	7
Nays	8

Mr. Commissioner BAYARD offered the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That no person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States is eligible to be appointed an elector, and that this commission will receive evidence tending to prove such ineligibility as offered by counsel for objectors to certificates 1 and 3.

The question being on the adoption of the substitute, it was decided in the negative:

Sir, as it has been well said, this commission not only refused to go behind the certificates, (always excepting the Oregon certificate,) but they refused to go to them; they refused to give them any examination whatsoever. The result is that a man is counted in for President whom no man of any party claims was elected by the people. No one on this floor or off of it pretends that the Hayes electors were elected by the people. The republicans claim that if certain persons had voted, who ought to have voted but did not, then Hayes would have been elected, and so Madison Wells and his fellows were justified in throwing out enough democratic votes to give the election in Louisiana to Hayes. This is the only claim I have heard why the Hayes electors should be declared to have been elected. Sir, the infamy of such a conclusion from such premises is best proved by the simple statement of the matter.

Sir, I voted for this commission, not having very much faith in it, but believing that it might at least conduce to the peace and quiet of the country. I believed, and still believe, that if the President of the Senate had attempted to count the votes civil war and anarchy would have been the result. I hope that the peace of the country may not be disturbed, notwithstanding the people have been so cruelly cheated; and I believe there is patriotism enough in the people to bide their time and right their wrongs at the ballot-box. But, sir, as the stream cannot rise higher than its source, so we cannot expect that the mass of the people will be purer or better than their trusted rulers; and if the very fountains of justice are impure, and the representatives of the people and of the States are so blinded by prejudice or party interest as not even to listen to the appeals of right and truth, then may we well say, God save the Republic!

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate has expired.

Mr. WALLING. I ask that the pending resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the objections to the decision of the electoral commission upon the electoral vote of South Carolina be sustained by the House, and that said votes be not counted.

Mr. WALLING. I move to amend by adding to the resolution these words: "in conformity with the decision of said commission."

Mr. JONES. I offer the following as a substitute for both the pending propositions:

Resolved, That the decision of the electoral commission upon the electoral vote of South Carolina be not concurred in by this House.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken on the substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a point of order. Do not the rules of the House require that the text of the original proposition should first be perfected before a question is taken on a substitute? I submit that the first question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WALLING.]

The SPEAKER. The first vote will be taken on the amendment to the original text as moved by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Let the proposition be read as it will be if the amendment is adopted.

The resolution and the proposed amendment were read.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I demand the previous question on the original resolution.

The SPEAKER. The immediate question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Then I demand the previous question on the amendment to the resolution and the substitute, and on the original resolution itself.

Mr. HALE. Is there any necessity to call the previous question on this proposition? I do not object of course to the gentleman from New York doing all he can to bring the House to a vote on the pending proposition, but it seems to me that amendment is not in order, but that the vote, on the contrary, should be put at once upon the pending resolution, which we have been debating for two hours. The law provides that after the discussion shall take place the question shall then be put, and under the law it seems to me no amendment or anything else can be in order except the vote on the pending resolution.

We have been debating a certain question for two hours in ten-minute speeches, and I make the point of order the question must be first put under the law and that we need not go through the roundabout process of ordering legislation. I make the point of order under the law the question must be put at once after the two hours' debate.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the previous question is usually allowed for the purpose of closing debate. Therefore a substitute has been entertained on several occasions during the progress of this electoral count.

Mr. HALE. But they were always offered at the beginning of the debate, so that the debate proceeded upon the resolution and substitute. Now that part of the work of this transaction has been completed. We have debated the pending resolution and the only resolution pending for two hours. This side of the House did not see fit to offer any substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is competent at the end of the debate to move to amend the pending resolution.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Chair whether that may not render nugatory the whole proceeding, because, if these amendments be voted down, additional amendments might be offered one after another.

The SPEAKER. It is not for the Chair to suggest the remedy. The experience of the gentleman from Maine will tell him the remedy.

Mr. HALE. I think the remedy is in the law, which orders that the question shall then be put.

The SPEAKER. This proposition is amendable, as has been frequently ruled heretofore during the progress of this count.

Mr. CASWELL. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the language of the law which provides that the main question shall then be put.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has heretofore ruled that the main question in that law did cover amendments in two degrees when offered.

Mr. CASWELL. Was not the resolution under discussion for two hours?

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled on that point that the main question as used in the law should be understood in a parliamentary sense to embrace the original proposition, the amendment, and then the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CASWELL. An amendment submitted afterward?

The SPEAKER. In the nature of a substitute. The difficulty with the majority is that they did not have the foresight to see and prevent it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Permit me to say that the ruling of the Chair is evidently correct. If gentlemen will refer to the proceedings in the Florida case they will find there were several amendments offered and voted on in their order, and then a motion to reconsider carried, and another proposition finally adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very clear on that point. The law says the main question shall then be taken.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The purpose of the law is as expressed in the text: the question shall now be put without further debate, merely to exclude further debate.

The previous question was seconded on the resolution and pending amendments.

The question recurred on ordering the main question.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 145, noes 60.

Mr. WALLING demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided it the affirmative—yeas 190, nays 73, not voting 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Beebe, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Blount, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Bass, Buckner, Carr, Cox, Durand, Ellis, Field, Fuller, Gause, Gibson, Haymond, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, King, Lapham, Lewis, Metcalfe, Milliken, Piper, Purman, Savage, Stephens, Swann, Walsh, Warner, and Wheeler—27.

So the main question was ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to read the list of names.

Mr. RUSK. I ask that by unanimous consent the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I object.

When the names of those voting in the affirmative had been read,

Mr. WALLING said: I understand the objection to dispense with the reading of the names has been withdrawn by the gentleman who made it.

The SPEAKER. It has not.

The names of those voting in the negative were read, and the result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WALLING. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered the main question.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that there is every indication of a determination upon both sides of the House to have an all-night session. I desire to avoid that if possible.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to make a proposition. I propose that all dilatory motions and amendments be withdrawn and that we proceed to vote on the original resolution as amended, and very properly so, by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WALLING;] that we then ask the Senate to meet us, and proceed with the count as far as Vermont.

Mr. SPRINGER. As far as the next State objected to.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Which I believe will be Vermont; and that we then take a recess till ten o'clock to-morrow. I make that proposition, understanding that our friends on this side of the House are willing to consent to it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. We are willing to accept the proposition on this side of the House.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] moves to reconsider the vote ordering the main question.

Mr. WALLING. There was an understanding that by an agreement of the House, when the next State should be reached to which objection is made, we should then take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow. On that understanding I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. There was objection to that understanding; and the Chair was proceeding in the ordinary way to state the question before the House.

Mr. WALLING. I understood the objection was withdrawn.

Mr. BANNING. There is no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to hear the proposition again.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. If the House will bear with me for a minute I will again state my proposition. It is this: That all these propositions and amendments, which although probably pertinent to the original proposition are still dilatory in their character, and certainly in their effect, be withdrawn so that the House may be brought to vote directly on the resolution to non-concur in the decision of the electoral commission.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motions to which the gentleman refers are legitimate motions, or he would not have entertained them.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I understand that perfectly. Then I propose that we shall ask the Senate to join us and proceed with the count, and that when we reach the first State objected to, and the two Houses separate on the objection, the House shall then take a recess.

Mr. KELLEY. It being understood that the next State to be objected to is Vermont. If that be understood, we on this side of the House agree to that proposition.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I desire to raise a question of order in regard to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] to reconsider the vote ordering the main question.

A MEMBER. That motion is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that motion to be withdrawn.

Mr. WALLING. I will say to the gentlemen on the other side of the House that if they will accept the proposition that when the next State to which objection is made is reached in the count we shall then take a recess, I will withraw my motion.

Mr. KELLEY. That State being Vermont.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to suggest to the House that this is so important an agreement, and which may involve the possibility of future dispute, that any agreement that may be come to should be in writing.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand the proposed agreement to be this: That the two motions now pending shall be withdrawn; that we proceed at once to vote on the main resolution; that we then notify the Senate that the House has acted upon the objections to the vote of South Carolina; that we then proceed with the count of the votes of Tennessee and Texas; and that when an objection arises to the vote of Vermont a recess shall be taken until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires that the proposition may be put in writing. The Chair may hereafter be called upon to rule upon the agreement, and he does not want to be led into a situation where he may have to decide on matters of fact between gentlemen on the respective sides of the House.

Mr. WALLING. Let the agreement be put in writing.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would suggest that the proposed agreement be stated from the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unwilling to state any agreement of that character unless it be put in writing.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] is now reducing to writing the proposition he has made.

After an interval,

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I have reduced to writing the proposition which I desire to submit to the House. It is as follows:

The amendment to be withdrawn, and the House to come to a direct vote upon the original resolution as amended by Mr. WALLING, of Ohio; the Senate then to be invited to meet the House for the purpose of continuing the count; and when the State of Vermont shall be reached, and the two Houses shall separate, then the House to take a recess until to-morrow at ten o'clock.

Many MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send his proposition to the Chair.

The proposition was read by the Clerk.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from New York to add the words "on any question;" so that it will read: "and the two Houses shall separate on any question."

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I offer the proposition as I have sent it to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the agreement just read shall operate to govern the House in further proceedings as indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was upon the amendment offered by Mr. WALLING to add to the resolution the following:

In conformity with the decision of said commission.

The resolution, as it would read if amended, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the objections to the decision of the electoral commission upon the electoral vote of South Carolina be sustained by the House, and that said vote be not counted in conformity with the decision of said commission.

The amendment was agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move that the Senate be notified by the Clerk of the action of the House in this case and that the House is now ready to meet the Senate in joint convention.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 196) authorizing the President to designate and set apart a site for the colossal statue of "Liberty enlightening the world," and to provide for the permanent maintenance and preservation thereof;

An act (H. R. No. 4301) for the relief of A. W. Plymale;

An act (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 2382) in relation to the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas;

An act (H. R. No. 4657) to provide a building for the use of the United States district and circuit courts, the post-office and internal-revenue officers at Austin, Texas;

An act (H. R. No. 2833) for the relief of Susan P. Vance; and

An act (H. R. No. 4149) to remove the political disabilities of Lloyd J. Beall, of Virginia.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the same committee, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 1216) to provide for the preparation and publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTES.

At six o'clock and eighteen minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall, preceded by its Sergeant-at-Arms and headed by its President pro tempore and its Secretary, the members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate took his seat as Presiding Officer of the joint meeting of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying a chair upon his left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint meeting of Congress for counting the electoral vote resumes its session. The two Houses having separately determined upon the objections to the decision of the commission on the certificates from the State of South Carolina, the Secretary of the Senate will read the resolution adopted by the Senate.

The Secretary of the Senate read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote in the State of South Carolina stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House of Representatives will now read the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I desire to inquire if there is a quorum of the Senate present? The law under which we are acting and the Constitution of the United States require that the certificates shall be opened in the presence of both Houses. If, therefore, there is not a quorum of the House and Senate present I imagine that this proceeding cannot go on.

Mr. BANKS. That is not a question for the convention to decide; the Senate must decide it for itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House will read the resolution of the House.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I protest that this proceeding should not go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. My protest is entered and should go on the record.

The Clerk read the resolution adopted by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That the objections to the decision of the electoral commission upon the electoral vote of South Carolina be sustained by the House, and that said vote be not counted in conformity with the decision of said commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The two Houses not concurring in ordering otherwise, the decision of the commission stands unreversed, and the vote of the State of South Carolina will be counted in conformity therewith. The tellers will announce the vote of the State of South Carolina.

Mr. STONE, (one of the tellers.) South Carolina casts 7 votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President of the United States, and 7 votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Having opened the certificate received by messenger from the State of Tennessee the Chair hands it to the tellers, to be read in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, and the corresponding certificate received by mail is also handed to the tellers.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest that by unanimous consent the reading of the certificates be dispensed with and the result of the vote simply announced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading of the certificate in full and simply announcing the result? [After a pause.] There is no objection and the tellers will make the announcement in conformity with that understanding.

Senator ALLISON, (one of the tellers.) The State of Tennessee casts 12 votes for Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, for President of the United States, and 12 votes for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice-President of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Having opened the certificate received by messenger from the State of Texas, the Chair hands the same to the tellers, to be read in the hearing and presence of the two Houses, and the corresponding one received by mail is also handed to the tellers.

Mr. COOK (one of the tellers) then read the certificate and announced that the State of Texas cast 8 votes for Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, for President, and 8 votes for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice-President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Having opened the certificate received by messenger from the State of Vermont, the Chair hands the same to the tellers, to be read in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, and the corresponding one received by mail is also handed to the tellers.

Mr. POPPLETON. I ask that the certificate from the State of Vermont be read at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The certificate in full will be read, objection being made to dispensing with reading any portion of it.

Senator INGALLS (one of the tellers) then read in full the certificate from the State of Vermont, to the effect that that State had cast 5 votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President, and 5 votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any objections to the certificate from the State of Vermont?

Mr. POPPLETON. I desire to inquire of the President of the Senate whether there have been other returns, or papers purporting to be returns, received from the State of Vermont?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There have been none received except the one submitted.

Mr. POPPLETON. I desire to say that I have prepared objections, upon information by telegraph and otherwise that there were dual returns from the State of Vermont.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I desire to make a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the member from New York [Mr. HEWITT] making a statement? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I hold in my hand a package which purports to contain electoral votes from the State of Vermont. This package was delivered to me by express about the middle of December last, and with it came a letter stating that a similar package had been forwarded by mail to the Presiding Officer of the Senate. Being informed to-day that no package corresponding to this had been received by mail by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, I called upon him and inquired whether any other than one certificate from the State of Vermont had been received by him by mail, and he informed me that there had been no other received by him than the one which was already in his possession.

I then tendered to him this package, the seals of which are unbroken and which is now as it came into my possession. He declined to receive it, upon the ground that he had no authority in law so to do. Under the circumstances I now tender this package to the Presiding Officer of the Senate as purporting to contain electoral votes from the State of Vermont.

Mr. KASSON. I object to the reception of the package.

Mr. SPRINGER. I offer the following resolution——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has stated that he has received but one set of certificates from the State of Vermont. He also states that the law prohibits him from receiving any after the first Thursday in February. His duty is to receive and open and have read all certificates that have been received by him up to and on that day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that a third certificate or return from the State of Florida was received on the 30th day of January, and was laid before the two Houses by the Presiding Officer of the Senate when that State was reached.

Mr. KASSON. This is in the nature of debate, and I must object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 30th of January is not the first Thursday in February. The Chair now asks if there are any objections to the certificate from the State of Vermont?

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit the resolution which I send up——

Mr. KASSON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it is an objection to the certificate from the State of Vermont, the Chair will entertain it; but if it is a simple resolution the Chair cannot entertain it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that it be read. It is in reference to "a question arising under the electoral act," which is provided for by the fourth section of the electoral bill, to which I call the attention of the Chair:

That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission, or other question arising under this act, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes, and not oftener than once.

This is a "question arising under this act," and I offer the resolution as such, and ask that it be read at the Clerk's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair again states that if the member from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] submits an objection to the certificate from the State of Vermont the Chair will entertain it; but the Chair cannot entertain a resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit it as a question arising under the electoral act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot entertain it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the member states that it is an objection to the certificate from the State of Vermont, the Chair will direct it to be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will read it for information. (Cries of "Object!" "Object!" and "Order!" "Order!")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is out of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Gentlemen may as well hear it read, because it is a question arising under the electoral act. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the resolution be read as a question arising under the electoral act. The question is this——

Renewed cries of "Order!" "Order!"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. SPRINGER. That one of the two returns from the State of Vermont has not been laid before the two Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be compelled to direct the member to be seated.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. President, I have rights upon this floor which you cannot take away from me, rights which were given me by the people I have the honor to represent. I desire to submit a "question arising under the electoral act," and now ask that it be entertained by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided that if the member states that it is an objection to the certificate from the State of Vermont, with the signatures of one Senator and one Representative, it will be read; but if not, it cannot be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a question arising under the electoral act. It is now in order, and I ask the decision of the Chair upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that he will not entertain anything except objections to the certificates.

Mr. SPRINGER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot entertain an appeal. [Applause.] The Chair requires order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the question be put on my appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot entertain any appeal.

Mr. SPRINGER. This objection must be read; otherwise the count cannot be proceeded with in accordance to law. [Cries of "Order!"]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The member from Illinois is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair allow this to be stated as a question arising under the act—as an objection to the counting of the vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has stated, and will state once more, that if the gentleman presents an objection bearing the signature of a Senator and a Representative the Chair will receive it and submit it to the joint meeting.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will submit this as an objection to counting the vote, on the ground that another return has been sent here which has not been laid before the two Houses, and ask time to prepare the objection in due form and present it with the signature of a Senator and a Representative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the member submits the paper in proper form the Chair will then rule upon it.

Mr. POPPLETON. I send up an objection——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule upon one case at a time. Let order be restored and gentlemen be seated. We have all night before us. [A pause, during which Mr. SPRINGER was preparing the objection.] The member from Illinois submits an objection to the certificate from the State of Vermont. Has the member a duplicate?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not now; it will be prepared hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House will report the objection.

The Clerk of the House read as follows:

BURLINGTON, VERMONT, February 28, 1877.

[Received at two o'clock and twenty-six minutes p. m.]

To S. J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will turn over the paper and read the objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. The objection first and the telegram afterward.

The Clerk of the House read as follows:

The undersigned, Senator and Members of the House of Representatives, object to the counting of the vote of the State of Vermont, for the reason that two returns, or papers purporting to be returns, of the electoral vote of said State were forwarded to the President of the Senate, and that only one of said returns has been laid before the two Houses, the President of the Senate having stated that but one return has been received by him form said State; and a duplicate copy of one of said returns is herewith submitted for the consideration of the Senate and House of Representatives.

A. S. MERRIMON,
Senator.
W. M. SPRINGER,
A. H. HAMILTON,
Members of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the certificate of the State of Vermont?

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the telegram accompanying this objection be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reading the accompanying telegram?

Several members objected.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. It will not do any hurt to read it. It is not long.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a short telegram; only about ten words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAGE. I object. [Cries of "O, no."]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the gentleman persist in his objection?

Mr. PAGE. I waive the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the telegram will be read.

The Clerk of the House read as follows:

BURLINGTON, VERMONT, February 28, 1877.

[Received at two o'clock and twenty-six minutes p. m.]

To S. J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Certificate of Amos Aldrich as elector was deposited in this office December 13.

B. B. SMALLEY,
Clerk of the United States District Court for Vermont.

A SENATOR. That is not the post-office. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the certificate from the State of Vermont?

Mr. POPPLETON. Yes, sir. I submit the objection which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The member from Ohio submits an objection, which will be read by the Secretary of the Senate.

The objection was read, as follows:

The undersigned Senator and Representatives object to the return from the State of Vermont on the grounds following, namely:

1. That Henry N. Sollace, who is certified to have been elected on the 7th of November, 1876, was at that day, and for a long time before had been, a postmaster of the United States, and therefore held an office of trust and profit under the United States, and could not be constitutionally appointed an elector of said State under the Constitution of the United States.

2. That the law of Vermont did not authorize the election of said Sollace to fill the vacancy alleged to have been the result of the absence of said Sollace from the college of electors.

3. It does not appear that said Sollace had resigned his office of postmaster at the date of his appointment by the college of electors.

4. That Amos Aldrich, who received the highest vote at the election on the 7th day of November, 1876, next to that cast for said Sollace, should have been allowed to have cast one of the electoral votes of the State of Vermont.

W. H. BARNUM, Connecticut,
Senator.
E. F. POPPLETON,
J. A. McMAHON,
JACOB TURNEY, Pennsylvania,
JOHN L. VANCE, Ohio,
G. G. DIBRELL, Tennessee,
FRANK H. HURD,
A. T. WALLING, Ohio,
WM. TERRY,
Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further objections to the certificate of the State of Vermont?

Mr. POPPLETON. I submit the following additional objections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the member from Ohio a duplicate?

Mr. POPPLETON. I will furnish a duplicate hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objections will be read by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ADAMS (Clerk of the House of Representatives) read as follows:

The undersigned Senator and Members object to the Return No. 1 from the State of Vermont on the ground following, to wit:

I. That Henry S. Sollace, who is certified to have been elected on the 7th day of November, 1876, was at that day, and for a long time before had been, a postmaster of the United States, and therefore held an office of trust and profit under the United States, and could not be constitutionally appointed an elector of said State under the Constitution of the United States.

II. That the law of Vermont did not authorize the election of said Sollace to fill the vacancy alleged to have been the result of the absence of said Sollace from the college of electors.

III. It does not appear that said Sollace had resigned his office of postmaster at the date of his appointment to the college of electors, which fact is proper to be inquired of by the commission established by law.

IV. It is proper for the said commission to inquire and report whether Amos Aldrich, who received the highest number of votes at the election on the 7th day of November, 1876, next to that cast for said Sollace, and who is certified as an elector by Certificate No. 2, is not the duly appointed elector for the State of Vermont.

W. H. BARNUM, of Connecticut,
Senator.
EARLEY F. POPPLETON, of Ohio,
JOHN A. McMAHON, of Pennsylvania,
JACOB TURNEY, of Pennsylvania,
JOHN L. VANCE, of Ohio,
GEORGE G. DIBRELL, of Tennessee,
FRANK H. HURD, of Ohio,
ANSEL T. WALLING, of Ohio,
WILLIAM TERRY, of Virginia,
Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the certificate of the State of Vermont?

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the duplicate return shall now be opened by the Presiding Officer and read by the tellers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The original certificate from the State of Vermont has been read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I refer to the dual return submitted with my objections, and referred to in those objections. [Cries of "Order!"] I ask that that second return be opened, and now read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not an objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not an objection, but it is my right to demand that it shall be read as it has been laid before the two Houses. [Cries of "Order!"] It is my right to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the gentleman refer to the one corresponding with that received by messenger; that is, the one received by mail?

Mr. SPRINGER. I allude to the one submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair understood, and rules it out. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the Chair will now order, the State of Vermont having forwarded double returns, that those returns and the objections thereto shall now be submitted to the judgment of the electoral commission. [Laughter and cries of "Object!"]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Presiding Officer has stated that he has not received any duplicate returns from the State of Vermont.

Mr. SPRINGER. They are now before the joint meeting, presented by the gentleman from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the State of Vermont? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the Chair decline to receive the return laid on the table with my objections?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair declines to receive any return from any State at this time.

Mr. WADDELL. As being aliunde, I suppose, Mr. President. [Great laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In any form. [Laughter.]

If there are no further objections to the certificate from the State of Vermont the Senate will withdraw to its Chamber to separately consider the objections already presented and read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point that the electoral vote of the State of Vermont now goes to the commission, and cannot be considered separately by the two Houses. [Laughter.] O, yes; you can laugh now, but the laugh will be on the other side after awhile. Let me tell gentlemen that the law which they have been so anxious to carry out heretofore is now being disregarded by them. [Laughter.]

The Senate, at seven o'clock and ten minutes p. m., withdrew.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now for the House of Representatives to proceed to elect the next President of the United States? [Cries of "Recess!" "Order!"]

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. No motion is in order, but the House now, in obedience to the unanimous agreement, takes a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Accordingly, at seven o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m., the House took a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session at ten o'clock a. m., Thursday, March 1.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to submit some requests to which he thinks there will be no objection.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LYNCH obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on the Louisiana report.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on the substitute offered by him for the Texas and Pacific Railroad bill.

By unanimous consent, Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on House bill No. 3922.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LAWRENCE obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on general politics and finances.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HAYMOND obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on the decision of the electoral commission in regard to the electoral vote of South Carolina.

By unanimous consent, Mr. THROCKMORTON obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks touching the construction of the Texas and Pacific Railroad.

By unanimous consent, Mr. NEAL obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on the construction of the Texas and Pacific Railroad.

By unanimous consent, Mr. CULBERSON obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on the Oklahoma Territory bill.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GOODIN, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of A. H. von Luettwitz, lieutenant in the Third United States Cavalry, there being no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. MCMAHON, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Michael Mack, there being no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. LANE, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withhold from the files of the House the papers in the case of the claim of the heirs of C. M. Lockwood, there being no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. O'BRIEN, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of the petition of the Baltimore City authorities relative to outlay by said city in 1863, there being no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. DE BOLT, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Frank M. Lewis, of Chariton County, Missouri, there being no adverse report thereon.

UNITED STATES EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS AT INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 193) authorizing the publication of the report of the board on behalf of the United States Executive Departments at the international exhibition of 1876; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY LEWIS.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay Henry Lewis $120 out of the contingent fund of the House for services in the Doorkeeper's department during the months of January and February 1877

SALARIES OF PAGES.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the pages of the House their salaries for the entire month of March, out of the contingent fund of the House.

REPORTS OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. BALLOU, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That of the Reports of the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the years 1873-'74 and 1874-'75, in one volume, there be printed from the stereotype plates 5,000 copies; of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the Senate, and 1,000 for the commissioner of fish and fisheries.

Mr. BALLOU moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BALLOU also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Printing, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following concurrent Senate resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 4,500 extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the years 1875 and 1876; of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the commissioner of fish and fisheries.

Mr. BALLOU moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT LITTLE TRAVERSE HARBOR.

Mr. BRADLEY, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking Congress for an appropriation to construct a light-house on the point of Little Traverse Harbor, in the county of Emmet, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution asking Congress for an appropriation to construct a light-house on the point of Little Traverse harbor, in the county of Emmet, Michigan.

Whereas the rapidly increasing commerce of Little Traverse Bay and the waters of that vicinity of Lake Michigan demands the immediate improvement of the harbor of Little Traverse by the erection of a suitable light-house at its entrance: Therefore,

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Michigan, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their best endeavors to procure the necessary appropriation for the construction of a suitable light-house at the entrance of Little Traverse harbor, Emmet County, Michigan.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit copies of the foregoing preamble and resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

ALONZO SESSIONS,
President of the Senate.
JOHN T. RICH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved February 26, 1877.

CHARLES M. CROWELL.

STATE OF MICHIGAN.
Office of the Secretary of State, ss:

I, E. G. D. Holden, secretary of state of the State of Michigan, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of joint resolution asking Congress for an appropriation to construct a light-house on the point of Little Traverse harbor in the county of Emmet, Michigan, with the original as enrolled and now on file in this office, and that it is a true and correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole of such original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Michigan, at Lansing, this 26th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1877.

[SEAL.]

E. G. D. HOLDEN,
Secretary of State.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. WIGGINTON. I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have passed at this time a bill to remove the political disabilities of Henry B. Davidson, of California.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I object to proceeding to the consideration of bills. I have no objection to bills being introduced for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that there are on the Speaker's table quite a number of disability bills which he would like to have an opportunity of presenting to the House.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I have no objection if this is a bill for the removal of disabilities.

The SPEAKER. The pressure on the Chair in this respect is very great, and the Chair thinks these citizens should have their disabilities removed. Is there objection to the present consideration of these bills?

There was no objection.

The bill (H. R. No. 4694) to remove the political disabilities of Henry B. Davidson, of California, was read a first and second time.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Is there a petition accompanying the bill?

The SPEAKER. There is a petition accompanying it and it will be printed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to object to this business, unless it be confined to matters for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the House that these bills for the removal of political disabilities may be considered at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object to the consideration of bills for the removal of disabilities.

By unanimous consent, the following bills were taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof:

The bill (S. No. 1203) to remove the political disabilities of M. L. Bonham, of South Carolina; and

The bill (S. No. 1285) to remove the political disabilities of J. L. M. Curry, of Virginia.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be understood that there are petitions accompanying all these bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is noticing that fact; and if any member desires, the petitions will be printed in the RECORD.

The following bills from the Senate were by unanimous consent taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to a third re ding, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof:

A bill (S. No. 1136) to remove the political disabilities of Wade H. Gibbes, of South Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 915) to remove the political disabilities of D. H. Hill, of North Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 1096) to remove the political disabilities of R. C. Gatlin, of Arkansas;

A bill (S. No. 1272) to remove the political disabilities of William Butler, of South Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 1273) to remove the political disabilities of William R. Jones, of Texas;

A bill (S. No. 1274) to remove the political disabilities of S. P. Moore, M. D., a citizen of Virginia;

A bill (S. No. 1276) to remove the political disabilities of W. F. Carrington, of Virginia;

A bill (S. No. 1277) to remove the political disabilities of Catesby ap R. Jones, of Alabama; and

A bill (S. No. 1278) to remove the political disabilities of John S. Marmaduke.

The SPEAKER. There are several House bills removing disabilities which have been returned from the Senate with amendments. If there be no objection, these bills will be taken up, and the amendments acted upon.

There was no objection.

Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3636) to remove the political disabilities of Richard S. Kinney and William R. Jones were read, as follows:

Strike out the name of William R. Jones.

Strike out the words "reason of their participation in the late war" and insert "the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that in the opinion of the Senate there shall be a separate bill for each individual whose disabilities are to be removed.

The amendments were concurred in.

Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 3791) to remove the legal and political disabilities of William A. Webb, of Virginia, was read, as follows:

Strike out in the body of the bill and in the title the words "legal and."

The amendment was concurred in.

Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 3730) to remove the political disabilities of John D. Simmns and Samuel V. Turner, of Virginia, was read, as follows:

Strike out the name of "John D. Simms" wherever it occurs.

The amendment was concurred in.

Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 3260) to remove the disabilities of Lawrence S. Baker, of Tarborough, North Carolina, was read, as follows:

Strike out in the body of the bill and in the title the words "legal and."

The amendment was concurred in.

DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back with a favorable recommendation the Senate resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That of a digest of the opinions of the Attorneys-General and of the decisions of the Federal courts with reference to international law and kindred subjects, prepared at the Department of State, there be printed in addition to the usual number 500 copies for the use of the Senate, 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of State.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think this is a matter of general interest. I believe I must object.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. The Committee on Printing have unanimously instructed me to report this resolution favorably and ask the concurrence of the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let the resolution be modified so as to say "for the use of the present members of the House of Representatives."

Mr. HOLMAN. I must call for a division of the House on agreeing to this resolution. This is a publication of no general value.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that unanimous consent is necessary to the passage of any of these resolutions at the present time; and he understands the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as objecting.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT FOR 1876.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Printing a resolution in reference to the Smithsonian Report for 1876, with sundry amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That 10,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1876 be printed; 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,500 for the use of the Smithsonian Institution: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages shall not exceed five hundred, and that there be no illustrations except those furnished by the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "two" and insert "three;" so that it will read "$3,000" instead of "$2,000."

In line 8 strike out the word "seven" and insert "six;" so that it will read "$6,000" instead of "$7,000."

There being no objection, the amendments reported by the Committee on Printing were agreed to; and the resolution of the Senate, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution, as amended, was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is there a quorum present? I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. HENDEE. I have a resolution in relation to the vote of Vermont which I desire to offer.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I object to everything but the regular order. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WALLING. I rise to a question of privilege. I submit that a member has a right to move a call of the House, and that motion has been made by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN.]

Mr. CONGER. Well, there have been two-thirds of the House voting all the morning to pass bills removing disabilities.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That was done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count the House. [After a pause.] There are one hundred and sixty-two members present, which is more than a quorum.

Mr. WALLING. I rise to a question of order, and it is whether it is not the right of a member on this floor to move a call of the House, and whether upon that motion the roll must not be called to verify the fact that there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to read to the House from Rule 132:

A call of the House shall not be in order after the previous question is seconded, unless it shall appear, upon an actual count by the Speaker, that no quorum is present.

That would seem to imply that a call of the House is in order, and the Chair therefore entertains the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] and will submit it to the House.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the question whether, as we are acting upon the objections made to the vote of Vermont, and when the Speaker has by actual count ascertained that there is a quorum present, if this is not a dilatory proposition?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the effect of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana is of a dilatory character, but the Chair thinks that he is bound to submit the question once to the House. The Chair desires to say that he has counted the House and that there are one hundred and sixty-two members present.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Then I submit that it is not proper for any gentleman to demand a call of the House.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to inquire whether it is not within the knowledge of the Speaker that in former Congresses of which he was a member there was a quorum present and a call of the roll showed that no quorum was present?

The SPEAKER. That was when gentlemen declined to vote; and moreover the motion would be allowable under the rules of the House, but under the law is not allowable, and the Chair is not responsible for the law.

Mr. WALLING. I understood the Speaker to say that he would submit the question to the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I understood that the Chair had recognized my colleague from New York, [Mr. WOOD,] and he offered a proposition. I submit that no other proposition can be in order before the resolution offered by my colleague is presented. He is upon the floor to present that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] was on the floor to offer the resolution, and to demand the previous question thereon; but neither was the resolution read nor the previous question demanded until it had been read, nor could it have been demanded until the resolution was read.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I moved a call of the House before the gentleman from New York was recognized.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Allow me to say a word. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] raised the question that no quorum was present, whereupon the Chair proceeded to determine the question. He counted the House and found that there were one hundred and sixty-two members present, which is more than a quorum. Now I submit that I had the floor, and that my resolution is before the House.

Mr. HOSKINS. My understanding is that we are operating under the electoral law, and if we are operating under that law and the Chair has decided that a quorum is present he is not bound to entertain a motion for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The House can very readily, if they do not wish a call of the House, vote down the motion.

Mr. HOSKINS. That is very true but we have to do business under the electoral law

The SPEAKER. This does not depend upon the law, but upon the Constitution itself.

Mr. HOSKINS. Yes; but if a call of the House is allowed now it may be allowed at any stage of the proceedings whenever there is not a full House, or even if one member be absent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would direct the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOSKINS] to that clause of the Constitution, which says:

> But a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide.

Now, while the Chair has decided that there is a quorum present, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] practically disputes it, just as is the case when the Chair decides that a vote has either been carried in the affirmative or the negative and a division is called and a question raised as to the correctness of the decision of the Chair.

Mr. GARFIELD. That question is raised when the House is called upon to act on propositions relating to business.

The SPEAKER. The point is just here, that less than a quorum can do nothing. The Chair made an effort to ascertain if there is a quorum present, and he did ascertain to his own satisfaction that a quorum is present.

Mr. HOSKINS. And no gentleman has the right to raise that point until it appears upon a count, either by division or otherwise, that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken; the Chair has the right to find out for himself whether or not there is a quorum present.

Mr. HOSKINS. The Chair misunderstands me. What I said was that no gentleman on the floor has the right to claim that there is no quorum present, after the Speaker has decided that there is a quorum present, until some question has been submitted to the House and upon a vote there shall appear to be no quorum.

The SPEAKER. That is the very point the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] desires to arrive at.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. If a member can at any time rise in his seat and move a call of the House for the purpose of ascertaining if there be a quorum present, then business can be continually interrupted by such a motion.

The SPEAKER. A gentleman would have that right if no quorum was present.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Under the ruling of the Chair that would be such a dilatory proceeding that the Chair under the law would not entertain it.

The SPEAKER. That depends upon how often the proceeding is repeated.

Mr. HALE. Cannot the Chair order tellers for the purpose of settling the question whether there be a quorum present or not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present; but the difficulty is that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] is not willing to take the statement of the Chair that there is a quorum present.

Mr. HALE. Cannot the Chair order tellers to determine the question?

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that a motion for a call of the House has been made.

The SPEAKER. That is the motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope we will take a vote on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is what is necessary to be done.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Let the vote be taken; we do not want any delay.

The SPEAKER. It is, in fact, a dispute as to the correctness of the count by the Chair.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. That certainly is not proper.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think there is any propriety in it, but the gentleman has the right to make it. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WALLING. I must disclaim any intention of impropriety in the motion I have made; and I make this disclaimer in response to the remark of the Speaker. I have a right to ascertain if there is a quorum in the House, which I propose to do by having a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from New York, Mr. WOOD, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. WALLING.

Mr. HENDEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENDEE. My inquiry is this: Will it be in order to call the yeas and nays after the count of the tellers.

Mr. WALLING. Undoubtedly.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. What is the question upon which the House is now called to vote by tellers?

The SPEAKER. It is upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WALLING,] that there be now a call of the House.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 32, noes 139.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. WALLING said: I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALLING. I desire to inquire if it is in order to call the yeas and nays on my motion; if so, I desire to make that call.

The SPEAKER. It is in order to have the yeas and nays, if the constitutional number direct that they be called.

Mr. WALLING. Then I call for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 44 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 68, nays 169, not voting 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Carr, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Davis, Dibrell, Douglas, Faulkner, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Hartzell, Henkle, Humphreys, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lane, Luttrell, McMahon, Meade, Mills, Money, Morrison, Mutchler, O'Brien, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Riddle, Roberts, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, William E. Smith, Sparks, Springer, Stanton, Stenger, Stone, Terry, Thompson, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Walsh, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Jere N. Williams, and Benjamin Wilson—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Blount, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Buttz, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Cason, Chittenden, Collins, Crapo, Crounse, Culberson, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davy, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Egbert, Evans, Felton, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gause, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hendee, Henderson, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoar, Hoge, Holman, Hopkins, Hoskins, House, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Levy, Lord, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Morgan, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Seelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Stowell, Strait, Tarbox, Teese, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates—169.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Atkins, Bass, Beebe, Bliss, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Conger, Cox, Durand, Ellis, Field, Gibson, Robert Hamilton, Hays, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hooker, Hunton, Frank Jones, King, Franklin Landers, Lewis, Lynde, Mackey, Maish, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Odell, Page, Payne, Piper, Purman, Rice, Schumaker, Slemons, Southard, Stephens, Swann, Thomas, Tucker, Waldron, Ward, Warner, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Woodburn, and Young—53.

So the House refused to order a call of the House.

During the roll-call,

Mr. LANDERS, of Connecticut, stated that his colleague, Mr. WARNER, was absent on account of illness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WALLING. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order a call of the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offered a resolution, which has not yet been read.

Mr. WALLING. But I moved to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order a call of the House. I have the right to do that. It is my motion. It is a privileged motion.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman from New York undoubtedly has the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the motion to reconsider may take any gentleman off the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes a privileged motion, and that is to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order a call of the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. That is clearly and palpably a dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider cannot be considered as a dilatory motion.

Mr. WALLING. It never has been so held in any legislative body.

Mr. HANCOCK. I rise to a question of order. We cannot hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. It is well taken. The officers of the House are requested to invite gentlemen who are here by courtesy of the House either to cease conversation or retire beyond the bar.

The gentleman from Ohio moves to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order a call of the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. It is that under the ruling of the Chair and under the electoral law it is not competent for any member to make any motion which is clearly intended to cause delay; that the object of this motion can have no practical effect in the interest of public policy or legislation when we know there is more than a quorum of members present. On propositions relating to a call of the House it has been determined three times already there is more than a majority of members on the floor. I hold therefore that the motion to reconsider is entirely unnecessary and only intended to consume time in the call of the roll.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to address the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. What is it?

Mr. MILLS. I ask the gentleman whether every motion requiring a vote of this House is not to that extent dilatory and does not require some time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to say in reply to the gentleman from New York that he never has ruled in any particular, either by inference or otherwise, that a motion to reconsider was a dilatory motion. The Chair is very clear that anything the House can do, it can undo by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. WALLING. That is the very thing.

The SPEAKER. The House having had before it a motion to order a call of the House, and having refused to order a call of the House, the House has it within its power to undo its actions by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. HANCOCK. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 173, nays 66, not voting 51; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Ashe, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Beebe, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Buttz, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Davy, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Egbert, Ellis, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Flye, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Gause, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hendee, Henderson, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hopkins, Hoskins, House, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Levy, Lord, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Morgan, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Phelps, William A. Philips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Seelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, Smalls, Strait, Stevenson, Stowell, Tarbox, Teese, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Robert B. Vance, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Warren, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates—173.

NAYS—Messrs. John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Carr, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Dibrell, Finley, Forney, Foster, Franklin, Fuller, Goode, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Henkle, Hooker, Humphreys, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lane, Lynde, Mackey, Maish, McMahon, Meade, Mills, Money, Mutchler, O'Brien, Odell, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Rice, Riddle, Roberts, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stanton, Stenger, Stone, Terry, Thompson, Turney, John L. Vance, Waddell, Walling, Walsh, Whitthorne, and Wigginton—66.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Atkins, Bass, Bliss, Blount, Buckner, Cabell, Cate, Caulfield, Clymer, Collins, Culberson, Durand, Field, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Hays, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, Hunter, Hunton, Frank Jones, King, Franklin Landers, Lewis, Luttrell, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Morrison, Payne, Piper, Pratt, Purman, Schumaker, A. Herr Smith, Stephens, Swann, Thomas, Waldron, Ward, Warner, Watterson, Wheeler, Wike, Andrew Williams, Jere N. Williams, Woodburn, and Young—51.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that it had determined that the vote of Henry N. Sollace as elector of the State of Vermont should be counted with the other four votes of that State, the objections to the contrary notwithstanding. It further announced that the Senate was ready to meet the House to proceed with the count of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF THE STATE OF VERMONT.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I now claim the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York was recognized by the Chair to submit a resolution. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. POPPLETON,] who was the objector, demands as his right as objector to offer a resolution, whereupon the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio if he desires to move a substitute, or the gentleman from New York to move an amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is not a question of privilege superior to the motion of the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. This is a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Mine is a question of privilege, of the highest privilege.

Mr. CAULFIELD. The question which I propose to offer to this House is of higher privilege than that even of the gentleman from New York, and I ask that the Speaker will not agree to recognize any other gentleman until he hears this question which I desire to present.

Mr. BANKS. What is the gentleman's privileged question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not heard it stated yet.

Mr. BANKS. We cannot act upon it——

Mr. CAULFIELD. The question, Mr. Speaker, which I desire to present——

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I rise to a question of order. I ask the Speaker to entertain the questions of privilege in the order in which they are presented.

The SPEAKER. It is very plain that but one question of privilege can be pending at one time.

Mr. WADDELL. How does the Chair know which question is of higher privilege until he hears the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CAULFIELD. I ask that I may be allowed to state what is my question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. POPPLETON,] the objector to the certificate from the State of Vermont, asks to be recognized, and the Chair considers it his duty to recognize him.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Supposing I can show to the Speaker and to the House that the question which I propose is one of higher privilege than that of the gentleman from Ohio whom the Chair has recognized or proposes to recognize, would I not then be entitled to submit that question to the House before the gentleman from Ohio proceeds?

The SPEAKER. It is impossible for the Chair to distinguish between degrees of privilege attaching to different questions. One privileged question occupying the attention of the House precludes the introduction of another at the same time.

Mr. CAULFIELD. There is no question of privilege now occupying the attention of the House.

The SPEAKER. There is.

Mr. CAULFIELD. And I propose to submit one.

The SPEAKER. There is a question of privilege before the House. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. POPPLETON,] the objector, is on the floor on that question of privilege.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Will the Chair allow me to state the question of privilege which I desire to present?

Mr. EDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] will submit his proposition.

Mr. POPPLETON. If I am recognized as holding the floor I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CAULFIELD.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Many members objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio if he yields the floor yields it absolutely when objection is made.

Mr. POPPLETON. I send a resolution to the Chair.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. There is but one question of privilege before the House. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] that he must be dealt with in good faith. The gentleman from Ohio, if he presents anything that does not appertain to the objection that he made in the joint convention, is not entitled to be recognized.

Mr. POPPLETON. I desire to say to the Speaker——

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. POPPLETON. I desire to say that I am informed and believe that the resolution I have sent to the Chair pertains to one of the objections filed in the matter of the electoral vote of the State of Vermont.

Mr. CAULFIELD. The resolution is perfectly relevant.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit there can be no decision as to the relevancy of this proposition until it has been read in the hearing of the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I submit, as a question of order, that there is but one question which can be submitted to the House under the law which now governs our proceedings.

Mr. SPRINGER. That I deny.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. And that question I have sent to the Chair in the form of the ordinary resolution calling upon the House to act on the objection to the electoral vote of the State of Vermont. The gentleman from Ohio presented to me an identical copy of my own resolution; and it was understood between him and myself that he should present that resolution and I should call the previous question on it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement to the House.

Mr. CAULFIELD. The House was no party to that agreement.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The Chair was no party to the agreement. It was between the gentleman from Ohio and myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House what took place. The Chair recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] because the Chair did not think the gentleman from Ohio was in the House, although he subsequently learned from the gentleman that he was. The Chair, having been informed by the gentleman from Ohio that he claimed his right as the objector to offer the usual resolution, sent for the gentleman from New York, and the two gentlemen came to the Chair together, and they entered into an understanding between themselves that the gentleman from Ohio was to be recognized by the Chair to offer the resolution in almost the exact words of the resolution which was in the hands of the gentleman from New York and the usual resolution heretofore offered in such cases.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. With the additional understanding——

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state it. With the additional understanding that the gentleman from New York was to be recognized by the Chair to demand the previous question.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. That was the understanding.

The SPEAKER. That is the position of the case.

Mr. WALLING. I desire to offer a resolution pertinent to the pending question, which I desire to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist on the reading of the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. POPPLETON]

The SPEAKER. The Chair now submits to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] whether, after the statement made to the Chair, and after the statement made by the Chair in the presence of this House, he insists on changing his resolution from the form in which he showed it to the Chair.

Mr. POPPLETON. If the Speaker will bear with me I will make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. POPPLETON. I desire that the Speaker and this House shall understand the true status of this matter. I was making an effort to obtain the floor for the purpose of introducing both of these resolutions if necessary. I stood in this aisle attempting to catch the eye of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was not in possession of the resolution which he now has, for it was then in the custody of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CAULFIELD,] and was shown to the Chair by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. POPPLETON. I desire to say that I had notice of the resolution; I was advised as to the resolution; I was present when it was prepared, and while I did not have the physical custody of the resolution I had information concerning it and knew all about it. When I came upon the floor of the House this morning I ascertained the fact that the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD] in my absence had arrogated to himself the right to control the floor against my rights as the objector.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and the Chair would not permit it.

Mr. POPPLETON. I went to the Speaker of this House and laid the matter before him, and he informed me that he would send for the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.] The gentleman from New York made his appearance, and in company with myself approached the Speaker's desk; and there I claimed my right. The gentleman from New York said that he insisted upon moving the previous question upon the resolution when offered; but I made no reply to it. I made no agreement; I made no contract. I simply placed myself upon my rights as a member of this House and the mover of the objection in the matter of the electoral vote of Vermont.

The SPEAKER. Does not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] think that his silence when that statement was made to him by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] was calculated to lead the Chair to understand that the agreement was accepted?

Mr. POPPLETON. Why, Mr. Speaker, I only desired that the gentleman from New York should not claim that which I believed did not belong to him and did belong to me. I believed I was entitled to the floor and to the conduct of this matter in relation to the electoral vote of Vermont. My only object, my only purpose was that the gentleman from New York should not usurp and take my place in the management of this matter, for I claim that he had no right to do so. I made no compact, no bargain with any party.

Mr. WOOD of New York. It is entirely unnecessary for my friend from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] to get anyways warm about this matter; it is a very simple question. I think the gentleman from Ohio does himself as well as others injustice. The Speaker has related correctly and accurately what actually occurred. I had the right to claim the floor; the journal clerk has a record of my recognition by the Chair. My resolution is a question of privilege, and there is nothing in the rules or in the law that gives any one man any greater right than another to move this resolution. It is a question of privilege, and I have just as much right to present such a resolution as the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. HENDEE,] the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. POPPLETON,] or any member of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not say to the contrary.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. When the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] claimed the privilege of presenting the resolution I yielded to him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not say to the contrary, but suggested to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] that there was a propriety in recognizing the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] to submit the resolution. The resolution being once before the House any member could have demanded the previous question upon it. It was not for the gentleman from New York only to do so; any other member could have done the same thing.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now rise to a question of order. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] having the floor has submitted a proposition which is upon the Clerk's desk, and that we are entitled to have it read in order that we may know what it is.

The SPEAKER. It will be read, and the Chair will rule upon it afterward.

Mr. RUSK. I object to its being read if it is not in order.

Mr. WOOD, of Pennsylvania. Do not object to the reading.

The Clerk began the reading as follows:

Whereas, at a joint meeting of the two Houses, on the 28th day of February, 1877——

Mr. POPPLETON. I desire to say, as there may be some claim that I have yielded the floor to allow this resolution to be read, that I claim my right to the floor to offer a resolution.

The Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

a sealed package, addressed to the President of the Senate, purporting to contain the electoral vote of the State of Vermont, was delivered to the said President of the Senate by Mr. HEWITT, a member of this House, who then stated that he received it by express about the middle of December last, and with it a letter notifying him that a similar package had been forwarded by mail to the President of the Senate; and said HEWITT being informed by the said President that no package had been received corresponding thereto, that he, Mr. HEWITT, had previously to said joint meeting, tendered said package to said President of the Senate, who declined to receive the same, and which statement was not denied.

And whereas it also appeared by a telegram from the clerk of the district court of the United States for the district of Vermont that a duplicate of said return was deposited in that office on the 13th day of December, 1876;

And whereas objections were made pursuant to law to the certificate purporting to be the electoral vote of Vermont which had been opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses, and said package was in terms made a part of said objection, and still remains unopened, and said objection cannot be considered until said package is opened according to law:

And whereas the said return then tendered to said President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses was retained by him or by the Secretary of the Senate, and the said President of the Senate refused to open said sealed package in the presence of the two Houses: Therefore,

Resolved, By the House of Representatives, that the refusal of the President of the Senate, to open, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, said sealed package purporting to be the electoral vote of the State of Vermont, was a violation of law and of the privileges of this House, and that until said package shall be opened pursuant to law in the presence of the two Houses of Congress, the counting of the votes cannot further proceed according to the Constitution and law now in existence for the counting of said electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Resolved, further, That the Clerk of this House inform the Senate of the adoption of the forgoing preamble and resolution and request the Senate to meet this House in joint session, to the end that said package purporting to be a certificate of the electoral vote of Vermont be opened by the President of the Senate and that the proceedings thereafter be held according to law.

The hour of twelve o'clock having arrived, the Chair decided a new legislative day to have begun.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the house of representatives of the State of Missouri, reciting that Samuel J. Tilden was duly elected President of the United States, and calling upon Senators and Representatives in Congress to resist the inauguration of R. B. Hayes, to the committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the electoral vote for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Also, the petition of Stephen H. Preston, William F. Hewitt, and 75 other citizens of Marshall, Michigan, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of citizens of Darlington, Pennsylvania, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CABELL: The petition of citizens of Carroll County, Virginia, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. HOSKINS: The petition of citizens of Alden, New York, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. HURLBUT: Memorial of H. J. Campbell and others, concerning the recent election in Louisiana, to the committee on the recent election in Louisiana.

By Mr. JENKS: Two petitions from citizens of Pennsylvania, for the passage of a general bill granting arrears of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILLER: The petition of citizens of New Berlin and adjoining towns in New York, for the repeal of the bank-tax laws, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. ODELL: The petition of Henry L. Dean and others, of New Rochelle, New York, that all lawful means be used to prevent Rutherford B. Hayes ever becoming President of the United States, to the committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States.

By Mr. PHELPS: The petition of John Morgan and 257 other citizens and ladies of Middletown, Connecticut, for the passage of a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia and the Territories except by a vote of the majority of the legal voters and of ladies over eighteen years of age, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas: Joint resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, asking that aid be extended to complete the Southern Pacific Railroad, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. SINNICKSON: Four petitions, one from citizens of Newark another from citizens of Elizabeth, another from citizens of Washington, the fourth from citizens of Rahway, New Jersey, for the repeal of the bank-tax laws, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. VAN VORHES: The petition of J. T. Ward, Joseph Dodds, and 33 other citizens of Washington County, Ohio, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WADDELL: The petition of citizens of Wilmington, North Carolina, for the passage of the bill appropriating $50,000 for the purpose of establishing a colony in the polar regions, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 1, 1877—10 a. m.

The recess having expired, the Senate resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives (at eleven o'clock and twenty-five minutes a. m.) by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2382) granting the right of way to the Hot Springs Railroad Company over the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas.

ENROLLED BILLS.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. No. 1216) to provide for the preparation and publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 2382) granting the right of way to the Hot Springs Railroad Company over the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 2833) for the relief of Susan P. Vance;

A bill (H. R. No. 4301) for the relief of A. W. Plymate, of West Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4149) to remove the political disabilities of Lloyd J. Beall, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4657) to provide a building for the United States district and circuit courts, post-office, and internal-revenue officers at Austin, Texas; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 196) authorizing the President to designate and set apart a site for the colossal statue of "Liberty enlightening the world," and to provide for the permanent maintenance and preservation thereof.

Mr. DORSEY, (at twelve o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) There are a number of enrolled bills from the House of Representatives on the President's table awaiting his signature. I ask unanimous consent that they be signed and the fact announced to the Senate, so that they may go to the President of the United States for his signature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks that unanimous consent be given to the signing of several enrolled bills on the table. Is there objection?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask whether, in the opinion of the Chair, that would be a departure from the statute under which we are acting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would so construe it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the request made by the Senator from Arkansas cannot be entertained.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States at one o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m., by Mr. C. C. SNIFFIN, one of his Secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 1185) to ratify an agreement with certain bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians; and also with the northern Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians;

An act (S. No. 234) to allow a pension of $36 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg;

An act (S. No. 859) for the relief of certain claimants under the donation land law of Oregon, approved September 27, 1850;

An act (S. No. 1271) to authorize the printing and distribution of the eulogies delivered in Congress on announcement of the death of the late Allen T. Caperton, a Senator from the State of West Virginia; and

An act (S. No. 1270) to authorize the printing and distribution of the memorial addresses on the life and character of the late Michael C. Kerr, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, (at five o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.,) by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4694) to remove the political disabilities of Henry B. Davidson, of California; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 915) to remove the political disabilities of D. H. Hill, of North Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 1096) to remove the political disabilities of R. C. Gatlin, of Arkansas;

A bill (S. No. 1136) to remove the political disabilities of Wade H. Gibbes, of South Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 1203) to remove the political disabilities of M. L. Bonham, of South Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 1272) to remove the political disabilities of William Butler, of South Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 1273) to remove the political disabilities of William R. Jones, of Texas;

A bill (S. No. 1274) to remove the political disabilities of S. P. Moore, doctor of medicine, a citizen of Virginia;

A bill (S. No. 1276) to remove the political disabilities of W. L. Carrington, of Virginia;

A bill (S. No. 1277) to remove the political disabilities of Catesby ap R. Jones, of Alabama;

A bill (S. No. 1278) to remove the political disabilities of John S. Marmaduke; and

A bill (S. No. 1285) to remove the political disabilities of J. L. M. Curry, of Virginia.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 3636) to remove the political disabilities of Richard S. Kinney and William R. Jones;

A bill (H. R. No. 3260) to remove the disabilities of Lawrence S. Baker, of Tarborough, North Carolina;

A bill (H. R. No. 3730) to remove the political disabilities of John D. Simms and Samuel V. Turner, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3791) to remove the legal and political disabilities of William A. Webb, of Virginia.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution for the printing of ten thousand five hundred copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1876; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message further announced that the House had passed a resolution for the printing of five thousand copies of the Report of the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1873–'4 and 1874–'5; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate for the printing of four thousand five hundred extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner on Fish and Fisheries.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF VERMONT.

At ten o'clock and fifty minutes p. m., Mr. G. M. ADAMS, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, the House of Representatives has passed the following:

Ordered, That the vote of Henry N. Sollace, claiming to be an elector from the State of Vermont, be not counted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives, and returned to its Chamber at eleven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., when the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF WISCONSIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having returned from the joint meeting upon an objection submitted to the certificate from the State of Wisconsin, the Secretary of the Senate will now read that objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

The undersigned, Senators and Representatives, object to the counting of the vote of Daniel L. Downs as an elector for the State of Wisconsin, on the following grounds, namely:

That the said Daniel L. Downs held the office of pension surgeon and of examining surgeon for the Pension Office by valid appointment under the laws of the United States prior to the 7th day of November, 1876, the day of the presidential election, and upon said day, and upon the 6th day of December, 1876, at the time of his assuming to cast a vote as elector for the State of Wisconsin, and that he has continually held said office from a long period prior to the said 7th day of November, 1876, until the present time. And the undersigned therefore state that said Downs, as pension surgeon and as examining surgeon for the Pension Office as aforesaid held an office of trust and profit under the United States on the day of the presidential election and on the day that he voted as an elector for the State of Wisconsin, and therefore could not be constitutionally appointed an elector for the State of Wisconsin or vote as such elector under the Constitution of the United States.

Wherefore the undersigned aver that the said Downs was not duly appointed an elector for the said State, and that his vote cannot be constitutionally counted.

And the undersigned hereto annex the evidence of the facts above stated and to be taken as a part of their objections.

WM. H. BARNUM, Connecticut,
J. E. McDONALD, Indiana,
JAMES K. KELLY, Oregon,
HENRY COOPER, Tennessee,
JOHN W. JOHNSTON, Virginia,
Senators.

WM. P. LYNDE, Wisconsin,
SAML. D. BURCHARD,
J. R. TUCKER, Virginia,
J. F. PHILIPS, Missouri,
WM. M. SPRINGER,
A. V. RICE, Ohio,
CASEY YOUNG,
JOHN L. VANCE, Ohio,
H. D. MONEY,
Representatives.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the vote of Daniel L. Downs as an elector for the State of Wisconsin be counted together with the other nine electoral votes of that State, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move that the House of Representatives be informed of the action of the Senate, and that the Senate is now ready to repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives and proceed with the count.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the House be notified that the Senate have voted upon the objection to the certificate from the State of Wisconsin and are ready to meet them.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will execute the order of the Senate.

At three o'clock and fifty-eight minutes a. m. [Friday, March 2] Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, the House of Representatives has adopted the following:

Resolved, That the vote of Daniel L. Downs, as an elector of the State of Wisconsin, should not be counted, because he held an office of trust and profit under the United States, and therefore was not constitutionally appointed an elector by the said State of Wisconsin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives, and returned to its Chamber at four o'clock and twelve minutes a. m., [Friday, March 2,] when the President pro tempore resumed the chair and called the Senate to order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint meeting of Congress for counting the electoral vote having ascertained and declared the result of that vote and the meeting having been declared dissolved, the Senate has returned to its Chamber, and the result of that vote will be entered on the Journal of the Senate. The Senate resumes its legislative business.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator from New York to allow the Chair to refer some bills which are on his table.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. OGLESBY presented a resolution of the Live-Stock Association of the United States, praying the passage of an act to provide for and maintain a veterinary bureau in connection with the Agricultural Department; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. A petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, praying to be granted the use of the Rotunda of the Capitol building for the purpose of holding an inauguration ball therein, March 5, 1877, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I am directed by the committee to report it back adversely and ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg permission to report from the Committee on Claims on the bill (S. No. 1284) for the relief of William L. Hickam, of Missouri, with an amendment, and to ask that the bill may now be passed.

Mr. CONKLING. Cannot I be allowed one moment to make a remark? To-morrow in the intervals of the appropriation bills, there will be plenty of opportunity for formal matters of legislation. There are a great many executive matters upon the table; we may not be able to have another executive session; it is late in the morning; Senators are all weary, and if on all sides it might be consented to that morning business and reports be withheld until to-morrow, there will be opportunity for them; but it may be a hardship to clear the galleries for an executive session and we may not like to do it. Therefore I insist upon my motion, if my friend will indulge me, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending which the Chair will announce the signature of enrolled bills.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to say that this bill is for the payment of $1,600, the amount of an award to the orphan children, the helpless children, of one of the soldiers of our country, and if there be objection to it under such circumstances it will have to go over. It is necessary that it should pass the House in order that the Department may issue a duplicate check and have it paid.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The following enrolled bills, having previously received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, were signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1216) to provide for the preparation and publication of a new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 2382) granting the right of way to the Hot Springs Railroad Company over the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 2833) for the relief of Susan P. Vance;

A bill (H. R. No. 4301) for the relief of A. W. Plymate, of West Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4149) to remove the political disabilities of Lloyd J. Beall of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4657) to provide a building for the use of the United States district and circuit courts, post-office, and internal-revenue offices at Austin, Texas; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 196) authorizing the President to designate and set apart a site for the colossal staute of "Liberty enlightening the world," and to provide for the permanent maintenance and preservation thereof.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 4694) to remove the political disabilities of Henry B. Davidson, of California, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 4692) establishing post-roads was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That of the report of the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the years 1873–'74 and 1874–'75, in one volume, there be printed, from the stereotype plates, 5,000 copies, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the Senate, and 1,000 for the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate concur in that resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That 10,500 copies of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1876 be printed; 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 6,500 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages shall not exceed five hundred, and that there be no illustrations except those furnished by the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. ANTHONY. This is the usual resolution. I move that the Senate concur.

The motion was agreed to.

OREGON ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 5,000 additional copies of the evidence and report in the case of the Oregon electoral vote be printed for the use of the Senate and House.

AMENDMENTS TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. MORRILL, Mr. CHAFFEE, Mr. CONOVER, Mr. MORTON, and Mr. MITCHELL, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM L. HICKAM.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I ask that the bill I reported just now be passed. It is agreed to affirmatively by the whole committee.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1284) for the relief of William L. Hickam, of Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause the pension agent at Saint Joseph, Missouri, to issue and deliver to William L. Hickam a duplicate check, No. 61872, for the sum of $1,616.33, in favor of William L. Hickam, for one lost in the mail November 13, 1876, provided that the Secretary of the Interior be satisfied that the same has not been paid.

The Committee on Claims proposed to amend the bill by adding:

And that said Hickam give bond, with security approved by the Secretary of the Interior, to hold the United States harmless against the payment of the original check.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTIONS IN ARMY STAFF DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. LOGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1243) to repeal the statute forbidding appointments and promotions in the staff of the Army, to report it back without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It repeals section 1194 of the Revised Statutes, now applying only to grades in the Pay Department of the Army above the rank of major.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CONKLING. Now I insist on my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes a. m., Friday, March 2) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 1, 1877.

The SPEAKER. The hour of twelve o'clock having arrived, the Chair decides that a new legislative day has begun and the Chaplain will offer prayer.

Prayer was offered by Rev. FRANKLIN BABBITT, Rector of Grace Church, Nyack, New York.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move that the reading of the Journal of yesterday be dispensed with.

Mr. WALLING and others objected.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the Journal of yesterday, omitting therefrom the resolutions and reports.

Mr. SPRINGER. (interrupting.) I make the point of order that the Clerk is not reading the Journal of yesterday. He is omitting a large portion.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois insists upon the reading of the papers the Chair desires to say that the Journal is not made up, and it was impossible to make it up, and the gentleman's objection would compel the omission of the reading of the Journal altogether.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that under the rules of the House we cannot proceed with business until the Journal of yesterday has been read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not sustain that point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to dispense with the further reading of the Journal.

Mr. WALLING, Mr. SPRINGER, and others objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot have done what is impossible.

Mr. WALLING. So much of the Journal as has been made up can be read?

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. SPRINGER, (interrupting.) I have made the point of order during the reading of the Journal that the Clerk is not reading the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday at all, and that under the first rule of the House no business can be done until the Journal of yesterday has been read and approved.

Mr. BANKS. No question of order can be raised on the reading of the Journal until that reading has been completed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I raise the point of order now.

Mr. BANKS. But it cannot be raised now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can raise the point of order after the conclusion of the reading by moving to correct the Journal.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well, sir; then I will wait.

The Clerk again resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. SPRINGER, (interrupting.) I submit the point of order that the Clerk is not reading the Journal, and I ask that the Journal be read. I understand, however, that I can make the point of order at the close of the reading.

The SPEAKER. Whenever the point of order is raised the Chair will decide it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will reserve the point of order until the end of the reading.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the Journal as far as prepared.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Journal of yesterday will be approved.

Mr. SPRINGER. I made the point of order that the Journal of yesterday had not been read.

Mr. BANKS. No point of order can be raised upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. It is not a question of order. It is a question whether the Journal is correct.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that we cannot proceed with business until the Journal of yesterday has been read under Rule 1 of the House; which is as follows:

1. He [the Speaker] shall take the chair every day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned on the preceding day; shall immediately call the members to order; and, on the appearance of a quorum, shall cause the Journal of the preceding day to be read.

Now, the Journal of the preceding day has not been read. A portion of the Journal of yesterday has been read, but before we can pass upon the approval of the Journal we must have it read as the proceedings of the House yesterday indicate. I desire in this connection to call the attention of the Chair to a precedent at the close of the Forty-third Congress where the reading of the entire Journal was insisted upon and it was ruled by Mr. Speaker BLAINE that it was in order to have the Journal read and that the proceedings of the House must be stopped until the Journal was made up and read.

Mr. BANKS. The Journal has been read, and if it is incorrect can be corrected. I move that it be approved.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist upon my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain the question of order.

Mr. BANKS. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to correct the Journal as read in my hearing, and I know no other mode in which I could ascertain its contents, by inserting after the words "Mr. PIPER submitted the following report; which is as follows:" the report itself.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move to suspend the rule requiring the reading of the Journal.

Mr. MILLS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from New York cannot be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that it can be made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point that the reading of the Journal cannot be dispensed with except by unanimons consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rule which requires the reading of the Journal.

Mr. MILLS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's right.

The question being taken or ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 32, noes 170; less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. SPRINGER and others called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I renew the demand for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 175, nays 85, not voting 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Blount, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Buttz, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Culberson, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Egbert, Ellis, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gibson, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Williams, and Benjamin Wilson—85.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Bass, Chapin, Clymer, Durand, Field, Gause, Glover, Robert Hamilton, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, Hunton, Frank Jones, King, Franklin Landers, Le Moyne, Lewis, Luttrell, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Piper, Purman, Stephens, Waldron, Gilbert C. Walker, Ward, Wheeler, and Wilshire—30.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion to suspend the rules and dispense with the reading of the Journal was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. STENGER. My colleague, Mr. CLYMER, is absent, engaged on a conference committee.

Mr. GOODE. My colleague, Mr. HUNTON, is detained from the House by sickness.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, whether the paper which was read by the Clerk purporting to be the Journal is the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

The SPEAKER. It does not matter whether it is or not; the reading of the Journal has been dispensed with by a suspension of the rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. Something was read which purported to be the Journal.

CORRECTION OF A VOTE.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Upon ordering the main question on the proposition with reference to counting the vote of South Carolina, I am recorded as not voting. I did vote and voted "no."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Do I understand that the paper presented by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. POPPLETON,] and now at the Clerk's desk, is before the House?

The SPEAKER. It has been read for information.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I raise a point of order upon the paper. I submit that under the first section of the act for counting the electoral votes nothing is competent at this time as business before the House except to proceed to consider the objections presented in the oint meeting of the two Houses. I call the attention of the Speaker to a clause near the close of the first section:

And the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State from which but one return has been received shall be rejected except by the affirmative vote of the two Houses.

My point is that no business of any kind is in order except to proceed to consider the objections made in the meeting of the two Houses, and that the proposition offered by the gentleman from Ohio is not of that character.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Admit for a moment that the gentleman is correct in his version of the law; if the law is that nothing can be done prior to the consideration of the objections, and there be an impediment in the way of the consideration of those objections, that impediment must be first met and removed. There is an impediment in the way of the consideration of the objections which were made to the counting of the vote of Vermont last evening. That impediment, Mr. Speaker, is this: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] rose and offered objections to the certificate which had been presented from Vermont. Those objections in terms made the certificate which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] sent to the desk part and parcel of them. It was a material part of those objections made by the gentleman from Illinois. I ask, if those objections are to be considered by this House, is not that certificate one of the objections which we are now called upon to consider?

I ask further, how can those objections be considered until we know exactly what they are? You cannot know what they are until that sealed package of papers made a part of those objections has been opened. Those objections were accepted by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses assembled for the purpose of counting the electoral vote. Those objections are now before this House, and they cannot be heard or considered until that certificate has been opened.

The resolution which has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] simply asks that the Senate be notified this House is now ready to go into joint meeting with them for the purpose of opening that certificate, in order that we may proceed to the business which the gentleman from New York is now trying to hurry us to. We cannot proceed to that business until this obstacle has been removed, and that obstacle cannot be removed until the President of the Senate, occupying his position, Mr. Speaker, at your right, opens that certificate under the law and submits it to the consideration of the two Houses for their consideration. When the President of the Senate accepted that certificate as part of the objections, it became his duty to open that certificate under the law, and the President of the Senate is required by the existing law to open all certificates and papers purporting to be certificates.

Mr. WATTERSON. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Not yet.

Many MEMBERS on the republican side. Regular order!

Mr. CAULFIELD. Here is a paper purporting to be a certificate and the President of the Senate refused to receive it because it was not presented prior to the 1st day of February. If that be the case, if that is the law, if the certificate could not be received because it was not presented prior to the 1st day of February, then what does the law provide in such a contingency? The law is, when any certificate has not been received—let me turn to the book, and read the exact words:

When the certificate of votes from any State has not been received at the seat of Government on the first Wednesday of January, indicated by the preceding section, the Secretary of State shall send a special messenger to the district judge in whose custody one certificate of the votes from that State has been lodged, and said judge shall forthwith transmit the list to the seat of Government.

The telegram, the letter, the papers, submitted here last evening, all show that the copy required by law of this certificate is deposited with the clerk of the district court at Montpelier, Vermont.

Now, sir, if gentlemen on the other side are determined to go on with their infractions of law, we shall stand here and insist that that certificate be sent for as the law requires, and opened by the President of the Senate.

Mr. HENDEE. I wish to say a word.

Mr. CAULFIELD. We are not here for that purpose. We are here to see that the President of the Senate performs a duty imposed upon him by the law, and that is, if he will not accept that certificate as a certificate under the statute, he has accepted it as part of the objections, and he must open it and let us see what it is. If the Senate will come into this House and the President of the Senate will open that certificate, then the whole objection is obviated, and we can go on with the consideration of the business which the gentleman from New York now persists we shall at once proceed with.

Mr. HENDEE. I wish to inform the gentleman from Illinois that the clerk of the court who sent that dispatch and who holds that package is a democrat and a member of the democratic national committee.

Mr. POPPLETON. What of that? So much the better.

Mr. CAULFIELD. We are glad to hear it. We know then that it is in honest hands.

Mr. HENDEE. Not only that, but the package sent to be delivered to the President of the Senate was put into the hands of the leader of the democratic party, who kept it too long; that was the trouble.

Mr. SPARKS. Now we know that we will get honest returns because they are in the hands of democrats.

Mr. RICE. And one copy was also placed in the mail for delivery to the Vice-President.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I desire to submit to the Speaker, and through the Speaker to the House, that this discussion is not relevant to the question of order presented by myself. The proposition as to the action of the President of the Senate yesterday is immaterial to that question. I have my own opinion upon that, and it may be, sir, that the gentleman from Illinois and myself may not differ very materially on the proposition. But, sir, this is not that proposition. I hold that this is not the time to consider or to raise the question that the gentleman proposes in this resolution. I hold that we can do nothing except to proceed to consider the objections. What objections? The objections presented to the President of the Senate. And one of these objections was presented by the gentleman's colleague and sent up in due form and is transmitted to this House to be considered in the debate provided for by the law. All the merits that lie behind these objections will come up in the discussion. But the question that I raise now is that it is not competent for us to do anything except to proceed to consider those objections; and the resolution which I had the honor to offer this morning looked to raising the question, to presenting the issue to the House whether the vote of this elector shall or shall not be counted.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say a word on the point of order of the gentleman from New York.

It is very evident that the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Illinois is one which must be preliminarily considered before you proceed to the consideration of the other objections which are made. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] offered an objection to the closing of the objections to the vote from Vermont, unless the other return which had been made and of which the President of the Senate had been apprised should also be submitted by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses. The failure on the part of the President of the Senate to do this, it is contended, makes the two Houses powerless to entertain any resolution upon that question. I think there is something more involved in this than a mere technical point, and that you cannot proceed now to consider the objections to the electoral vote of the State of Vermont predicated upon the idea that there is but one single return from that State. That is what the resolution of the gentleman from New York proposes; and he reads the concluding clause of the first section of the law in order to demonstrate that in a case where there is but a single return it is the duty of the two Houses immediately to proceed and decide upon the objection by a vote. No one denies that.

But the question that lies back behind this is whether the certificates from the State of Vermont are single or dual in their character. If they are dual in their character the clause of the law to which the gentleman from New York appeals does not apply. On the contrary, if this is a return which it is the duty of the President of the Senate to open and submit to the consideration of the two Houses, Vermont then becomes a State with dual electoral returns, which should be submitted under the law to the electoral commission. The proposition, therefore, of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAULFIELD] should be submitted to the House; unless we concede the doctrine which this commission was created to avoid, namely, that the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses has power to open what certificates he pleases and not what it is his duty under the law to open and what the two Houses may determine in separate action it is his duty to open.

Therefore I say the point of order is not well taken. The clause of the law which the gentleman from New York cites in support of the point of order applies to a State from which it is conceded there is but a single return, and not to a State from which it is contended, as the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois does, that there are dual returns which should be submitted to the commission.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word or two on this matter bearing on the question of order. At the joint meeting of the two Houses on yesterday, after the reading of the returns which came to the hands of the President of the Senate, it was proposed to present an additional return which appeared in the hands of one of the Representatives of the State of New York; and that return was presented to the President of the Senate. He declined to receive that return on the ground that it did not come to him as required by the law which provides as follows:

The electors shall dispose of the certificates thus made by them in the following manner:

1. They shall, by writing under their hands, or under the hands of a majority of them, appoint a person to take charge of and deliver to the President of the Senate, at the seat of Government, before the first Wednesday in January then next ensuing, one of the certificates.

There is no pretense in the objection, and there is no pretense in the argument that the certificate here presented comes within the requirement of the law by being certified and sent by the proper persons to the President of the Senate within the time required by law, and there is no pretense that it comes through an official channel. It has no more significance than any other paper coming in an unofficial way after the time fixed by law had expired.

It has occurred to me that the democracy of Vermont must have been singularly derelict in their duty if they waited for others, when the counting of the presidential vote was going on, to take the guardianship of their interests, and to take steps to secure their rights which they had not themselves thought it necessary to take. But what is the effect of the motion now pending? Is it to consider the objection made yesterday in the joint convention—and what other objections than those made yesterday can be considered?

But that is not the resolution. The object of the resolution, and that goes directly to the point of order, is to re-open the count of the State of Vermont, to notify the Senate that the Vice-President refused to open a certificate of election, and that the House of Representatives considers that he has been derelict in his duty, and has failed to comply with the law, and therefore it summons the Senate back here in order that the law may be complied with and the certificate opened. At the joint meeting of the two Houses yesterday this paper was presented and a refusal was made to receive it. The Senate retired to its Chamber and has taken its action upon the vote of Vermont and concluded all it has to do upon that subject. I will say further that the will of the people of Vermont would be manifestly defeated by the proposed action. It seems to me that it is now proposed to raise a new question outside of the question before the House for its decision. It asks us to do a very extraordinary thing. If we have the power to make a new issue to-day, to pass a resolution to re-open the count and disregard the action that was taken on yesterday, then any other question can be brought up at this time. I submit, therefore, upon the point of order that we can no more consider the question presented by this resolution than we could consider any measure of current legislation at this time. The resolution proposes a new question in disregard of what was done yesterday and a re-instruction of the House and the Senate as to their duty. It seems to me that the only thing we can now do is that proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD,] to proceed in the ordinary mode to consider the objections to the vote of the State of Vermont which were filed yesterday.

Sir, I am not the keeper of the consciences nor have I the care of the action of others; but I take occasion to express my regret that when there are so many great, valid, and substantial objections to that which has been done we cannot rest upon that which has substance and which will command our own respect and that of the country, but resort to that which it seems to me can command the respect of no man.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that, with great respect for all the parties concerned, he considers that a grave mistake and wrong was committed yesterday in the joint meeting of the two Houses in this: that the Presiding Officer refused to receive even for opening and reading for information a package which had all the surroundings of an authentic and duly attested paper in relation to an electoral vote of the State of Vermont. The Chair, in one aspect of this case, thinks that he would be called upon to rule that the action of the Presiding Officer of the joint convention on yesterday was wrong. He does not think that he possesses that power; neither in a technical sense, as he understands it, does he believe that the action of the joint convention can be reviewed in this House in the manner proposed. And yet there is above all a fact upon which this matter rests, and that fact is, whether this House shall have possession of that paper; and to that extent, and that extent only, the Chair thinks that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. POPPLETON,] in so far as it requests the return of that paper from the Senate, which, as the allegations in the preamble stated, was taken away from here in an undue manner—that this proposition is in order.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I offer an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I propose to modify the resolution offered in accordance with the ruling of the Speaker.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. WOOD, as follows:

Ordered, That the vote of Henry N. Sollace, claiming to be an elector from the State of Vermont, be not counted.

Mr. HOOKER. I raise the point of order that the amendment is not pertinent to the resolution.

Mr. CAULFIELD. It is not germane at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] as a substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] has not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio had the floor, and the gentleman from New York now moves to amend the proposition by this substitute.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I understand the gentleman from Ohio had the floor.

The SPEAKER. He had not the floor beyond the presentation of the resolution; that is as clear as day. If the gentleman means to say he is entitled to the floor for debate he is right.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. He was entitled to the floor on the resolution he introduced.

The SPEAKER. He is entitled to the floor under the law for ten minutes when the debate shall commence.

Mr. KNOTT. I offer the following as a substitute for the resolution:

Resolved, That this House require that the package tendered by the member from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses on yesterday and purporting to be a certificate of the electoral vote for the President and Vice-President of the United States in the State of Vermont, shall be opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses, and if found to be such a certificate, the same shall be submitted, together with the certificate read in the presence of the two Houses, to the electoral commission for its judgment and decision, and that the Senate be requested to make a like order, requiring the President of the Senate to open said package in the presence of the two Houses; and until such order be made the House will not be ready to meet the Senate to proceed with the count of the electoral vote.

Mr. POPPLETON. I will accept that as a substitute for my resolution.

Mr. MILLS. O, no. Let us vote on your resolution.

Mr. POPPLETON. I accept it in place of my resolution, and upon it I call the previous question.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I believe I have the floor on my amendment.

The SPEAKER. When the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] was submitted, the Chair recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] to offer an amendment, and also recognized the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] to offer a substitute for the amendment, which is an amendment in the second degree, and all that can be moved under the rules. The Chair doubts the right of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. POPPLETON,] except by unanimous consent, to withdraw his resolution after it has been entertained and an amendment offered to it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] had not yielded the floor to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. It was not necessary that he should yield it; the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] took the floor in his own right for that purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] submitted a resolution upon which a point of order was made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.] The Chair ruled that a portion of the resolution was in order and a portion of it was not in order. Therefore that portion of the resolution which is in order is pending before the House, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] desires to submit that portion of his resolution which is in order in the words before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to modify his resolution, but that does not prevent the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] from having the right to move an amendment to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true; but the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to have his resolution submitted in the shape which the Chair has ruled would be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes no objection to that.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all we want.

Mr. POPPLETON. That is the position which I assumed at once upon the announcement of the Speaker of his decision, and upon that I called the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood, and the gentleman from Ohio certainly stated that he accepted another proposition, the one offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] which the Chair thinks he could not do so as to take away from the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] the right to offer an amendment to the original resolution.

Mr. POPPLETON. I regard the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky as almost identical with the intimation of the Speaker as to the course which should be pursued.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had not ruled out of order the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, but has said that it is in the nature of an amendment in the second degree, and that the power of amendment can go no further under the rules or under the law.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to know what is the proposition before the House at this time?

Mr. MILLS. Is it in order to move to lay on the table the proposition of the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see how the gentleman can navigate in between two other propositions for that purpose.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MUTCHLER. Is it in order for this House to entertain a resolution as to whether it will or will not count a vote which has not been presented in the joint meeting of the two Houses? The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] offers a resolution that a certain vote from Vermont be not counted. I hold that it is not in order for the House to entertain any such resolution until the certificate is opened and laid before the two Houses in joint meeting.

The SPEAKER. This entire subject is within, and should be within the control of the majority of this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a further point of order in regard to the proposition of the gentleman from New York; that under the law known as the electoral bill, there having been presented two certificates from the State of Vermont——

The SPEAKER. That is just the fact that the Chair alluded to in his decision.

Mr. SPRINGER. Two returns having been made from that State——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled upon that point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. How does the Chair know he has ruled upon the point of order until I have presented it?

Mr. EDEN. I rise to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDEN. As no further amendment is in order, is it not now in order to proceed with the two hours' debate under the law?

The SPEAKER. That is not only in order, but subsequent to that debate it is in order for the House to be compelled to vote on the main question, which covers the three propositions before the House, the resolution and the two amendments.

Cries of "Regular order!"

Mr. TUCKER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TUCKER. I raise the point of order upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] that it is not germane to the original proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has also decided that point.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the Chair allow me to state my reasons?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. TUCKER. The resolution of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] looks to the recovery of the paper taken out of the possession of the House, upon the recovery of which it may appear that there are two certificates from the State of Vermont, which would necessitate the reference of the question of its electoral vote to the electoral commission.

The proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] is a proposition upon the whole subject, as if there was only an objection to a single return.

If that is voted upon, and we notify the Senate of our decision upon that question, how shall we ever get a vote on the second return, if there is one?

The SPEAKER. That is the very point. It is within the province of a majority of this House to settle that question and not within the province of the Chair to rule upon it. Hence the Chair alluded to it as a question of fact which the majority of this House had the right to determine.

Mr. TUCKER. I apprehend, sir——

Cries of "Regular order!"

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is this: that the preliminary question raised by the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio must be determined before we enter upon the two hours' debate on the objections, for this reason: If the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio is determined in the affirmative, then it is our right to have before us the return which is now in the possession of the President of the Senate; and until we have the question decided whether we are to have that return before us which is not now in our possession, the two hours' debate upon the objections cannot of course begin.

The SPEAKER. That is not a question of order at all; it is a question for the judgment of this House. If a majority of the House agree in judgment with the gentleman from Maryland, they will vote accordingly and so reach that preliminary question.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, [cries of "Regular order!"] I do not desire the Speaker to rule upon the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN,] that the two hours' debate be allowed to go on. I desire that question to be reserved by the Speaker until this matter is decided upon the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Maryland withdraws his point of order in that respect. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] is recognized under the law to address the House upon the subject of the objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much time is the gentleman entitled to?

The SPEAKER. Under the law, to ten minutes and no more; and he can speak but once.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Do I understand the Chair to rule that the two hours' debate is now to commence?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so rules.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I put this question to the Speaker: Supposing that after the two hours' debate shall have been exhausted the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio is sustained, and the President of the Senate delivers to us that return, have we not the right to consider and discuss that in another two hours' debate?

The SPEAKER. That is a speculative inquiry. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. EDEN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that the two hours' debate allowed by the law is to begin now, under the ruling of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is right in so understanding.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Well, sir, I appeal from that decision. I contend that there is no power in this House to proceed to the consideration of this question until we know what the question is. Under the present circumstances we do not know what the question is.

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to determine, not the Chair.

Mr. CAULFIELD. But until that certificate is opened it is impossible for us to know what objections we are to consider.

Mr. O'BRIEN. We must have the certificate before we can discuss and vote upon this question.

Mr. WATTERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether the progress of this debate is in order or not.

The SPEAKER. It is in order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] is recognized; and if he does not desire to speak the Chair will recognize some other gentleman.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Does not the Chair entertain the appeal from his decision?

Mr. CAULFIELD. I insist on my appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal.

Cries of "That is right," and applause.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the Chair will not insist upon that position. This is one of the most important questions that ever came before this House. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I insist that this appeal must be entertained and that we must know whether this is a case that has gone to the commission or whether it is now to be considered by the separate Houses. This is not a dilatory motion, but one that arises upon a vital provision of the electoral law; and I ask the Chair to entertain the appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair considers that he is bound by the law——

Mr. SPRINGER. I want the law enforced.

The SPEAKER. And the law is as plain as the day.

Mr. SPRINGER. If this case under the law has gone to the commission, it is there now by the operation of the law and we have nothing before us.

The SPEAKER. This House has it within its power by a majority vote to call from the Senate that paper.

Mr. CAULFIELD, Mr. O'BRIEN, and others. When?

The SPEAKER. Surely gentlemen will not say that the Chair has that power.

Mr. WALLING. But we ask for a vote first on calling that paper from the Senate.

Mr. O'BRIEN. We want that question decided now, whether we have the right to send to the Senate for that certificate.

Mr. BEEBE (who addressed the Chair amid cries of "Order!" and great confusion) was understood to say: Mr. Speaker, I have stood with the majority of this House against every proposition to delay obedience to this law. I acknowledge my obligations under that law. I recognize the further fact that we are here not only under that, but in the exercise of every prerogative and privilege guaranteed by the Constitution to this House. [Cries of "Order!" mingled with applause.] Will the Chair entertain the motion——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain no motion.

Mr. BEEBE. Then I charge the Speaker with doing what I have complained of the electoral commission for doing, violating the very law under which we are operating.

Mr. RICE. The Speaker is usurping power.

The SPEAKER. The Chair usurps no power.

Mr. BEEBE. Ninety members of this House demand that appeal from the decision of the Chair, and it cannot be had.

Mr. MILLS. I hope that usurpation is not becoming so incapacitating as to cause usurpation of power over members of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair neither usurps nor does he permit oppression upon the Chair. [Applause upon the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. BEEBE. Will the Chair state the reason for his ruling?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides according to his conscience and the law.

Mr. BEEBE. Will the Chair state the reason for his ruling?

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I ask whether——

[Here there was great confusion in the Hall, members rising and standing.]

Mr. BEEBE, (standing on top of one of the desks.) I demand to know the reason why the Chair refuses to state his reasons for refusing to hear an appeal. [Applause.] With all respect to the Chair I ask him to state the reason of his ruling.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand that the galleries be cleared.

Mr. BEEBE. From my place in this House I now under the rules ask the Speaker of this House respectfully to state the reason for his refusal to entertain the motion which I make.

The SPEAKER. The Chair gave his reasons at length on a similar proposition yesterday.

Mr. CAULFIELD. We have no recollection of any such proposition having been made.

Several MEMBERS. It never has been.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. If the Chair ruled that way yesterday he must have ruled wrongly.

Mr. FRANKLIN. We demand that the appeal from the decision of the Chair be placed before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I move this House now take a recess until to-morrow at ten o'clock.

Mr. BEEBE. I claim that I have some rights upon this floor. I claim that courtesy from the Chair that I always have cheerfully rendered to him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will proceed with the public business.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the officers of this House enforce order.

Mr. MONEY. Let them try it.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. They can do it.

Mr. SPARKS. Let them try it.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I demand that they enforce order upon you and all others who are out of order. If I were an officer of the House I would try it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is determined that gentlemen shall take their seats. The Chair is not going to submit longer to this disorder. [Loud applause on the floor and in the galleries.] If gentlemen forget themselves it is the duty of the Chair to remind them that they are members of the American Congress. [Renewed applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. GLOVER. I appeal to members of this House——

Mr. SPARKS. The Chair is simply the Speaker of this House of Representatives. We are the representatives of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. BEEBE. I respectfully ask——

Mr. SPARKS. Look at these lobbies, Mr. Speaker. I have tried to get the Speaker's ear so that I could direct attention to them. We are mobbed by the lobby! Here is the rule, [holding up the Manual,] and we ask the Chair to enforce it. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. It is not the lobby, sir.

Several MEMBERS. It is.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. The lobby would be ashamed of it. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKS. So too the American people are ashamed of the action of members, some too claiming to be democrats. [Applause.]

Mr. GLOVER. I appeal to every member of this House to try to contribute something to its order and its respectability. The time must come when we must have order in this House, and it is the duty of every member now to give aid to restore order in this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires every gentleman who is not a member of this Congress to retire.

Mr. COX. I call for the reading of the one hundred and thirty-fourth rule and its enforcement promptly.

Mr. SHEAKLEY. I ask for the reading of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair orders that the spaces behind members' desks on both sides of the House shall be cleared. That he has the right to do, and it is in the interest of good order.

Mr. COX. I have the right to have read the one hundred and thirty-fourth rule. I desire to say with all respect to the Chair that the rule should be enforced in the cloak-room as well as on the floor.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. On that side of the House.

Mr. COX. On both sides of the House.

Mr. WATTERSON. In the cloak-room as well as on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms is discharging his duty in that connection, as the Chair understands.

After an interval,

Mr. SHEAKLEY. I call for the reading of the rule on page 115 of the Digest.

The SPEAKER. Rule 134 will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No persons, except members of the Senate, their Secretary, heads of Departments, the President's Private Secretary, foreign ministers, the governor for the time being of any State, Senators and Representatives elect, judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the Court of Claims, and such persons as have by name received the thanks of Congress, shall be admitted within the Hall of the House of Representatives or any of the rooms upon the same floor or opening into the same: Provided, That ex-members of Congress who are not interested in any claim pending before Congress, and shall so register themselves, may also be admitted within the Hall of the House; and no person except those herein specified shall at any time be admitted to the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the twenty-second rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend the House during its sittings; to aid in the enforcement of order, under the direction of the Speaker; to execute the commands of the House from time to time, together with all such process, issued by authority thereof, as shall be directed to him by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. In obedience to the rule which has just been read, the Sergeant-at-Arms and his deputies will clear the lobby and see that order is maintained. The Chair is resolute in this respect.

Mr. SAVAGE. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the cloak-rooms are now filled with parties not entitled to the privileges of the floor, who have simply gone from the floor to the cloak-rooms.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will govern himself accordingly.

After an interval during which the floor of the House and the cloak-rooms were being cleared by the Sergeant-at-Arms and his deputies of persons not entitled to the privileges of the floor,

The SPEAKER. Members will be in order and cease conversation. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] desires to ask a question.

Mr. WALLING. I desire to inquire if this debate proceeds now whether at the end of the two hours the House will then be permitted to take a vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] modifying the original proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. POPPLETON,] to wit, that that paper be required to be returned here before the vote is taken on the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WALLING. I wish to ask further whether on that vote being taken, and the House deciding to make that request, it will be made before the House acts on the proposition of the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. The first vote will be on the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT.] If that prevails, of course the House will have to wait until that resolution of the House is executed by the Senate or until some answer is made to it.

Mr. RICE. I wish to inquire whether it would not be more proper, eminently so, to have this question settled beforehand—before the debate takes place.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already ruled on that, that the debate now commences.

Mr. HARRISON. May I be permitted to say one word?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the debate now is to be upon the objections that are before the House. I ask, is not a part of those objections a sealed paper of which we have not possession?

The SPEAKER. There is allusion in these objections to a sealed paper; but that is not a part of the objections, because that paper is in the possession of the President of the Senate, having been addressed to him as President of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Speaker will look at the objection offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] he will see that the contents of that package are made a part of the objection.

The SPEAKER. Nothing in the objection submitted by the gentleman from Illinois can alter the fact.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to discuss this question understandingly. There is a paper somewhere which has been made a part of the objection of the gentleman from Illinois. We are now about to proceed with the discussion under the two-hours debate, while we have no idea what we are discussing. I am not one of those who want delay. I want to prevent it.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BEEBE. It is in order, Mr. Speaker, to discuss——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] is not in order, not having been recognized. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAULFIELD] has been recognized by the Chair to ask a question.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I wish to refer to the provision in the first section of the electoral law:

When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall in like manner submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision.

Under that law I now ask the Speaker to submit the objection of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to the House.

The SPEAKER. All the objections were submitted on yesterday and were read at length.

Mr. CAULFIELD. But the papers are not in your possession or in the possession of this House to submit. There is nothing to submit.

The SPEAKER. The objections were all read yesterday.

Mr. CAULFIELD. We ask you to submit the objections for debate. I ask the Speaker to submit under the law the objection of Mr. SPRINGER to the House for debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is going to do it, and recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] as entitled to the floor for ten minutes.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I ask to have that objection read.

The SPEAKER What objection?

Mr. CAULFIELD. The objection of Mr. SPRINGER.

The SPEAKER The objections were read yesterday.

Mr. CAULFIELD. They were read here yesterday in the presence of the two Houses for information.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The House is certainly entitled to one reading of the objection.

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to a question of order. Objection having been made to the reading, I ask that the question be submitted to the House under the former rulings of the Chair.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. CAULFIELD. And I am asking for the regular order, and that is the reading of the objection so that we may know what we are considering.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the objection to be read.

The Clerk read the objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask now that the sealed paper that was handed in at the desk yesterday at the joint meeting of the two Houses with the objection be produced.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks an impossibility, and the Chair is not presumed to be able to do what is impossible.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then how can we proceed to the consideration of the question when you have it not even in your possession? What are we to consider? Where are the papers?

Mr. PAGE. I would like to know if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAULFIELD] is to occupy the floor for the whole day?

Mr. CAULFIELD. I will if it is necessary to maintain the rights of the American people in this House.

The SPEAKER. Well, there are other persons here who are able to take care of the rights of the people as well as the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CAULFIELD.]

Mr. CAULFIELD. I want the Chair to understand that I am able to take care of the rights of my own constituents.

The SPEAKER. The President of the Senate took with him the paper to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAULFIELD] alludes, which was a paper, so far as the occupant of the chair knows, addressed to Mr. FERRY, Presiding Officer of the Senate. How is it, therefore, possible that this House can call for its reading?

Mr. CAULFIELD. Then we cannot proceed to the consideration of the objection.

The SPEAKER. The paper is not a part of the objection.

Mr. RICE. It was submitted as a part of the objection.

Mr. CONGER. The President of the Senate refused to receive that paper and never has had possession of it.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair was advised that it was taken hence by either the gentleman to whom it was addressed or else by some officer of the Senate who acted in his stead.

Mr. BANKS. It was not taken by the President or by the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. It belongs to Mr. HEWITT, of New York, a member of this House.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, it was not given back to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.] It was refused to be given back to the gentleman from New York, and so far as the Chair understands it was taken from here by some officer of the Senate.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think we ought to have it if we can get it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to get it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The House of Representatives ought then to send to the Senate, or to any officer of the Senate who has it in his possession, and demand it.

Mr. COX. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and it is, whether the Chair could entertain a proposition asking for the return of that paper to the House?

Mr. O'BRIEN. That is all we want.

The SPEAKER. That is the proposition now pending, and if a majority of the House sees fit, they can vote for it and it will be adopted.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] desires to rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I rise to a question of privilege. The Chair has made a statement which I desire to correct. The Chair inadvertently made the statement that the gentleman from New York demanded back the possession of the paper. That is an error. I never demanded back the possession of the paper, because it did not belong to me; but the last I saw of it it was in the possession of the Secretary of the Senate, who stated that it was the private property of Mr. FERRY and contained papers belonging to him, and as a friend of Mr. FERRY he proposed to retain it in his possession, and so far as I know he has retained it.

The SPEAKER. Did not the gentleman from New York in company with another gentleman, a member of the other House, ask to see the paper?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I asked to see it, but I did not demand possession of it.

Mr. KASSON. I ask leave to make a statement of fact, which I have authority to make.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order. I understood the Chair to say that there is a motion pending and in due time the House will have an opportunity to vote thereon.

Mr. KASSON. I ask leave to state at this point in a few words, that I am authorized to state that the Presiding Officer of the Senate not only declined to receive the paper, but had it not in his possession, has it not now, has not held it at all, and directed the Secretary of the Senate not to take it, as not being a paper he was entitled to; and that the Secretary of the Senate did not take it from the House, and the last known of it is that it was lying on the Clerk's desk near the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. STONE. I saw him put it in his pocket.

The SPEAKER. There is one thing certain, that the Chair has not possession of it, never had possession of it, and is not able to get it.

Mr. CAULFIELD. There is evidence that he did take it.

Cries of "Regular order!"

Mr. CAULFIELD. I ask the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] how this paper was indorsed?

Renewed cries of "Regular order!"

Mr. CAULFIELD. Have I not a right to ask the gentleman so that we may know what the paper purported to be?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. What is pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] is recognized by the Chair to proceed with the debate.

Mr. POPPLETON. I am ready to proceed whenever I can be heard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio states that he is ready to proceed when order is restored. Gentlemen will take their seats and the House will come to order.

Mr. BEEBE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. No one is entitled to the floor except the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEEBE. Can I not rise to a point of order?

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order, and offer a resolution for the return of the paper to this House.

The SPEAKER. That resolution is already pending before the House. No other resolution is in order than those now pending before the House.

Mr. O'BRIEN. As a preliminary resolution, let the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] present the one he has indicated.

The SPEAKER. There is a resolution now pending before the House, and an amendment to an amendment pending thereto, and no other resolution is in order.

Mr. BEEBE. Is not a point of order in order?

Mr. COX. I bow to the decision of the Chair, but I think the way I have indicated would be the proper way to settle this matter.

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to a point of order. Will the Chair entertain it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will listen to it.

Mr. BEEBE. The point of order is that the law provides that "after such debate shall have lasted two hours, it shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without further debate." I submit that after the two hours' debated shall have been exhausted, it will not be competent under the law for this House to send for the paper which is called for in the resolution last submitted; it cannot send for it then. My point is that if we are to have it at all we must necessarily send for it now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will only state that if the House wants that paper all the House has to do is by a majority vote to send for it.

Mr. LANE. That is all we want.

Mr. COX. I offer a resolution——

Mr. BEEBE. The Speaker will not allow the House to say whether it wants it or not.

Mr. CAULFIELD. When can we get it?

Mr. BEEBE. We cannot get it after debate; that is my point of order.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, the House can get it after debate, if majority say so.

Mr. BEEBE. But the law says that you cannot further debate it.

The SPEAKER. A new question will then be raised under the law, if the House calls for the paper by a majority vote.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order. The confusion is so great that I cannot hear the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the time of the gentleman from Ohio is running. If he does not wish to proceed——

Mr. POPPLETON. Why, Mr. Speaker, I cannot proceed in this confusion. I am ready to proceed as soon as order is restored. [A pause, during which the House was called to order.]

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discuss this question at any length. Very much time has been exhausted in endeavoring to ascertain the true condition of matters concerning the returns from the State of Vermont. It has been honestly and candidly believed by many members on this side of the House that there were dual returns from the State of Vermont. We have been patiently and anxiously endeavoring to secure that information from a package purporting to contain electoral votes. The main matter of discussion appertaining to the State of Vermont has been cut off by the withholding of the return to which the exceptions in this case refer. I therefore do not desire to discuss a question that is not fairly before this House. I call upon the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to accommodate me with a statement from his place as to the indorsement upon the package that he sent to the Clerk's desk during the joint meeting of the two Houses yesterday.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am asked by the gentleman from Ohio to state the nature of the indorsement which was upon the package that I tendered to the President of the Senate. As near as I can remember, it is addressed to the "President of the Senate of the United States;" and upon one end is indorsed "Electoral votes from the State of Vermont." This package came into my possession by express about the middle of December, and with it came a letter saying, as nearly as I can remember, "Herewith is sent to you the certified return of the electoral votes of the State of Vermont, and another copy is sent by mail to the President of the Senate." At any rate, from that time to this I have been under the impression that a copy had been sent by mail; but I have no personal knowledge of that fact beyond my recollection of what was contained in that letter.

When the counsel engaged before the electoral commission asked me as to duplicate returns I stated that there was a duplicate return from the State of Vermont, and I know that the counsel and many gentlemen in this House have acted under the impression that there was such a duplicate return. I never had any idea to the contrary until yesterday, when a telegram to the Speaker of this House was shown to me in which it was stated that returns had been sent to me. Thereupon I sent to my room and found the package as it had originally come to me, with the seals unbroken. I had no right to break the seals, because it was addressed to the President of the Senate; but I had never been requested to deliver the package to the President of the Senate. It was in my custody. But when this telegram came I felt it to be my duty to a great State and to the country that I should immediately inform the President of the Senate that I had learned indirectly, as a statement coming from him, that no copy of this package had been received by mail. He said that he had received no such package. Thereupon I asked him to receive it from me yesterday afternoon. He declined, on the ground that the law did not allow him to take it. Thereupon I brought it into this House; and inasmuch as it was addressed to him, and I had been applied to to deliver it to him, as it did not belong to me, I felt that it was my duty to do so; that I could do no less than inform the President of the Senate, in the presence of the joint convention, that I had already tendered it to him, and I again tendered it to him.

Now as to what happened afterward. One of the Senators from Vermont asked me in my place to allow him to examine the package. I informed him that the package was not in my custody; that it did not belong to me; but that if he would go with me to the desk I would ask the President of the Senate for the package. He said he had not received it and had it not in his possession. Thereupon, turning my eyes toward the body of the House, I saw the package in the possession of the Secretary of the Senate, and asked him to allow Judge EDMUNDS, the Senator from Vermont, to see it. His reply was, "This package is the private property of Mr. FERRY; it contains papers belonging to Mr. FERRY; I will not allow the seals to be broken; I shall keep it as the friend of Mr. FERRY." Thereupon I said to him, "Will you allow Judge EDMUNDS to look at it?" He said—with some hesitation as I thought—"Certainly," and handed it to Judge EDMUNDS, who looked at it, handed it back, and said—I will not undertake to repeat what he said—I am not positive what he said, but he handed it back; and I saw it in the possession of the Secretary of the Senate, who told me he should keep it as the friend of Mr. FERRY. That is the last knowledge I have of the matter.

Mr. HENDEE. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York one question.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. HENDEE. I wish to ask the date when the gentleman received this package by express.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. As nearly as I can state it was on the 15th or 16th of December last.

Mr. STONE. I desire to add to what the gentleman from New York has said that I saw Mr. GORHAM, the Secretary of the Senate, put the package in his pocket.

Mr. POPPLETON. I do not desire to prolong the discussion so far as I am concerned. My time is nearly exhausted. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. HENDEE.]

Mr. HENDEE. I would rather speak in my own time.

The SPEAKER. There is but half a minute left of the time of gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. POPPLETON. I understood my time is out, and therefore yield the floor to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. HENDEE. I yield such part of my time, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Iowa as he may desire.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, the phase this question has thus far assumed leaves out of sight the essential character of the objections to the certificate which was read by the President of the Senate. I rise now chiefly to speak on the subject on which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has spoken, and to say in answer to his inquiry that I have just learned that the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is in part correct. The Secretary of the Senate did at first put the paper in his pocket. The President of the Senate, however, being consulted directed him not to take it, as it might be construed perhaps to be in his official possession. He therefore took out that packet, being directed to do so by the President of the Senate, and left it here on the Clerk's desk which is the last knowledge he had of it. I have only to say it has been intimated to me that it is now somewhere on the floor of this House in a certain quarter which I am not at liberty to designate because it is not verified.

Several MEMBERS. "Name it!" "Name it!"

Mr. KASSON. I decline for the reason I have stated, that it is not sufficiently verified.

I wish to answer another phase of the objections made. It is argued that the President of the Senate was obliged to receive this paper when offered to him on the floor of the House yesterday. That proposition I dissent from, because it is a demand that the President of the Senate shall contravene the law of the United States. The propositiou last offered implies in its first branch the power of the House alone to direct the President of the Senate, and subsequently implies the power of both Houses to direct him to open a paper which by the law he is not entitled to open, as representing the electoral vote of any State in this Union. In support of that I call the attention of the House to section 142 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that Congress shall be in session on the second Wednesday in February succeeding every meeting of the electors, and the certificates, or so many of them as have been received, shall then be opened, the votes counted, and the persons to fill the offices of President and Vice-President ascertained and declared, agreeably to the Constitution.

So your Revised Statutes provide for the opening and counting only of the votes which were received on or before the second Wednesday in February, and the declaration of the result was to be made upon those votes which had been received at that time, namely, on the second Wednesday of February, and no other.

Then we come to the law just enacted, and in what respect does that law change the provision of the Revised Statutes? Solely that it brings the date forward from that second Wednesday in February to the first Thursday of February, which was the 1st day of February. So the President of the Senate was absolutely and legally correct when he said that the only papers which could be received and opened by him were those which were presented on or before the 1st day of February last, and upon that law, as he has stated in the presence of the joint convention, he based his refusal to receive it.

Thus you find that the suggestion made—I think without sufficient thought or examination of the law by our Speaker—that it was his duty to receive a paper sent up by any member upon this floor purporting to be electoral votes, and open it, was hardly justified, and would hardly be maintained by the Speaker upon an examination of the statutes I have referred to.

Then, again, the law only requires him to receive and open such as come to him, one copy by special messenger and the other copy by mail.

Mr. WALLING. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. KASSON. The President of the Senate knew that there were regular returns from Vermont in his possession, and he knew nothing of and had no reason to imagine any other returns than those he received prior to the 1st of February by special messenger and the duplicate which came to him by mail. You thus find that the proposition made is not only that the President of the Senate shall open a paper which did not come into his hands within the time required by law, but he is asked to receive and open a paper which did not come verified in the manner provided by law. You further declare that he should have received a paper which happened to be produced from unofficial hands and sent up to him from the floor of this House, the first knowledge he had of it, or any of us had of it; sent up to him without one single guarantee which could not be afforded by any page upon the floor of this House who had the ability to use a pen and write a few words upon an envelope.

And thus, sir, your theory is that the President of the Senate must, up to the time that the very last State is counted, receive any voluntary paper that any citizen of the Union shall indorse and get some member or Senator at the moment of the declaration of the vote to send up to the President of the Senate in his chair, and that such member may demand that it shall be opened and read. Sir, such a proposition to convert the joint meeting of the two Houses into a waste-paper basket, to receive for opening and examination all the waste paper that anybody may send to it, is a proposition which honorable gentlemen on this floor, I am sure, would not be willing to maintain.

Now, sir, if this were a case where gentlemen had reason to entertain serious apprehension that the will of a State had been defeated, that there was doubt about the honest vote of a State, then they might claim some excuse for such scenes as, I am sure, every sober-minded gentleman greatly regrets to have witnessed here this morning. But with a regular certificate from the State of Vermont, which votes in one way only and always, as steadily as her mountains rest upon their base, with the statute that provided for this express case accompanying the certificate and read in the hearing of the House, with not a charge of fraud or misconduct or error anywhere, to create this excitement upon such a slight foundation as this volunteer packet, is something I think which the sober second judgment of this House will not only regret but emphatically condemn. If, sir, the question comes to a vote upon that proposition of resummoning the Senate under a threat to compel action, I beg gentlemen to remember the statements that have here been made. They are asked to imply, as that resolution does, that the President of the Senate or some officer of the Senate has been guilty of misconduct on the floor of this House during the session of the joint convention. We cannot without injury to our own self-respect pass a resolution of that sort in ignorance of the facts alleged. We are in ignorance of everything beyond the fact that this packet was at one time in the hands of the Secretary of the Senate, which is not disputed, and was then left on our table. In addition to what I have said touching the President of the Senate and the Secretary of the Senate, I am advised that the tellers have the same statement to make of non-possession of that paper and ignorance of its place of deposit.

Mr. WALLING. I saw him carry it out.

Mr. KASSON. That must be settled as a question of veracity between the gentleman and the Secretary of the Senate.

I now leave to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] the discussion of the merits of the case.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to ask him a single question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TERRY] is recognized.

Mr. HENDEE. I believe there are two minutes of my time left. I only yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont had about half a minute and the gentleman from Iowa had nine and a half minutes.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I have no idea that I can say anything that will change the result of the presidential count. That is a foregone conclusion and was ordained from the hour the electoral commission was organized. The majority of that commission have had but one object in view, and to that end all their actions have steadily tended, with the unerring certainty of an inexorable purpose. Evidence has been ignored, and argument, and law, and precedent ruthlessly trampled under foot. This commission, created by law, have been a law unto themselves, disregarding alike the practice in the past and the plainly understood purpose for which they had been created. The law creating the commission clothes that tribunal with all the powers and privileges of the two Houses in counting the electoral votes. In the debates which took place in 1869 in the two Houses upon counting the electoral votes of Georgia and Louisiana, there was no denial of the right of Congress to inquire into the elections in those States, and to a resolution which provided in effect for counting the vote of Louisiana provided it would not change the result, and to reject it if it did, Mr. MORTON, now a member of the commission, offered the following amendment:

That while there is reason to believe, from common report and information, that the late presidential election in Louisiana was carried by force and fraud, still, there being no legal evidence before the Senate on that subject, therefore the electoral vote of Louisiana ought to be counted.

It is true that this amendment was rejected upon the question of order, yet it shows clearly that Mr. MORTON and his party then recognized the right of Congress, upon a proper case made by legal evidence, to consider and reject the vote of a State, the certificate of a returning board to the contrary notwithstanding. In the debates that took place in 1873, in counting the electoral vote and in considering the objections made to counting the votes of Georgia, Louisiana, and Arkansas, no objection was ever made to any inquiry sought to be made, not in the nature of debate. I maintain, therefore, that precedents and the practice of Congress establish the right to inquire into the legality of elections and the truth of certificates of returning boards. I maintain that this was the received law of the case when the electoral bill was passed, and continued to be the law governing that commission. Wrongs to be redressed and evils to be prevented furnish another rule for arriving at the legislative intent. What was sought to be accomplished by the passage of the electoral bill? The presidential election had been held; two parties were claiming the votes of South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana, and some persons were claiming that the Vice-President had the right to count the electoral vote, and as a consequence determine all controverted questions involved in the same. Under these circumstances Congress passed the electoral bill, thus denying the right of the Vice-President to count the vote and assuming the prerogative of determining by investigation for whom in fact the votes of those States had been cast. But to the surprise of the country this commission, in the face of precedents and facts, have utterly refused all inquiry into the character of the elections and the truth of the returns. But the facts involved in these controverted States are so familiar to this House that I will not go into them, nor into the contradictory decisions of the commission.

For years the democracy have been struggling to overthrow the republican party and drive them from power, and notwithstanding the appeals made to the prejudices and hatred of the North against the South, yet so corrupt has the republican party become and so flagrant its frauds that the people in the last election placed the seal of a most emphatic condemnation upon the party; but this victory of the people against the spoilers and corruptionists has been rendered naught by the commission, and that party which had been condemned is thereby continued in power for four years more.

By the arbitrary and partisan decisions of the commission the will of the people has been defeated, and it is for the democracy of the House to determine their line of conduct. I utterly repudiate the claim that we are bound in good faith to consummate the work of the Louisiana and Florida returning boards and the iniquitous decisions of the commission.

I not only feel myself free to interpose every lawful impediment in the way of the inauguration of Governor Hayes, but I should feel derelict in duty if I failed to do so. The commission may ignore fraud and aid and abet corruption, and the duty is devolved upon us to defeat the ends that these aim at. By no act or vote of mine can the decisions of the commission be carried into effect. If the democracy have made a mistake in the passage of the electoral bill, the duty is imposed upon them to protect the country against the consequences of that error to the extent of their ability.

Mr. Hayes is represented by his friends as a high-toned and amiable gentleman and the appeal is made to us of the South that our interests would be safe in his hands, and it seems that some southern gentlemen are inclined to take this view of the case. In this I do not concur. I have given this presidential contest all the thought I am capable of, and have come to the conclusion that under the circumstances the inauguration of Governor Hayes would be extremely unfortunate for the country. Not only is he a minority candidate by some 250,000 of the popular vote, and a minority candidate of the popular white vote of more than three-fourths of a million, but he will go into office by a stupendous fraud and will be regarded as a usurper. In my judgment it would be better for the country for the Senate to elect a Vice-President and for him to succeed to the Presidency until an election could be held. He would at least go into office by authority, and under the forms of law. His administration being in pursuance of law would command the support which all good citizens yield to lawful authority. His administration would not necessarily be the prey of all the bad men of the country. How different the case of Governor Hayes. His administration, a fraud and a usurpation, and the work of a foul conspiracy gotten up by the most reckless partisans that ever stood around the seat of power, would be the prey of the thieves, perjurers, and plunderers who have put him in power.

Mr. Hayes cannot shut his eyes to the fact that he has not been elected by the people, and it will be impossible for him to shake off the men to whom he will owe his seat. His administration will be under the control of Cameron, Chandler & Co., and of Wells and Stearns and their guilty colaborers. Upon what principle of right or morals can Mr. Hayes accept the fruits of frauds perpetrated by returning boards and then reject the services of the men who did it? How can he refuse places of trust and profit to Governor Wells, and Packard, and Chamberlain, and others? Honest men of the republican party even will shun an administration with such surroundings. I can scarcely conceive of a condition of things fraught with more danger to the future peace and welfare of the country. In view, therefore, of the action of the commission and the apprehensions of the future, I feel it my duty to interpose every honorable obstacle to the consummation of the most gigantic fraud ever perpetrated upon the liberties of the people.

There is another question to which I wish to refer. It has been given out in some quarters, where doubtless the wish is father to the thought, that a split in the democratic party is imminent, and that southern democrats will seek to make terms with the Administration, and especially is it alleged that this is true of the old-line whigs, who constitute a very large part of the democratic party. As an old whig, the only one in the Virginia delegation, and honored with a seat in this House by an old democratic constituency, I trust I may not be considered as assuming too much when I undertake to say a word as to the feeling and purpose of that glorious old party whose pride was the purity of its principles and the intelligence of its members. They were whigs upon principle, and were true to country and to party. They are now in the democratic party upon principle, and none are more to be relied upon for zeal and steadfast devotion to duty, and they will never abandon their principles or betray their country. The purchasable element of the old whig party have long since gone for the flesh-pots, the true men are left, and the administration that counts on seducing them by the spoils of office will reckon without their host. The followers of Clay and Webster in times past withstood the seductive influences of power, and they are to-day superior to temptations of office. Liberty-loving and law-abiding, they will never affiliate with the party of our oppressors.

While Mr. TERRY was delivering the above remarks, he was interrupted by

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, who said: I think the gentleman from Virginia will allow me to interrupt him for a moment while I make a statement to the House. A messenger has just approached me and tendered me the package which was delivered on yesterday, or attempted to be delivered, to the President of the Senate. It is not my property.

The SPEAKER. Who is the messenger?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The messenger stands directly in front of the Speaker. I have no custody of it. It is not my property.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is he the gentleman to whom the gentleman from Ohio referred a while ago?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not know who he is. I only know that he tenders me the package.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection on the part of the House the Chair will receive the package.

Objection was made.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask that the messenger be interrogated where the package comes from.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that it would be in order to interrogate the messenger.

Mr. BANKS. Certainly not.

Mr. TERRY. I object to being further interrupted in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. This will not come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. TERRY then resumed, and concluded the remarks printed above.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] is recognized.

Mr. HENDEE. I understand that my colleague [Mr. JOYCE] yields a portion of his time to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that under the law the gentleman can have more than ten minutes.

Mr HENDEE. Then I ask that I may have leave to print my remarks on this question of law. But I would suggest to the Chair that I have not yet spoken at all in this debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] states that he has not spoken in this debate, having merely been recognized, and having yielded his time to another gentleman. Upon that statement he will now be recognized, as being entitled to speak in the time of his colleague, [Mr. JOYCE.]

Mr. HENDEE. I am not disposed, in the discussion of this case to travel outside of it. I think in the discussion in this House during the last four weeks, a larger breadth of argument has been allowed than would be ordinarily conceded in any debating or legislative body whatever.

A question is presented in the case of the State of Vermont which is purely legal in its character, and can be determined upon no outside issues whatever. The papers show simply that one of the candidates for elector in the State of Vermont (Mr. Sollace,) at the time of the election in November was a post-master, and hence considered to be ineligible. Now while we concede that to be the fact that he was a post-master, yet he was elected to the office of elector by a majority of more than 20,000 votes. There is no question whatever of fraud; there is no question whatever of intimidation entering into the Vermont case. It is simply a question of whether, having been elected in the constitutional and lawful form prescribed by the laws of the State of Vermont and of the United States, Mr. Sollace was in fact an officer, that is, an elector.

Now, I hold to this doctrine that Mr. Sollace was an elector within the purview of the laws of Vermont and the United States until some measures were taken by the local authorities in the courts in the State of Vermont to determine that he was not eligible, and hence had not power to cast his vote in the electoral college. Until that was done he was an elector de facto, and whatever acts he performed as such elector were just as valid, so far as third persons were concerned or anything connected with the election, as if he had been eligible.

But I wish to take the gentlemen on the other side on their own ground. The case from the State of Vermont is precisely that of the Oregon case with this one exception, that in the case of Oregon the elector had the certificate of the governor, and in the State of Vermont there is no certificate of the governor except the one issued to the five Hayes electors. Hence the Cronin case was much stronger for the democratic side than the Aldrich case. The question as to whether Cronin was elected, he having received the next highest number of votes, was submitted to the honorable commission, and the commission decided unanimously that Cronin was not elected and could not be in any event considered an elector of the State of Oregon. Now, if that is true doctrine, and I submit that it must be conceded as such, then if there was a vacancy in the case of Oregon there was certainly a vacancy in the case of Vermont; because, under the decision of the commission in the Oregon case, Aldrich was not elected though he had received the next highest number of votes, and this admitting the ineligibility of Sollace.

At the time this vacancy occurred, the Legislature of the State of Vermont was in session, and passed a law providing for the filling of vacancies occasioned either by death, refusal to act, refusal to attend, or in any other manner or for any other cause. That law was drafted for the purpose of covering every possible case of a vacancy that could occur in the electoral college. The vacancy did occur, and under that law Mr. Sollace was elected, after having resigned his office as postmaster and the same having been accepted, an elector by the electoral college. Thus the fact existing that there was a vacancy, and the law of the State of Vermont being constitutional, that vacancy has been filled exactly in accordance with the terms of the law, and Mr. Sollace's vote should be counted.

Mr. GUNTER. When was that law passed?

Mr. HENDEE. On the 22d day of November last.

Mr. GUNTER. That was after the election.

Mr. HENDEE. It was after the election, and it provided for filling all sorts of vacancies. Now, sir, I say as a legal proposition, that if Cronin was not elected, and the commission so find unanimously, then certainly Aldrich was not elected, and that Sollace must have been duly appointed, because the vacancy occurred and was filled in accordance with the terms of the statute of the State of Vermont; and when any member here votes that Mr. Sollace is not an elector of the State of Vermont, he is virtually deciding that Cronin is an elector for the State of Oregon, against the unanimous decision of the commission.

Mr. LAWRENCE. There could be no electoral return from the State except the one read in the hearing of the two Houses yesterday.

Mr. TUCKER. Why could there not be?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Because there were no other lawful electors than those whose names are included in the certificate.

Mr. HENDEE. That is the conclusion upon that point, most certainly.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDEE. Mr. Speaker, having permission to make some further and general remarks, I will now proceed. During the debate of the last few weeks relative to the electoral count, I have sat an attentive listener. On one or two occasions I have attempted to gain the floor that I too might express my views, but, having failed, now I may be pardoned I think for asking the attention of the House for a few minutes longer. I am of that class who believe the Constitution is ample in its provisions for the present contingency, and that the law known as the compromise measure was uncalled for, and in fact unnecessary. And while I did not for good reasons as I believe vote for that bill, I am not prepared to say that it will not in its results prove to be a wise and opportune measure. We shall soon see. For those who framed and secured its passage I have the highest regard. I believe they acted with great fidelity and caution, and only had a desire to secure a fair, peaceful, and speedy solution of the great question now agitating the entire world.

The result of the election of November last put both parties in a condition of great anxiety at first, and later that anxiety had grown into a feeling on the part of the democratic party of desperation. The press of that party had for sixty days, and up to the time of the passage of the compromise bill, fired the public mind by incendiary, threatening, and libelous writings, until that hungry organization had been wrought up to the point of believing that war was justifiable in order that Tilden should be inaugurated. With the leaders and office-seekers of that party the cry had come to be, "Tilden or blood." Of this spirit I heard and read much, and yet I had not the slightest fear of a collision; for I believed the great good sense of the American people of both parties who stood behind these leaders and office-seekers would prevent a rupture. The country could not afford one, and this the intelligent business men of both parties well knew; and as the great majority of our people belong to this class, I considered the probability of war too remote and weak to attract any special attention. With this feeling, and believing the Constitution sufficient and that under it Governor Hayes must be installed, I voted against the bill. Should the result under the law be the same as I believed it must have been without it, and should the country accept that result with any greater satisfaction than it otherwise would, then I shall rejoice that the commission was created. Though it may be a bad precedent, in all human probability it will not in the next century have to be followed, and in my judgment we had better endure the existence of a bad precedent if great good comes from it when created and if no use for it is anticipated thereafter.

Under the law the commission has decided virtually this great question. I have no doubt it has settled it in accordance with law, justice, and the facts, and my only surprise and regret now are that the democratic party, or its leaders I should say, do not accept the result, notify the world, and let the country settle down again into business prosperity. I consider the actions of certain members of this House on the other side in obstructing the course of the law in putting themselves in the way of the completion of the count as demonstrations of bad faith; yes, Mr. Speaker, I might say and be justified, breaches of faith. Let me remind these gentlemen that upon the committee which prepared the law their party had four of its leading members from this House, and from the Senate they had two of their very best men. As the discussion went on it became almost a party measure, and when the vote was taken every democrat in the Senate but one voted for it, and in this House only eighteen democrats were found to vote against it.

So in fact let me say to gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber that this proceeding is of your own getting, and if the result is disastrous to you, you above all other men in the country should hold your peace. You have no right to charge the republican party or its members with intrigue or bad faith in this matter, because the bill was printed and under consideration for several days and no one contends that there is any ambiguity or uncertainty of meaning in its terms or language. It is admitted to that every disputed question was left open for the determination of the commission. In short, you simply provided such a tribunal as you wanted, before which you could make your fight, and to that tribunal you gave just the same powers as Congress possessed, if any, and no more.

You had of your men on that commission your choice; so did we. The four judges were agreed upon by both parties without dissent, and the fifth judge was chosen in the manner suggested by your own leaders. Yes, gentlemen, you have had all the preliminaries your own way, and now that it seems the decision may be against you you rebel. Gentlemen, this, in my judgment, does not become you. Such conduct never becomes an intelligent, upright man. It only becomes the political trickster, the ward politician, the man of no honor. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the constituents of these gentlemen would hold them in much higher esteem should they accept the situation in words of sadness, and anger even if they will, than they will if they resist the decisions of this great and honorable tribunal by dilatory maneuvers and unjustifiable denunciation.

To me, Mr. Speaker, it was a sad spectacle to witness the other day in this House of the American Congress the personal attack of the leader of the great democratic party upon an honorable member of the commission, and it was the more humiliating, sir, because the grounds upon which the gentleman stood or based his charge were so feeble and so poorly sustained. Sir, this was but another base attempt to charge the cause of democratic defeat to the corruption of the republican party or to two or three of its honored members.

Now, sir, while such scenes as this are debasing and illy become the dignity of this body, there is another kind of debate resorted to by gentlemen on the other side that is truly mortifying to the American citizen, and to my mind degrades the gentlemen who indulge in it. I refer to the unqualified bitter and unjust denunciations made of the judges of our Supreme Court. Will gentlemen please consider this for a moment? These judges had no hand in the creation of this law under which they are compelled to act. They took no part in the recent political struggle. They hold their positions for life, and hence have no personal interest at stake in the result. They act not from any desire of their own, but really against their wills. They were selected wisely, and because they were above reproach, above suspicion, and because of their high character and acknowledged ability.

You gentlemen on the other side made use of this and much more of the same kind to induce us to vote for the bill. Then you argued well. Then you spoke in the highest terms of these men whom you now so vilely traduce; and why? Because defeat has dethroned reason and given place to passion and indiscretion. But let me say to these gentlemen that their harsh and wicked words toward these men fall quite harmless upon the people, who stand behind them, and that when these words recoil it will be upon you who utter them, and the men whom you would destroy will be unharmed. No, gentlemen; when the storm shall have passed and reason shall again have its power with you, then will the blush of shame be visible and you who have done this great wrong, and you only, will be the men who will feel most intensely the great injury you have inflicted.

You cannot afford to even attempt to bring reproach upon the members of our highest court, for though it will fail to prejudice the intelligent and true citizen its tendency is to inspire the ignorant and discontented man with a spirit of distrust and want of faith in the purity and perpetuity of our institutions. When men whom we ourselves select sit in judgment, though they err, they should be sustained unless it be settled they have acted to secure selfish ends or from other impure motives.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the remarks of some of the gentlemen on the other side certainly fall beneath any man of sober thought and discretion, and especially are they unbecoming a member of this House; and the only excuse, if any is to be tolerated, that can be made is that they have been made in heated debate and at a moment when passion has overcome sense.

Men are not to be censured for resenting in any fair and proper language what they believe to be wrong, but let it be done in respectful and temperate words, such as become the position of the one who utters them and the place where spoken.

Though we may be tragical in thought and feeling, let us be prudent in utterance; for upon our words spoken here may hang the actions of designing and unscrupulous men.

Mr. Speaker, we have a country to protect or to destroy, institutions to perpetuate or to disgrace, and the duty of the hour is ours. Every member upon this floor should feel the responsibility, and determine, irrespective of party, that if any battle is to be fought it shall be one for the safety and protection of our noble country, the weal of her people, and the advancement of her material interests.

I have said, Mr. Speaker, that I believe the commission has determined every issue in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution and law. We have maintained always that as Congress has no power to go back of the returns or certificates, that under the electoral bill the commission has no power to go back of them. This view has from the outset been taken by our counsel, and has in the Florida, Louisiana, and Oregon cases been sustained. To hold otherwise would simply be to say that Congress has the power every presidential election to overturn or render invalid the will of the people, however certain or fairly that will may have been expressed. It must be admitted, sir, that if you can go back at all you can go back and inquire into the validity and regularity of the preliminary proceedings of every election precinct, and even to the extent of inquiring into the right of every citizen to vote.

No, Mr. Speaker, it is folly to claim that the Constitution or laws of the land give to Congress any such unlimited power. That power is delegated or rests in the States or local authorities, and when they have determined those questions and have sent up to us the proper evidence in regular form, we have only to consider and determine the result upon that evidence.

An honorable Senator [Mr. BAYARD] months ago, and before this controversy arose, and upon deliberation, said in the Senate this:

> Nowhere is the power given to either House of Congress to pass upon the election, either the manner or the fact, of electors for President and Vice-President; and if Congress or either House shall assume under the guise or pretext of telling or counting the vote to decide the fact of the election of the electors, then they will have taken upon themselves an authority for which I for one can find no warrant in the charter of our liberties.

This honorable Senator and able lawyer is a member of the electoral commission, and I believe no gentleman can honestly doubt the soundness of the doctrine he has so plainly laid down. Now, sir, had I the disposition I could with more consistency attack the motives and conduct of this gentleman as one of the high tribunal than can members on the other side assail the motives and conduct of the majority of the commission who have only by their decisions asserted the same doctrine. But, sir, I have not the wish nor disposition to say one word against this honorable Senator. His sayings and acts are merely open to fair criticism as are those of every member of the tribunal; but I may be allowed to say that certainly there is more ground to charge upon him partisanship in this matter than there is upon the three judges who have voted with the majority, for they have never made any declarations that are in conflict with their acts.

It seems to me, sir, that there is but one course for gentlemen on the other side that is honorable, or that will command the respect of the American people, and that is to submit to the decision of the commission. The opposition to the proceedings under the law made by some members of this House is no less than revolutionary. The people of all parties who are intelligent and have only the best interests of the country in mind, and who are not seeking office and do not depend upon the success of party for a living, condemn such a course in no uncertain terms. I believe it is no injustice to say that men who persist in efforts to defeat the operations of the law do not and cannot fitly represent the people of this country.

Our country has been suffering for months from a prostration of business. Men and women are out of employment, and the machinery and workshops of the land are motionless, and much of this is due to the fact that this great question is unsettled. I say, sir, let it be settled at once, and many if not all of the business interests of the country now suffering will take new life, and soon we shall see a prosperity which will not only be healthy, but which will become permanent; and not only this, the question whether our Government has strength and can ride safely through all storms will be forever settled.

I am, sir, a thorough partisan, and I have never since the 7th of November last for one moment yielded the point that Governor Hayes was on that day elected President; but had the judgment of this commission determined otherwise and brought into power Governor Tilden, an event which I should regret, though I voted against the bill creating that commission I would have submitted and advised my associates to the same course. And now, gentlemen, I ask you to submit; and to what? The decision of the tribunal you yourselves created.

What is the situation? I ask. This: You claimed Tilden was elected; we disputed it, and claimed the election of Hayes. You asked us to arbitrate; we agreed. The submission was the compromise law, entered into after full deliberation. We have tried the case and won, and now you attempt to revoke when there is no power given in the submission to either party to revoke. No, gentlemen, your conduct is not warranted; and I trust that soon, and in your calmer moments, you will step back into your manhood again and allow the law to have its course.

Mr. JOYCE. Mr. Speaker, this is a novel case in this electoral count. Unlike all the other cases there is no claim made here that the democrats have been "intimidated" or "bull-dozed;" that they were overawed by United States troops; no claim but what the State government of Vermont is republican in form and spirit. There has been no attempt made, that I am aware of, to buy any of the electors. Nobody claims that the canvass was tainted with any "mule contracts." We have not heard that there were any "gobble" or "cipher" dispatches; and nobody claims to know from actual knowledge that there was any "Patrick" or "Pelton," or "Gramercy Park" mixed up in it, at least on our side.

This leaves the claim to exclude Sollace's vote to rest upon the plain, simple, bald fact that Sollace on the day of the election was a post-master.

I do not feel, sir, like calling this a technical objection, or saying that it is frivolous, because whatever the motive may have been which prompted the objection, the question whether it is a vote which the Constitution authorizes and calls for is one of grave and vital importance and demands careful and serious consideration.

Upon the vote of Mr. Sollace hangs the result of the election and makes either Governor Hayes or Governor Tilden President, as it is determined for which it shall be counted. This makes it important, not only to the parties immediately interested, but to the country, as settling a great question of constitutional law and establishing a precedent which may last for all time.

If the Constitution prohibits the counting of this vote for Hayes, or requires it to be counted for Tilden, I would say, follow the Constitution regardless of consequences to men and parties, because we can afford to be disappointed, but we cannot afford, for temporary party triumph, to violate the Constitution of our country.

I shall endeavor therefore, sir, to devote the few moments allotted me in this discussion to an examination of that question.

At the general election held on the 7th of November, 1876, the people of the State of Vermont elected Estey, Farnham, Welch, and Sollace Presidential electors by a majority of about 24,000 votes. On the third Tuesday of November the votes were duly canvassed by the proper officers of the state, the election declared, the governor notified, and within five days from that time those men were also notified that they had been elected. On the day preceding the first Wednesday in December the said electors met at the State-house in Montpelier, and there being a vacancy in the college in consequence of the resignation of Henry N. Sollace the remaining members of the board proceeded to fill such vacancy as provided and required by the laws of that State.

The vacancy having been filled and the college being complete, they then proceeded to vote for President and Vice-President of the United States. The result of the ballot was five votes for Rutherford B. Hayes for President, and five votes for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President. This result was properly certified to the President of the Senate, the certificate has been opened and read in the hearing of both Houses, objection has been made to the vote of Henry N. Sollace, one of the electors, on the ground that he held the office of postmaster at the time he was elected, and the main question for us to determine now is, whether the vote of Sollace shall be cast out and only the remaining four votes counted for Hayes and Wheeler, or whether in addition to that, the vote of Aldrich, the democratic candidate, he having received the next highest number of votes, shall be counted for Governor Tilden.

Under ordinary circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I should doubt the propriety as I now do the necessity of saying a word upon this question, as it has already been, if I mistake not, four times solemnly decided by the joint commission and the Senate of the United States. But because of its importance and also that the electoral bill gives us two hours to discuss any objections which may be made to the counting of the electoral vote of a State I will avail myself of my ten minutes to discuss briefly the question presented.

1. And first, Mr. Speaker, let us inquire as to the powers and rights of the several States in respect to the election or appointment of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States and the manner of Mr. Sollace's appointment.

The Constitution of the United States provides that—

> The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and together with the Vice-President, chosen for the same term, be elected as follows:
> Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.—Article 2, section 1.

The statute of the United States provides that each State may provide by law for the filling of vacancies in its electoral college when such college meets to give its electoral vote; that in case of a failure to elect on the day appointed by Congress it may elect on some other day. The electors when so appointed are required to meet on the first Wednesday of December and vote for President and Vice-President of the United States.

It is made the duty of the governor of the State to cause to be made three lists of the votes of the State, certify them, and deliver them to the electors before they vote.

The laws of Vermont provide that the presiding officer at the freemen's meeting in each town shall at the close of the poll in each year when there is a presidential election make and seal up a duplicate certificate of the votes for electors and transmit such certificate by mail to the secretary of state; that officer opens such certificates and puts them on file in his office, to be used or referred to in case the original should be lost.

The original certificates are delivered to the county clerks in the several counties in which said towns are located by the presiding officer of each town meeting, and the clerks meet at the State capitol on the third Tuesday of November, publicly canvass the votes, and declare the number of persons, equal to the number of electors to be chosen, having the greatest number of votes, duly elected electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and give notice thereof to the governor.

The county clerks are also required to make a list of all the certificates, with the number of votes for each person, designating such as they may deem legal and such as they may deem illegal, and lodge a certified copy of such list in the office of the secretary of state. They are also, within five days after counting the votes, to give notice to the persons elected electors, and they, the said electors, are directed to meet at the State-house, in Montpelier, on the day preceding the first Wednesday of December, to vote for President and Vice-President. And it is also provided by the old statute that in case any person so elected an elector shall neglect to attend at the place aforesaid on said day it shall be the duty of the other electors present to fill by ballot the vacancy thus occasioned.

The law relating to the filling of vacancies in the electoral college was amended by the Legislature at its October session, 1876, and is as follows:

> If there shall be any vacancy in the office of an elector for President or Vice-President of the United States at the time provided by law for the meeting and action of the electors, occasioned by death, refusal to act, neglect to attend, or in any other manner, or for any other cause, the other electors present shall immediately fill by viva voce and plurality of votes such vacancy in the electoral college. And if any such vacancy shall occur and shall be filled as aforesaid the electors shall attach to the certificate of their votes a statement showing how such vacancy occurred and their action thereon.

This law, which was approved by the governor November 22, 1876, took effect from its passage.

This law, then, was in force when the electoral college of Vermont met on the day before the first Wednesday in December, 1876, to cast the vote of that State for President and Vice-President of the United States.

On the day of the general election, November 7, 1876, Henry N. Sollace, one of the persons voted for as elector, held the office of postmaster at Bridport, Vermont. On the 13th of November he resigned that position, on the 14th his resignation was accepted by the Postmaster-General, and on the 15th his successor, D. H. Bennett, was appointed.

The certificate transmitted to the President of the Senate gives a detailed statement of the proceedings of the electors, the resignation of Sollace as postmaster, and the action of the college in filling the vacancy by the re-appointment of Sollace, and shows that the laws of Vermont were literally and strictly followed by them, and that every provision of the statute was faithfully complied with.

2. Sollace having received a majority of the votes cast, the fact that he was at the time of the election ineligible would not give the election to his opponent, Aldrich.

Judge Cooley, in his valuable work on Constitutional Limitations, says:

> If the person receiving the highest number of votes was ineligible, the votes cast for him will still be effectual so far as to prevent the opposing candidate being chosen.

In Dillon on Municipal Corporations it is said—

> That when the statute fails to declare that votes cast for an ineligible person are void, (and there is no such statute in Vermont,) the effect of such person receiving a majority of the votes cast is, according to the weight of American authority and the reason of the matter, that a new election must be held, and not to give the office to the qualified person having the next highest number of votes.

In Mississippi the court say:

> If the majority candidate is disqualified it does not follow that he who has received the next highest vote, and is qualified, shall take the office.

In the case of Fish vs. Collins, in Louisiana, it was said:

> If a competitor received a greater number of lawful votes than the claimant, the latter does not establish a right to the office by showing that his competitor was ineligible.

The supreme court of California, in 1859, in the case of Sanders vs. Haynes, said:

> It will be observed that the point of this defense is that the votes cast for Turner, supposing he received the highest number, were nullities, because of his assumed ineligibility. But we do not so consider, although some old cases may be found affirming this doctrine. We think that the better opinion at this day is that it is not correct.
> Our legislative precedents seem to be the same way. Upon principle, we think the law should be so ruled. An election is the deliberate choice of a majority, a plurality of the electoral body. This is evidenced by the votes of the electors. But if a majority of those voting by mistake of law or fact happen to cast their votes upon an ineligible candidate it by no means follows that the next to him on the poll should receive the office. If this be so, a candidate might be elected who received only a small portion of the votes, and who never could have been elected at all but for this mistake. * * * It is fairer, more just, and more consistent with the theory of our institutions to hold the votes so cast as merely ineffectual for the purposes of an election than to give them the effect of disappointing the popular will and electing to office a man whose pretensions the people had designed to reject.

The whole matter is admirably summed up by Judge MCCRARY in his valuable work on American Law of Elections in the following manner:

> It is a fundamental idea with us that the majority shall rule, and that a majority or at least a plurality, shall be required to elect a person to office by popular vote. An election with us is the deliberate choice of a majority or plurality of the electors. Any doctrine which opens the way for minority rule, in any case, is antirepublican and anti-American.

3. I submit, therefore, that Sollace was duly elected an elector; that he became an elector de facto at least; that the acts of such an officer are valid until an ouster, and that in any event his resignation created a vacancy, which was legally filled by his re-appointment.

The law is well settled that if an ineligible person is elected to an office he can be ousted by quo warranto; and the fact that quo warranto will lie shows that the election is not absolutely void, but only voidable.

If Sollace was ineligible when voted for, his election and induction into office made him an officer de facto, and his acts are valid, at least as to third persons.

Upon this point I desire to get the attention of the House to a decision of the supreme court of Vermont in the case of McGregor vs. Balch et al., 14 Vermont Reports, 428.

The opinion of the court was delivered by Chief-Justice Williams, one of the purest and most eminent jurists that has ever adorned the bench of the supreme court of that State.

In discussing this question Judge Williams said:

> An officer de jure is clothed with all the power and authority appertaining to the office, and neither his doings nor his acts, within the limits of his authority, can be questioned anywhere.
>
> The acts of an officer de facto are, as it respects third persons, valid; as it respects himself, invalid.
> An officer de facto is one who comes in by the forms of an election, but, in consequence of some informality or want of qualification, is incapable of holding the office.
> Therefore, until the appointment of an officer de facto is vacated, his acts must be considered as valid.

The evils which would follow if the contrary doctrine should obtain are fully illustrated by Judge Williams by reference to the election of an ineligible person to an office giving power to take the acknowledgment of deeds, confessions of debt, and the solemnization of marriage.

In support of the view taken by the court, he also refers to the case of a judge or a Senator or Representative in Congress, and shows that, although the person elected may be ineligible at the time of the election, still his acts while performing the functions of the office are valid.

In the courts of this country the ruling has been uniform upon this subject, but time will permit me to refer to but few of the leading cases.

It is said that—

The acts of public officers being in by color of an election or appointment are valid so far as the public are concerned.

An officer de facto is one who comes into office by color of a legal appointment or election. His acts in that capacity are valid.

The principle of colorable election holds not only in regard to the right of electing, but of being elected. A person indisputably ineligible may be an officer de facto by color of election.

When the appointing power has made an appointment, and a person is appointed who has not the qualifications required by law, the appointment is not therefore void. The person appointed is de facto an officer; his acts in the discharge of his duties are valid and binding.

The result is that the appointment of the five electors from Vermont was in every respect legal and valid, and their votes should be and must be counted as set forth and required in the certificate which has been read in the presence of the two Houses.

There has been something said, sir, during this discussion in regard to two sets of returns or certificates from Vermont, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] attempted to offer a bundle of papers to the President of the Senate in the joint meeting of the two Houses, which he claimed had some connection with that matter, but the President of the Senate refused, very properly, to receive them, as not having been presented to him at the time required by law and by no one authorized by any lawful authority to deliver them. This discussion has disclosed the fact that Mr. HEWITT received them by express about the middle of last December, that they have been in his possession ever since; but from whence they came or whither they were to go no mortal man pretends to know. The law requires that the certificates of the votes of electors shall be sent to the President of the Senate by mail and messenger, and not to the chairman of the democratic national committee.

It is said that at the time of the meeting of the electoral college at Montpelier, in December, Mr. Aldrich appeared before the board and claimed the right to cast one of the electoral votes, and when refused that he retired to some secluded spot and organized an electoral college of his own; and, having before me a full report of that meeting, taken from the Albany Evening Journal, I beg leave to have it read, in order that it may enliven this dry and tedious debate, and also for the purpose of showing the genius and pluck of the Vermont democracy.

STILL ANOTHER HOPE.

It is said that the democracy will object to one of the republican electors of Vermont and once more throw a democratic elector in the breach. In Cronin they failed; in Aldrich they hope to triumph. Aldrich is the man who received the next highest number of votes after counting the republican electors, and, claiming the ineligibility of one of the latter, he has come to the rescue. Immortal Aldrich! On Wednesday, December 6, when the electoral college of Vermont was about to commence business, he announced, in person, that he would like to take part in the deliberations, but the college refused his preposterous request, whereupon he straightway protested, and resolved himself into a committee of one, with full powers to create an electoral college in the interests of "reform."

Who does not see Aldrich calling Aldrich to order and nominating Aldrich as president of the college? Aldrich puts the motion, and Aldrich is declared by Aldrich to be unanimously elected. Then Aldrich appoints Aldrich a committee of two to conduct Aldrich to the chair, and Aldrich, getting to the chair, thanks Aldrich for the honor he has conferred upon Aldrich in calling upon him to preside over the deliberations of Aldrich. Then Aldrich announces that if there is no objection Aldrich will act as secretary, and that he will appoint Aldrich two tellers to count the vote of Aldrich. Then, while Aldrich is preparing his ballot, Aldrich announces that he is sure that Aldrich would be glad to hear the views of Aldrich in regard to the political situation, and thereupon Aldrich, amid loud applause from Aldrich, remarks that he thinks bull-dozing in Louisiana was not an outrage, but that it was an outrage for Messrs. Chandler and McCormick to act as officers of the republican national committee. At the conclusion of Aldrich's address Aldrich is heartily congratulated by Aldrich, after which Aldrich proceeds to vote. Aldrich in his character of two tellers having canvassed the vote, Aldrich announces that the vote of Aldrich has been unanimously cast for Tilden and Hendricks. Aldrich then moves a vote of thanks to Aldrich for the able, urbane, prompt, and parliamentary manner in which he has presided over the deliberations of Aldrich. Then Aldrich signs the certificate, appoints Aldrich messenger, and adjourns Aldrich sine die. Of course, in the evening Aldrich handsomely entertains Aldrich at Aldrich's mansion, drinking his health and shaking his hand countless times.

You may marshal words and phrases every way, but they cannot overstate this brilliant accomplishment of Aldrich. Cronin was assisted by his nose, by Senator KELLY, and by Pelton, while Aldrich fought this battle single-handed, and with what he believed to be a single eye to justice and renown. Where is the American we therefore ask who is not willing to uncover and salute this humble Vermonter, who, rising from a coachman to an electoral college, now stands before the gaze of the nation with the hopes of the democracy heavily resting upon him.

Mr. Speaker, I have no words of bitterness or reproach for any one. The great drama which has been upon the stage for months and which has shaken the Republic from center to circumference is now happily drawing to a close. In a few hours more the great question will be settled and the people will all acquiesce. The curtain will drop and all the scenes and strifes of the past year will pass into history. And, sir, while I would not utter one unkind sentiment or say one word that would irritate the most sensitive, yet for the good name of our people and the honor of our common country I must be allowed to speak of the sorrow I have many times experienced during this protracted proceeding, and of the hope I now have in the successful accomplishment of what I deem to be the most magnificent achievement recorded upon the pages of the world's history.

Sir, from the moment the decision of the joint commission in the case of Florida became known down to this moment there has been one long and persistent howl from the democracy about the fraud and infamy of the eight men who concurred in the judgment, while not a word has been said about the seven whose judgments and convictions led them in the opposite direction.

Sir, there are men upon this floor who seem willing and almost anxious that this Government of ours should be destroyed and the people ruined unless the party to which they belong can hold the reins of power and control the policy and offices of the Republic. Do they forget, sir, that we are one people, that this goodly heritage is ours in common, that we all share the glory and honor of its past achievements, that its glorious history belongs to us all, that the Union of these States is our ark of safety, and that the old flag is the emblem of our common nationality, that the future prosperity and grandeur of the Republic is the object of every hope and the inspiration of every noble impulse and ambition?

Sir, this is our fathers' house and this is our country. Here we desire to live, and in her sacred soil we hope to rest when "life's fitful fever" is over.

Whatever party may control her destiny, we are all equally interested in her peace, prosperity, and good name. The spirit which has been manifested and the language which has been uttered upon this floor toward the majority members of the joint commission are outrageous and disgraceful.

It is a burning shame to our country, our age, and our civilization, and I would to God that every thought and word of it might be expunged from the record and blotted forever from the memory of mankind.

Sir, I shall not attempt to defend those men against the vile slanders which disappointed men and a venal and subsidized press are sending forth like putrid streams from every democratic cess-pool in the land; they need no defense; they have a reputation and a record which will stand as a wall of adamant against every poisoned arrow which malice or calumny can hurl against them.

Mr. Speaker, the party whose leader and head inspired the brazen fraud in Oregon, whereby it was attempted to cheat the people of that State out of an honest election and elevate to the Presidency a man repudiated by the people and condemned by almost every act of his whole life, should, it seems to me, cultivate modesty in the presence of the telegrams which passed between Salem and Gramercy Park.

Let the words of shame and crime written in those dispatches be stamped upon the memory of every democrat, and let the reeking stench of their wickedness stifle him when he attempts to defame the characters of honest men or tarnish the fame of the noblest and best party that has ever existed in the history of mankind. Here they are—read, ponder, and inwardly digest, and then forever hold your peace.

This, Mr. Speaker, is "reform;" this is modern democracy; these are the men who are sounding the tocsin on account of "gigantic republican frauds." This is Tilden and New York City after the mask has been removed with the "key" from Michigan.

In the light of these precious scraps of history, how dare gentlemen on the other side, with such audacious effrontery, charge honest men with fraud?

How dare the gentleman from New York stand in his place upon this floor and say that Governor Hayes will go into the Presidency by the vote of a pardoned criminal, a man who had unlawfully offered a bribe which was not accepted—when seventy-odd gentlemen now hold positions in this Government whose conduct at a certain period in our history would, in any other civilized country on the globe, have worked not only a forfeiture of their estates, but of their lives also? Why, sir, the crime of that man pales into insignificance when confronted with that of men who would have destroyed a government and ruined a whole people.

Mr. Speaker, the republican party has administered the affairs of this Government for the past sixteen years, and has, I know, committed many errors; but, sir, notwithstanding its errors and shortcomings those sixteen years are the proudest and most brilliant period in our illustrious history.

By the voice of the American people, uttered in tones which are plainly heard above the roar of democratic frauds and violence, that party is now granted a new lease of power, and every honest man, every man who is in favor of peace and order and a free ballot, every man who respects the rights of others, and believes in the political equality of all men before the law, and every man who loves his country and earnestly desires her honor and prosperity, breathes easier and rejoices with a joy unspeakable and full of glory, that the mad schemes of wicked men have been thwarted and that Governor Hayes is to hold the power and direct the policy of this great and growing Republic for the next four years.

Sir, the enemy are defeated and the great victory is won. From one end to the other of this broad land peans of praise and thanksgiving ascend from every altar and hearth-stone to the God of our fathers for our great deliverance.

The great commission called into being by your mandate has heard you patiently and decided wisely, and if you are sincere, if you are just, if you are honest and patriotic, you will cease from your slanders and vote to accept and affirm their decision, so that the historian of your party may be enabled to say that the last act of your political existence was sensible if not sincere.

Mr. HOOKER. So far as the argument made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is concerned, in reference to what is the objection made in this case, he did not proceed far enough in his quotation from the Revised Statutes or he would have found that there is a very different rule from the one which he laid down. Under the Constitution the electoral college of each State is required to send the returns of its vote for President and Vice-President to the President of the Senate. Under the law when an electoral college has assembled in a State it is required to make out three certificates of its findings, one of which is sent by special messenger to the President of the Senate, another by mail to the President of the Senate, and a third is deposited with the judge of the district court of the United States in the district where the electoral college has assembled. This evidently was intended to provide for the preservation of the electoral vote of a State, in the event that the messenger should fail to arrive at the seat of Government with the copy which he is intrusted with, and in the event that the mail should fail to bring the one sent by post.

The law provides that in the event that these certificates sent by mail and messenger are not received by the President of the Senate, the Secretary of State shall send for the remaining certificate. The law is as follows:

> Whenever a certificate of votes from any State has not been received at the seat of Government on the first Wednesday of January, indicated by the preceding section, the Secretary of State shall send a special messenger to the district judge in whose custody one certificate of the votes from that State has been lodged, and such judge shall forthwith transmit that list to the seat of Government.

Therefore the argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] falls to the ground, that if the return from an electoral college is not here in February at the time named, therefore the electoral vote of that State cannot be counted.

Mr. KASSON. I referred to that express provision of the law.

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, but you did not read it; you read the preceding section but did not read that.

Mr. KASSON. I gave the date.

Mr. HOOKER. That provision is evidently for the purpose of ascertaining what is the electoral vote of a State by another and different mode than by sending a certificate to the President of the Senate by mail or by messenger.

Now the telegram which was submitted as a part and parcel of the objection of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to counting the vote from the State of Vermont shows that such a return was made by the electoral college and is deposited in the office of the district judge of the district court of the United States in the district of Vermont where this electoral vote is claimed to have been cast.

Therefore when the knowledge of this fact was brought to the attention of the President of the Senate, and when the certificate was submitted to him, he should have examined it, and at least have treated it with the dignity, courtesy, and respect with which the presiding officer of the Senate felt himself bound to treat a spurious return received by him purporting to come from the State of Louisiana and which when read in the presence of the two Houses showed upon its face that it was a spurious return. The President of the Senate felt it to be his duty to submit that to the two Houses.

To hold a different doctrine would be to say that the President of the Senate has the power to determine of himself what papers shall be submitted to the two Houses in their joint meeting. If the President of the Senate had had the return here and had refused to produce it, I ask would the two Houses have been powerless in the presence of the President of the Senate to have demanded that the returns should be produced and read?

Mr. KASSON. May I correct an error of statement made by the gentleman?

Mr. HOOKER. I have but a short time; do it in the time of somebody else.

Mr. KASSON. It is an error of statement made by the gentleman himself.

Mr. HOOKER. Be very brief about it.

Mr. KASSON. The fact stated in the telegram to which the gentleman refers is that the certificate of the election of Mr. Aldrich as elector was deposited in the clerk's office of the district court of Vermont on the 13th of December, 1877.

Mr. HOOKER. As I understand it the dispatch states that his certificate of election as elector is filed with the district judge of the district where the electoral college was assembled. If there be no power to produce these returns, when the certificates sent by messenger or by mail have failed to reach the President of the Senate, then the third mode of preserving the integrity of the vote of the State in the electoral college is nugatory on the statute-book and will not accomplish the purpose which was designed.

Not a State in this Union, I venture to assert, but has complied with the law, and not only sent its electoral returns by mail and by special messenger to the President of the Senate, but also deposited with the judge of the district court of the United States another certificate, in order that if the two former should be destroyed or delayed the electoral vote of that State might be preserved.

Now, with all respect to the decision of the Chair, I desire to say that I think it was proper, if this question was presented to the consideration of this House, before this discussion upon the subject ensued, that that return should be brought back here in a proper and legal form, and in the presence of the two Houses submitted to their consideration. If objection was made that it was spurious and not a proper certified copy of the return deposited with the district judge, then that objection might have prevailed if founded in fact.

But I pass from the consideration of this question to another which I was discussing the other day when a different finding of this commission was under consideration, that is, the question of what is the power of the two Houses when there has been made a finding upon the subject. If this is a case of dual returns, it goes to the commission; if a case of a single return, it goes to the two Houses. If it had gone to the commission, it might have presented a question which would have required their action; and the House would be incapable of passing upon it until the commission had reached a decision.

Then the question arises, what would be the power of the two Houses upon the finding of the commission; and I hold, sir, that when this commission has made a finding, as it has done in respect to several States, recommending the counting of the votes of those States contrary to what is known to be their popular majorities, contrary to what is known to be their true electoral vote—when the commission has thus violated the law which required them to ascertain what constituted the true and legal electoral vote of a State, I hold that when the commission has thus found and so reported to Congress the House is exonerated from any obligation to recognize its finding—is not bound to carry out such finding, because the commission has refused to take cognizance of the very question which it was the purpose and object of the House in the passage of the law to have passed upon.

Refusing to take cognizance of such questions, refusing to receive evidence in a case where fraud is charged, it cannot be contended that this commission holds the power of the House forever in its hands during the pendency of the electoral vote, and that the House has no power to say to the commission, "You have failed to do the very thing for which you were created; you have refused to take evidence in one case wherein it was charged that an elector was disqualified, while you have taken it in another. You have heard the broad charges of fraud made with reference to States of this Union; you have heard the charge that the electoral vote of a State was huckstered all over the land, offered for sale to the highest bidder; yet you say that the frauds of a returning board, the fraud of a canvassing board—whether it be merely the governor and secretary of state, as in most of the States, or whether it be one of these novel institutions such as prevail in Florida and Lousiana; you say that these frauds are sanctified and rendered valid by the certificate of a governor, based upon the false returns of a canvassing board, and the vote of a State must be counted one way when it ought in fairness and justice to be counted another."

This commission, constituted for such broad purposes, failing to act within the scope and purview of the law, failing to take testimony upon the very subject-matter committed to it, has proved false to the trust confided to it by the House—has failed to act as the agent of the House. It is well known, Mr. Speaker, that this commission was created in consequence of a difference of opinion existing with reference to the power of the President of the Senate to open and count the electoral vote. It was raised for the purpose of settling a difficulty which thus existed between some members of the House and some members of the Senate and others. This commission never would have had an existence if it had not been supposed that it was designed to take proof in reference to every question where there was an allegation of fraud in the return of a vote or an allegation of disqualification on the part of an elector. The commission having failed to discharge its duty, shall it be said that the powers and functions of the House under the Constitution have been exhausted?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MONROE. Mr. Speaker, during all the discussions of the present Congress in regard to counting the electoral vote one political party has contended that Congress and the commission should, in the phrase of the day, "go behind the returns." The other party has refused to do this. Democrats have constantly demanded that we should investigate the manner in which elections were conducted in the States. Republicans have as constantly replied that this is not our proper work. From this relative attitude of the two parties an attempt has been made to draw an inference unfavorable to the republicans. It is said that this unwillingness on their part to extend the field of inquiry, has an ugly look and can hardly be accounted for in any way, except by the existence of a disposition to conceal some great iniquity from the public gaze. It is asked, what but a desire to shield fraud from exposure could induce republicans to set any limits of time or space to our investigations? Of late the charge is made almost hourly in the House that the republican party is trying to cover up fraud. If this charge is well founded, the republicans are now making one of the darkest pages in all history. For one, I will not see this session close without repelling this charge, both for myself and my party. I have no sympathy with fraud and no desire to protect it. The honored party to which I belong has no such desire, no such sympathy. To see how groundless this charge is, one has only to consider how many things have to be assumed by our opponents in order to render it effective.

1. In making the charge it is assumed, first of all, that the frauds exist, that frauds in the interest of the republican party have been perpetrated to such an extent in the disputed States as to affect the result of the electoral vote. It is even assumed that republicans here, by refusing to investigate, virtually admit the existence of these frauds. I affirm in reply that republicans have never admitted nor believed that frauds such as I have described have had an existence. They do not claim that there have been no frauds committed by republicans in the Southern States; they do not undertake to defend the personal character or all the official acts of all republican members of returning boards. But they do claim and believe, that no frauds were committed by republicans or republican officials in connection with the November election which could have changed one electoral vote. All charges of this kind they have denied as broadly and as specifically as they have been made. They do not admit, for instance, that such a case as that which has been principally complained of, the action of the Louisiana returning board in throwing out the vote of certain districts, was fraud. If there was in that State such a parish as East Feliciana is described to have been, in which for several years previous to 1876 the republican vote had been about seventeen hundred, and in which the registered colored vote for that year had been more than twenty-one hundred; and if when the election returns for November, 1876, were received, it was discovered that but one republican vote had been cast; further, if the returning board upon learning this fact, and upon what in its judgment was conclusive evidence of terrorism and intimidation in such parish, proceeded, in obedience to both the letter and the spirit of the statute law prescribing its duties, to throw out the whole or a large part of the vote of that parish, such action certainly could not be pronounced a fraud. You may, if you please, denounce it; you may say that it is not a sound and wise method; you may call it arbitrary and oppressive; but you cannot declare it to be unlawful, and by no proper use of the English language can you stigmatize it as a fraud. There has been no show of evidence of fraud except fraud upon a scale too small in amount to affect results, and even for this the evidence has been of such quality that it gives a more violent wrench to the moral nature to believe it than to believe in the general fairness of returning boards. We do not then admit the frauds which are assumed. Still less do we admit that, did we deem it proper to enter upon an examination of the character of State elections in Louisiana or elsewhere, we should suffer anything by comparison with our political opponents. Admitting, for the sake of argument, the worst that has been charged in regard to fraud, it would be more than matched by the reports which have reached us of intimidation and of the destruction of all freedom in the use of the elective franchise.

2. Again, in making this charge of a desire to conceal frauds, democrats not only assume the existence of the frauds but also assume that it is practicable for Congress to reach them. This we do not admit. The world is full of frauds which Congress cannot correct. In all the States there are numerous classes of frauds over which we have no control. Bad as fraud is, and eloquent as may be our declamations against it, we are compelled to permit such frauds to continue, if the States will not punish and suppress them, rather than by usurping unconstitutional power to disrupt our whole political system, and absorb all the reserved rights of the States in one great centralized despotism. It is always desirable that fraud should be punished, but it must be done by legitimate authority. It is a familiar maxim—familiar certainly to democratic minds—that Congress has only such powers as are granted to it by the Constitution. To the States the power has been expressly and exclusively granted to appoint electors in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct. To the ordinary mind it would appear that under this grant of power to the State, is included the whole business of providing by law all the machinery for the election of electors, and for qualifying them to discharge the duties of the electoral college. It would seem evident that should Congress undertake any portion of this work, or assume jurisdiction over it, its action would be simple usurpation and a gross invasion of the rights of the States. How perverse it is, then, to assume that the power of Congress to go behind the returns from the States is so plain that not to see and admit it implies a desire to cover up fraud!—especially when a respectful regard for the rights of the States is in accord with the opinions and practices of a long line of eminent jurists and statesmen. When to this weight of authority has been added the recent decision of our own commission, after the most careful and painstaking deliberation, cannot our democratic friends understand why we should prefer not to overpass the limit which separates the State powers from the Federal? Can they not, by the exercise of a reasonable charity, account for the position which we occupy on some other ground than that of sympathy with fraud?

3. Once more, to make the charge against us of protecting fraud effective, they have found it necessary further to assume that their efforts at delay in proceeding with the electoral count, are due to a desire to get at the facts and real merits of the case, and that our promptness in acting and impatience at delay are due to a desire to escape the facts and to protect frauds from exposure; that they linger upon the field with all the fondness of those who are in search of treasure, and that we hasten over it with the solicitude and trepidation of those who fear that it will give way beneath their feet. We must be permitted to doubt the entire soundness of this theory. I venture to suggest that, in their case, something besides a passion for truth may prompt dilatory motions, and that, in our case, something better than fear of disclosure may produce eagerness to go forward. There may possibly mingle with their motives, for they, like us, are only human, some desire to prevent the inauguration of a republican President; and there may mingle with ours some desire for the faithful discharge of a constitutional duty.

In conclusion, we can well afford to dismiss the further consideration of a charge of complicity with fraud which is founded upon assumptions so violent and for which so little that is worthy of the name of evidence has been offered.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Speaker, I have been one of the silent members of the House and am now diffident in presenting objections in so grave a matter as the count of the electoral vote of a State; but a conviction of duty to my constituents and to the country forbids me to be a silent witness of the consummation of a great wrong.

When, a few weeks ago, I voted for the electoral bill I little anticipated that to-day I would stand in my place an indignant protestant to the decisions of the commission. I admit at the outset that the bill under which we are now acting was a democratic measure, recommended by every democratic member of the joint committee; submitted to a democratic caucus and overwhelmingly adopted, and passed by the almost unanimous vote of the democratic party in both Houses of Congress. I admit all this; and while I did not like a single feature of the bill for its own sake, yet it was the best method presented to Congress for the settlement of a vexed question. It was demanded by the whole country to insure domestic tranquillity and to revive our languishing industries. Without the bill Mr. Hayes would have been counted in by fraud and put in by force, and the double wrong would have wrecked our free institution. We passed it with implicit confidence in the fairness at least of the judicial portion of the tribunal which has astounded the country by its decision. We had a right to expect something from at least that portion of the commission, and the fault we find to-day is not with the law itself but with the perversion of the law by that commission.

I admit, sir, that I for one thought the judicial members of that commission were more than men; I thought them judges. To my mind they were abstractions of legal wisdom, learning, and justice, capable of sinking partisanship and every unworthy consideration, even their own individuality, in the ascertainment of truth in the case submitted to them.

The disappointment of the country is a just measure of the reasonable expectation of justice at their hands. Speeches, now of public record, made by members of the commission, committed them to full, fair, and thorough investigation of the cause.

That the people are to-day disappointed, that the democratic party is disappointed, is not the legitimate result of the electoral law, but of the disobedience to and violation of the law by the commission. They were organized by the very terms of the law that called them into being to ascertain who were the duly appointed electors for President and Vice-President of the United States. Instead of performing that duty, they have told us who were the prima facie appointed electors. Sir, was it necessary that all the eloquence which thrilled this House and rang through the whole country in the debate on the electoral bill should have been expended upon a measure which was designed to produce such a result? Was it necessary that this paraphernalia of a joint commission, composed of members of both Houses and a portion of the Supreme Court, should be called into being to exercise a function to which the President of the Senate was fully competent; to which even the tellers appointed by the two Houses were fully competent; just as competent as this commission to decide upon the superficial technicalities of the case; just as competent to tell the people of the country who were the prima facie electors. Yet all this waste of eloquence, this labor, these caucuses, these meetings of joint committees, simply to usher into existence a commission of such imposing character to perform a simple, plain, clerical, and perfunctory task. Sir, the proposition is offensive to reason. It was not necessary to—

> Raise a tempest,
> To waft a feather, or to drown a fly.

What the people had the right to demand, what this Congress contemplated when it passed this bill, and what is provided by the law itself, is that this commission should reach the bottom facts, and that a decision consonant with truth and justice should be solemnly, conscientiously, and even prayerfully attained. But they have signally failed to meet the expectation of the country. The people asked for bread and they gave them a stone. When they asked for full evidence in the case of a contested State they gave them this:

Ordered, That no evidence shall be received.

Can gentlemen reasonably object that disappointment and denunciation should meet them at every turn? I say the spirit in which the astounding decisions of this commission have been received in every portion of the country bears pregnant and most forceful significance. Is there a man in this House, republican or democrat, who doubts that if this commission, in obedience to the law which organized it, had proceeded really to the examination of the merits of the case and had endeavored to reach the essence of this contest, and then, in pursuance of their plain duty under the law, declared Tilden or Hayes elected—can any man doubt when the news was received that every city, village, town, and hamlet throughout the country would have blazed into a simultaneous illumination, and that from every quarter of the Union a grand chorus of exultation would have been raised? But how was it received? When the news of its first decisions was flashed throughout the country, did it meet a responsive thrill in the popular heart? Did it excite any enthusiasm? Did it call forth any manifestations of rejoicings? No, sir; the country received it everywhere as the news of a disaster. It was as though a great calamity rested all over our land; as though the nation had lost a battle. Sir, those false judgments have no power to stir that love, truth, and justice in the human heart which are the parents of enthusiasm.

In the construction of any law, the best authority, next to the text itself, is the intention of the legislature which formed the law. We all know that it was the unanimous opinion of this House, on both sides, that it was the duty of this commission, for which the law itself provided, that this commission should take all the evidence in this case; every man who supported it supported it on that ground, and every one who objected to it objected to it for the same reason.

I see before me the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] a member of that electoral commission, and the ground of his objection and vote against the bill was that it compelled evidence in this case.

Now, I will animadvert upon the speech which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] made yesterday. That gentleman yesterday denied this commission could have gone into the evidence. Here is what he said when the electoral bill was being contested upon this floor. He objected. He says:

I object then to the bill to regulate the counting of the electoral votes because—

I. In requiring evidence to be considered in the count which goes back of the returns required by the Constitution, and which may controvert the authority of electors who have the constitutional evidence of a right to act as such, it is unconstitutional and void.

That was then his opinion. Further on——

Mr. LAWRENCE. Further on you will see that I do not believe we have any such power.

Mr. MONEY. Do not take up my ten minutes. Further on the gentleman speaks with a spirit of prophecy which almost amounts to inspiration. He says—

It is impossible that the commission provided by this bill can reach a result which will command the confidence of the people.

For once in his life my friend from Ohio was right, and I fully concur with him, and go further, that neither do the decisions of the tribunal command nor has their course invited the confidence of the people.

The gentleman took occasion yesterday in his speech in answer to my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] to refer to the condition of things precedent to and during the election in Mississippi, and asked how would we like the bull-dozed districts of Mississippi should be investigated? Is not the gentleman, in his character of Representative upon this floor, compelled to take cognizance of the fact that they have been investigated; that the committee of the Senate have explored every ramification of this business; that they have summoned before them men of different vocations and from every quarter of Mississippi, who have been for months dancing attendance in the antechambers of the Capitol, who have testified both pro and con, and that after a searching examination, conducted mainly by bitter partisan republicans brought from Mississippi for the purpose, an examination in which the rules heretofore held by courts and committees were ignored, an examination not only into the res gestæ of the election and of the political canvass preceding, but was an inquisition also into the laws, customs, manners, the public and private business, social and domestic relations of the people of that State; an examination that not only demanded of witnesses what they saw and knew of actual occurrences, but what they heard, thought, and believed, and what other people thought and believed; and yet the whole mass of testimony absolutely amounted to nothing, and, as one of the republican Senators on the committee told me, "could have no practical result."

The good name and character of the people whom I have the honor in part to represent have been assailed at all points, and their vindication is the result. The testimony showed an ardent, zealous, and energetic effort of a noble people, determined to rule themselves and united as one man in a heroic effort to combine every moral, physical and legitimate agent to accomplish so laudable a purpose. The gentleman could have spared himself the ungracious act of insinuating apprehension in us of a possible investigation which has already become matter of record and to which we appeal. Republicans here have been accustomed to plant themselves on the color line and they fail to understand how a man can be black and a democrat. They might as well say that a man cannot be black and appreciate low taxes, good government, and material prosperity. They do not give the negro whom they claimed as the ward of the nation and the protégé of the republican party credit for that intelligence and independence of political action which they assume for themselves. They have for many years attempted to support an unnatural condition of things at the South. The Federal power was invoked to keep the pyramid standing on its apex, when the inexorable and persistent law of gravitation demanded that it should rest upon its base. The day has been, but it will never be again, when the ignorance and barbarism of Mississippi, joined with the rapacity of strangers, controlled her destinies.

But, Mr. Speaker, to return from this digression provoked by the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to the subject-matter before the House. I repel the accusation that it is at any compromise of honor or good faith that we resist under the law itself the achievement of this iniquity. We have a duty to perform for those who sent us here. We deny that we have entered into a game of chance. It was not the intention of this House to leave the settlement of so grave a question, involving the rights of millions, upon the uncertain decision of

Fortune, that goddess blind,
Who stands upon a rolling, restless stone.

And if it were true that we played a game of chance we did not expect our opponents to deal from a pack of cards that held eight jacks. I am not an expert, but I believe they are called knaves. Nor as a compact are we bound when the compact has been violated; for this commission has violated the law of its being, annulled it and the Federal Constitution, abused a sacred trust, insulted common sense, and outraged common justice. Its illogical, illegal, and inconsistent decisions can neither be palliated nor denied. Whatever the past reputations of the majority may be, whatever their performance of public duty in its highest sense may hereafter be, they cannot tear away the damning record which they now complete, and which like the shirt of Nessus will burn and blister them to the core.

In the light of these transactions of the commission, the incoming administration casts an adumbration over the land dark with apprehension and distrust, because its muniment of title is founded in fraud—fraud that taints all it touches, and whose agency in the transfer or perpetuation of power marks the decay of nations.

I forbode, sir, that the electoral farce whose last act we witness is but the prelude to the nation's tragedy—not the heroic tragedy of the sword and ax, but the lingering tragedy of moral decay, slower but not less sure of the catastrophe. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that we have fought the last battle for constitutional liberty; but I hope there yet may be among the people, in republics the source both of power and of virtue, that robust and vigorous love of freedom that has been a salient feature of American character and that has held its more than vestal vigils for one hundred years of our national history; that the people may at the next election rise in their sovereign dignity and with one inspired jesture wave from the theater of political action the party that participates in and profits by this fraud.

To my mind the republican party has won a pyrrhic victory, from whose demoralization there is no recovery. If I should be mistaken, if the people are prepared for usurpation so gross and bald as this, if they patiently extend their free hands for the shackles of slaves, then shall I have arrived at a conclusion which in Rome was deemed the highest crime, I shall have despaired of the Republic. Sir, this conclusion of the presidential question cannot bring peace or prosperity. Recognizing fully that the peace sentiment is stronger than any other in our country; recognizing that scarcely any provocation would drive the people to internecine war, and those dreadful horrors which are its natural concomitants, yet there will not be that peace which brings content. A resentful and sullen submission may be had, but fraud has laid its frozen hand upon the Government, and the chill running along the electric chain that binds these States together, and reaching every citizen, the industries of the country will wither and perish beneath the touch. The Administration owing its power to such agency cannot be successful without the sunshine of the people's approbation. You might as well, sir, expect the georgeous efflorescence, the luxuriant fruit of the generous and redundant tropics to be evoked by the will of man from the barrenness and desolation of the icy Arctic.

The gentlemen of the republican party themselves distrust the outrageous award by which they profit, completely traversing their record for the past twelve years. They come with words of conciliation and fair promises to the South; we hope they mean all they say. A glorious opportunity is presented to Mr. Hayes, even with the inauspicious beginning of his administration, to do good to his country and to mark his lease of power among the brightest in our annals. If he will give himself to that high duty of statesmanship, the reconciliation of the people to the Government; if he will take the mailed hand of Federal power from the stricken and suffering States of Louisiana and South Carolina; if he will allow the blessings of self-government to those who have tasted the bitterness of alien oppression; if, to quote the language of his friend, General FOSTER, he would rule States rather than provinces, freemen rather than slaves; if he would strive to supplant sectional hate with reconciliation, then he will find no factious opposition to such policy in the South. But not knowing his policy, and knowing well that as stated by his friends here it traverses all the matured utterances and carefully considered policy and accomplished acts of his party for the last twelve years, I must be excused to-day from lubricating the processes of the count and hastening an event I may regret.

The South yields readily to kindness, but gentlemen are mistaken if they think those who have character and influence enough to become leaders of the Southern people can be induced by the love of place to yield their convictions and walk at the chariot wheels of Mr. Hayes to grace his triumph. To my fellow-democrats who differ as to the action this moment to be had, I say bear with us even as we do with you.

We follow what we conceive to be a duty, and cannot believe that our people will present a keener edge of indignation to those who struggle to prevent the consummation of a fraud than to those who perpetrate it. As for my own part, I cheerfully submit my record to the liberty-loving constituency which I have the honor to represent in this House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I have been in the habit of speaking directly to the point before me, and therefore I shall have nothing to say whatever on this occasion as to any electoral count except the counting of the electoral vote of my own State of Vermont.

I submit, sir, that the certificates of Vermont which were in the hands of the President of the Senate were the only certificates to which we can direct our attention. The supposed certificate and bundle of papers handed up to the President of the Senate yesterday we have nothing to do with and can have nothing to do with unless we violate the law. The law is that all certificates shall be in the hands of the President of the Senate by the 1st day of February, 1877, so far as the electoral count this year is concerned. That being so, we have nothing to do except with the returns that were found in the hands of the President of the Senate at that time. The other returns are to us of no more consequence than a last year's almanac; and those who insist that they shall be counted are unmistakably in the wrong.

Those certificates, then, to which we are at liberty to address our attention tell us this, and this only, that five gentlemen were elected to be the electors of the State of Vermont. One of them was ineligible. His ineligibility was voided by his resignation and the acceptance of that resignation and the appointment of his successor, he being himself re-elected to fill the vacancy when his ineligibility had ceased. Now I ask gentlemen if upon their oaths they can deny the right of Vermont to her vote. Gentlemen, I understand, are here bound to act upon their oath of office as much as if they stood in a jury-box. I ask them, then, whether, upon their oaths, they are prepared to deny to my State her right to the vote she has cast. Some gentlemen here may do it, but I am thankful to feel assured that more than two-thirds of the members of this House, and the Senate unanimously, are prepared to count the votes cast by the State of Vermont.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a preamble and resolutions adopted a few days ago at a meeting of the democratic members of the Legislature of West Virginia, and ask to have them read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas said tribunal refused to inquire into said alleged frauds and utterly disregarded the plain provisions of the act creating said tribunal, rendering contradictory and partisan decisions, attempting to legalize and force upon the people the results of the most infamous frauds ever attempted upon a free people: Therefore,

Resolved, That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives in Congress be requested to use all legal, constitutional, and honorable means to prevent the consummation of this most foul conspiracy against republican government and the liberties of the people.

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to oppose any appropriation for the support of the Army that does not restrict expressly and strongly the Army from being used in the Southern States and confine its use to the protection of our western frontier.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, there has been no period in the history of this country when the people have been so outraged as they are now by the partisan decisions of the electoral commission. And if, in their opinion, anything could justify the repudiation and nullification of a statute regularly enacted, it would be those decisions.

The joint committee charged with the duty of providing for the counting of the electoral votes, in their report accompanying the electoral bill, and alluding especially to the members of the commission who were to come from among the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, expressed the opinion that "it would be difficult, if not impossible, we think, to establish a tribunal that could be less the subject of party criticism than such a one." We naturally supposed, sir, that the justices of that high tribunal, who long ago promulgated the doctrine that "fraud vitiates every transaction, even the most solemn," and who have adhered to it in their judicial decisions, would, when called to act on this electoral commission, still adhere to it. We could not have supposed that they would have been so forgetful of their duty and of their reputations as to render anywhere, under any circumstances, decisions manifestly erroneous, contradictory, and partisan.

The fact is apparent that a large majority of the votes cast at the election were cast for Tilden and Hendricks electors, and that a decided majority of those electors were appointed. But this commission, by counting the votes of Louisiana and Florida for candidates whom the people rejected, has entirely and fraudulently defeated the popular will. To do this the commissioners were compelled to reverse on one day their action of the day before. We see them going behind the electoral returns of the States of Florida and Oregon to ascertain whether or not ineligible electors had been chosen; we see them, sustained by no rule of law and no rule of honest construction, refusing to go behind the returns for the same purpose in the State of Louisiana. Well may we, well may the people, be shocked and astounded at these monstrous iniquities.

The electoral law, however, stands upon the statute-book. Can it be properly disregarded and disobeyed until it shall have been repealed or adjudged invalid? It received the sanction of not only the Senate and the President of the United States, but this democratic House also. Can we who created it, who gave it the impress of a law, disobey it without overstepping our duty?

The democratic party has ever been the law-abiding party of the country, and I would not like to see it, at this time or at any other time, commence the work of repudiating statutes of its own creation.

The resolutions to which I have called attention point out that the way out of the difficulty must be legal, constitutional, and honorable. Would it be legal, would it be constitutional, would it be honorable to disown and break down in the manner proposed a statute of our own making—a law which has not been repealed and has not been condemned by the courts; a law, too, for the passage of which pressure as great as was ever exerted upon a legislative body was brought to bear on this Congress from all sections and chiefly by the democratic party?

Mr. Speaker, I have heretofore steadily voted for every measure that promised to secure an honest count, I have voted to give all the time that was necessary for consulting, for making up objections to the various returns, and for the preparation of arguments by gentlemen on this floor; and I shall in the future do whatever, to use the words of my constituents, I legally, constitutionally, and honorably can to defeat this most foul conspiracy.

But I do not wish to trespass longer upon the attention of the House, and yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MAISH.]

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Speaker, a favorite method for illustrating moral or immoral truths in ancient times was the fable. In the multiplicity of speeches which have been delivered on this floor on the finding of the electoral commission I am not aware that any have been employed. I am unwilling to let this great proceeding go down to posterity without at least the use of one. I have recently found in the Philadelphia Times one that is admirably adapted to my purpose; and I accordingly send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STOPPED AT THE PORTAL—THE EXCITEMENT CONCERNING THE BIRTH OF AN HEIR TO THE KING OF THE CANNIBAL ISLANDS.

Recent advices from the Pacific give some interesting particulars of the disturbance which has arisen concerning the succession to the crown of the Cannibal Islands It is known that for many years great uneasiness has been felt among the faithful subjects of His Majesty the King because he was without an heir, and when it was at length announced that the queen was about to present him with the hoped-for child, every one awaited the interesting event with the utmost anxiety, and especially the king himself and his household, who dreaded the change of dynasty that must occur should the king die without an heir male. There was a considerable party in the kingdom, however, to whom the idea of a change was not distasteful, and who therefore rather hope that the child might prove a girl. In due time the child was born, and the certificate of the royal physican and the royal nurse set forth the welcome fact that it was a boy. Great was the rejoicing in the king's household; but soon it began to be whispered abroad that the physician and nurse had either made a mistake or told a lie. One of the ladies in waiting had declared her belief that the child was a girl. The consulting physician had thrown out the same idea. The matter got into the newspapers and became the subject of excited discussion in the Parliament. The king and his counsellors stuck to it that an heir was born and all was well, but the popular excitement became so great that it was evident some steps must be taken to settle the controversy. It was accordingly agreed, with the concurrence of all parties, that a high commission, composed of fifteen eminent physicians, should be appointed to examine the child, and, that there should be no appearance of partiality, seven of the fifteen were to be chosen by the opposition. So fair an arrangement did this seem that the whole public readily acquiesced. It would require but to view the infant to decide the case, and surely fifteen pairs of scientific eyes could not be all deceived. And so the high commission was convened and the nation quietly abided the result.

The queen was duly informed of the royal inquisition that was about to visit her, and all was made in readiness for their reception. The chosen fifteen put on their stateliest robes of office, and proceeded upon their mission, and with due dignity approached the portal of the royal bed-chamber. But here it was that the king's adherents showed the wisdom and safety of their action. "Halt," said the fifteenth commissioner; "know you not the law is written which forbids our entrance here? No foot of man less sacred than the king's or his own physician's dare cross the border of the queen's apartment. It is not for us to enter here. The law forbids. We must seek for evidence, but within the law."

"Yes," said an objector, "but see the purpose for which we were appointed. The law which created us knew it were impossible to decide the issue without our entrance here. It certainly was its intent that we should do so. Is not everything made ready for our reception? The power invested in us is our authority."

"Nay, not so," was the reply. "Let us seek the evidence we have. See here, this certificate bears all the marks of legal requirement; its signatures are those of lawful officers; it says the child is a boy, and so must our decision be. What says the court?"

And eight responded, "So think we," and seven answered "no." And thus was given in the verdict, the child must be a boy.

So it happens that the Cannibal Islands are filled with mutterings of discontent, since it is now known that the child was a girl and it is generally thought that the change of dynasty has only been delayed.

Mr. HAYMOND. Mr. Speaker, I shall not, in the few remarks that I am permitted to make, follow the worn and beaten track by reproducing arguments that have, in this and the preceding debates, been so often rung upon the ears of this House. The important question is, shall this House carry out in good faith the law recently enacted to regulate the counting of the electoral votes, and submit in good faith to the decision of the electoral commission?

I can not, sir, consistently bring myself to the point of interposing obstacles to delay or defeat the election of a President, and thus render void an act which I supported in good faith. I am not willing to become responsible for anarchy, nor am I willing to permit the prosperity and business interests of the country to be disturbed by the excitements and passions of another presidential election during the present year. I can only contemplate another election so soon, with a renewal of all the existing causes of strife, with fear and sad forebodings. In voting for the electoral bill I was prompted entirely by patriotic motives. I did not base my support of the measure upon the presumption that it would elect the candidate of my choice, but to secure a fair and amicable settlement of the most complicated and dangerous questions, save the issues of the great rebellion, that have happened since the foundation of the Government.

When I saw that the session was rapidly passing away and the time almost reached when the electoral votes were to be counted; that we were rushing headlong, without chart or compass, and that the wisest solons of the nation were unable to comprehend the difficulties before us and devise a rational method to escape the danger of anarchy that appeared imminent, and that the people in all sections of the country, alarmed at the situation, were loud in their demands that Congress should without delay adopt some plan by which the dangers might be averted and peace and harmony sustained—then it was that, in obedience to the dictates of my conscience and in accordance with my sense of public duty, I voted for the passage of the bill creating the electoral commission.

I shall not now, sir, by bad faith and by puerile inconsistency, condemn my own act; neither shall I so far surrender myself to chagrin or disappointment as to charge with fraudulent intentions those who have decided adversely to the claims of the democratic party. It is too early to hazard predictions as to what may follow if this or that candidate is declared elected. "There is a Divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will;" and I shall not forsake the idea, though defeated in the choice of a candidate for President, that our action in this great event was shaped by an all-wise Providence, whose ways are inscrutable, to the end that some important result, now unforeseen, as an essential condition to the grand destiny of this nation, may be worked out.

We have had impromptu opinions almost by the dozen denouncing the electoral law as unconstitutional. But I have not been disturbed with serious doubts in regard to its constitutionality. The Constitution contains but one positive injunction on the subject, namely: "the votes shall be counted;" and it names but one condition under which they shall be counted, namely: in the presence of the two Houses of Congress; and this is all. The requirements of the Constitution are clearly subserved by the law and its object was limited to the single purpose of determining what were the lawful votes cast for President and Vice-President.

We had an election by the people which was close and undecisive. Two great parties put forth their utmost strength in the contest and each claimed the victory. Congress could not decide, because each House, claiming equal jurisdiction, disagreed upon the result as radically as the two great political parties, and if one man at the other end of the Capitol had counted the votes, as it was claimed by many that he had a right to do, a large majority of the people of the country would have declared the act revolutionary and an unwarranted usurpation of power; but the issue had to be settled, and since a plan has been adopted by a large majority in both Houses of Congress, backed by the public sentiment of the country, for its settlement, it is the duty of every man entitled to the appellation of patriot to abide by the result in good faith, whether the verdict has been in his favor or not.

It has pained me, sir, to hear in this House so many hasty and bitter denunciations of the judges and other members of the electoral commission. They are all, "all honorable men," and until we have learned more of their purposes, have had more time to consider the logical results of their decision, and have stepped down and out from this theater of excitement to our homes and the quiet retreats of retirement, we should accord to each and all of them patriotic motives. Their decision appears to be based ostensibly upon the time-honored doctrine of State rights, tenaciously advocated by leading statesmen of this country since the days of Thomas Jefferson. If their verdict is based upon solid ground as to Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina, then we should have no more tampering with State sovereignty, no further military interference by the Federal Government with State elections, no further attempts to foist upon the people of any State executive and legislative officers never chosen by them, but leave each State the absolute right to govern itself and regulate its own affairs, subject only to the Constitution of the United States. I believe the decision to be in consonance with this doctrine.

Louisiana and South Carolina will then rise up in their majesty and liberate themselves from the enthrallments that have made them the burlesque of republican government and the disgrace of the nation in the recent election. Let us hope that the incoming President will exhibit such statesmanship as will lead him to respect the rights of the States. Let him not dare to "go behind the returns," and attempt to foster any State government not created and supported by the people, or to maintain in power usurpers by Federal bayonets. But if he does it would be better for him if he had never been born, for in the disputed title to his office his administration would be regarded with disrespect and his efforts would turn to ashes like the fruit upon the shores of the forbidden sea.

The troubles and perplexities that we have to encounter in deciding who was elected President are due mainly to the exceptional state of affairs in several of the Southern States. They are incident to the late war, and are the legitimate offspring of the mistakes and blunders of reconstruction. They come from the mistaken policy of attempting to sustain corrupt and mercenary rulers in opposition to the will of the people.

This policy cannot be much longer maintained. It has had its carnival and must rapidly disappear under the condemnation of the whole American people. Before another presidential election those States will have vindicated their sovereignty, and when this is done we will hear no more about mercenary and unprincipled returning boards and double returns of electoral votes.

The members of the returning board of Louisiana were perhaps as fraudulent and as iniquitous as they have been represented to be. It looks like they threw out enough votes to overcome the 8,000 majority of Tilden with the sole intent to defeat his election. Their action appears to have been adapted to the necessity of the case, and they would have been no doubt equal to the emergency had the majority for Tilden been 20,000 or even 50,000.

But this great Government will not perish because a presidential election has been marred by the irregularities of a few unprincipled men. The deed was so bold and startling that it will make crime odious in the future, and the American people will never suffer its repetition, and I trust there will never again be an occasion when it could happen.

I am not one of those who will despair of the Republic or who believes that its liberties will be endangered by the inauguration of Mr. Hayes, even if his title to the Presidency is ever so questionable. I have heard ad nauseam many doleful predictions and fearful prognostications, but similar ones have occurred at periodical intervals since the foundation of the Government. A class of persons of peculiar constitution and temperament, who may be denominated morbid croakers, has always been ready, under the slightest pretexts, to herald their notes of alarm and to sound the doom of republican institutions, and it will not be strange in a crisis like this that the story should be repeated with increased emphasis. Notwithstanding all such predictions, however, the Government will survive, and the watchword from the mountain-tops and the valleys will be "onward," and, as Mr. Webster said in his famous speech, "This nation will continue to grow with its growth and strengthen with its strength."

What is a transient political triumph in the career of a nation like this, created to endure, so resplendent in its progress and in all the elements of greatness, and so strong in the affections of the people? It will move onward in its grand destiny with a momentum that no power can arrest, and it can no more be overwhelmed by the passions of the hour than the sun can be jostled from his central position in the heavens by the nebulous tail of some erratic comet.

I shall continue to maintain the supremacy of the law, whoever may be chosen President. I am for the country under all circumstances, and I think my vision is strong enough to penetrate the clouds and mists that float around us, and to see in the clear sky beyond that our flag still waves, and that the temple of constitutional freedom still peers aloft, and though assailed still proudly stands and will stand unshaken upon its immutable foundations while the mountains stand and while time endures.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, thoroughly convinced of the injustice wrought by the decision of the electoral commission and abating not one "jot or tittle" in condemnation of its proceedings, still regarding it as impracticable and impossible to avert the results of its action, and while protesting against the wrong by which the spirit and intent of the law were frustrated, I feel that sound policy and the paramount consideration of the salvation of the State and people of Louisiana require that their Representatives in this House should abstain from a futile attempt to nullify that decision and thereby postpone the redemption which is essential to their very existence and from which alone they can expect peace and prosperity.

This redemption from usurpation and oppression is to me, as a Louisianian, superior to everything else. Crushed and humiliated in all her constitutional rights, enthralled and impoverished by men who, under usurped authority, assume and exercise the powers of arbitrary and merciless rulers instead of discharging the functions of obedient servants of the people, dominated by men who sacrifice all her material and substantial interests to the gratification of their lust for place and personal aggrandizement, who postpone the public good to their own selfish aims and purposes, Louisiana finds herself to-day in the attitude of destitution and woe; standing upon the very edge of a yawning, terrible abyss, in whose depths misery and destruction stretch forth their arms to receive her in hateful and loathsome embrace. If this suffering and affliction awaited only her stalwart sons, if ruin and desolation were to fall alone upon the young, the active, and the self-reliant, I think I do but simple justice to them when I declare that they are equal to their fate and would not shrink from the duty of boldly baring their breasts and bravely meeting and resisting the shock. But, sir, there are other and holy considerations which suggest themselves to their judgment and require profound and serious deliberation. The rights, the safety, the happiness, the well-being of her old men, tottering in age and infirmity; of fathers who in their declining years look to their sons for care and sustenance; of mothers who have fondly nursed their boys and demand of them protection and safety; of wives who in the hour of despair and danger claim of their husbands the fulfillment of their solemn marital vows to love and to cherish, to protect and defend; of innocent maidens and of helpless infants who in prayerful tones and with lisping voice and tearful eyes appeal to fathers and to brothers to extend their fostering care—these, all these, crowd upon brave men, silence the voice of passion, and appeal to reason and to sound judgment.

I abandon no principle. I do not change my settled convictions of political right when I declare that in this crisis of the fate of my State and people, of my friends and brethren, in this hour of supreme peil to the honor, the safety, the homes, the firesides, the lares and penates of my friends and neighbors, I, as one of their trusted Representatives, honored by them far more than my poor, feeble qualifications merit, solemnly aver that I hold it my sacred duty to subordinate all issues and considerations, save those involving personal honor, to the duty of saving that State and people and working out their redemption from the ruin and degradation which threaten them. I care not what may be the consequences so far as my political prospects are concerned, I ignore all thought of personal advantage; I rise superior to selfish considerations; I dare to risk the coldness and the condemnation of party friends and the reproach, ay, the obloquy of partisan associates, to bear the fury of the present storm; and if I can contribute aught toward relieving my beloved State from the bondage which oppresses and enslaves her, to unrivet the chains which bind her fair limbs and elevate her to the dignity of that freedom to which the "laws of nature and of nature's God entitle her," I can well afford to wait on the future for a vindication of the motives which actuate me, or if, as is often the case, this vindication may not take place, I can submit to the mortification which attaches to the knowledge that one's motives are misconstrued and misinterpreted and I can at least console myself with the highest of earthly consolations, the approval of my own conscience, and enjoy the satisfaction which results from the performance of which I believe to be a high and sacred duty.

I know that the people of Louisiana, the white people of Louisiana, have been most cruelly and grossly misrepresented. I know that for party purposes and for selfish ends there have been ascribed to them the most shocking barbarities and the violation of every rule of civilization and enlightenment. These slanders have been most industriously circulated and have served to excite prejudice and sectional animosity against us; but, sir, intimately acquainted as I am with these people, I know and I assert that they are baseless and unjust, that the universal sentiment of the intelligent, the influential, the thoughtful, and the controlling element of that people, is love of and desire for peace, order, and good government; the recognition and the enforcement by just laws of all the civil and political rights of every class of the community; the honest acceptance of the issues of the war which resulted in the enfranchisement of the colored race and the endowment of that race with all the rights of American citizenship under the Constitution and its more recent amendments; the earnest desire to elevate the colored people to the plane of high civilization and enlightenment, to bring about harmony of feeling, and to raise them in the moral, political, and educational scale; to repress violence growing out of political and ethnical antagonism, and to see all our citizens, regardless of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, live together in the bonds of civil and political unity in our great American brotherhood. I know, and I pledge my word and my honor to the truth of the declaration, now made in this solemn presence on this grave occasion, that the white people of Louisiana, represented by the overwhelming majority of its numbers, its capital, its intelligence, its culture, will in the administration of the government of the State, in its executive, legislative, and judicial departments, extend equal and impartial justice to all classes of citizens; protect them alike and equally in the enjoyment of all their rights of life liberty, person, and property; repress violence and lawlessness no matter where it originates, or by whom committed, and thus insure that harmony and good feeling which go hand in hand with the progress of the State in the road of happiness and prosperity.

The people of Louisiana have solemn, earnest, and, I believe, truthful assurances from prominent members of the republican party, high in the confidence of Mr. Hayes, that in the event of his elevation to the Presidency he will be guided by a policy of conciliation toward the Southern States, that he will not use the Federal authority or the Army to force upon those States governments not of their choice, but in the case of these States will leave their own people to settle the matter peaceably, of themselves. This, too, is the opinion of President Grant, which he freely expresses, and which I am satisfied he will carry out and adhere to. Under these circumstances, pretermitting, at least at this time, any discussion of the manner and means by which Mr. Hayes may secure the Presidency, satisfied from the action of Congress that his accession to the office is well-nigh an accomplished fact, I do not hesitate, for the reasons before stated, to declare, that, actuated by a sense of duty to Louisiana, I shall throw no obstacle, by any action or vote of mine in the way of the completion of the electoral count; but, relying upon the good faith, the integrity, and the truthfulness of the gentlemen who have given these asurances, and having faith in their individual personal honor, I shall unhesitatingly discharge this duty and call upon those of my fellow-members who have been influenced in their action on this question by a desire to protect Louisiana and South Carolina to join me in the course which I feel called upon and justified in pursuing.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would not occupy a moment of the time of the House but for the sake of removing what seem to me to be one or two misapprehensions about the case in hand. It is alleged by some of the gentlemen who have spoken on this subject that somewhere or other there is a double return from the State of Vermont, and if so, the case ought to go to the electoral commission. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the electoral law speaks from the 1st day of February, and it speaks in tones of absolute authority that the President of the Senate is to open and deliver to the tellers all the certificates received by him up to that day, and he has no authority to deliver any others. If he had, anybody, everybody, from every State in the Union, might send any number of papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes of their States, and he would be compelled to present them all. No man believes that any such doctrine was intended or declared in this law.

Now, the President of the Senate has thus far faithfully opened all the certificates received by him up to the day of the passage of the electoral law. He even delivered one pretended certificate that was received the night before the law passed, namely, on the 31st of January. He delivered one that was found to be a mock certificate, and this House and the Senate were ashamed that they were compelled to listen to its reading. But yesterday came the statement from the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] that the day before he called upon the President of the Senate and informed him that about two months ago he [Mr. HEWITT] had received by express a sealed package and an intimation that something had been sent through the mail to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate responds, and no man questions his declaration, that he has received no dual returns from the State of Vermont, and under the law he must refuse to receive this post hac, post mortem package tendered to him in the presence of the two Houses. If he should receive it there would be no end to the demands made on him to receive anything that anybody chose to tender.

Now the only thing that remains to be said is this: I understand that it has been stated by some gentlemen here in the House that they saw the Secretary of the Senate take this package and put it in his pocket, and they inferred that the Secretary had carried it away. I hold in my hand a letter from Mr. GORHAM, Secretary of the Senate, addressed to me, which I will read so that it shall go upon the record. It is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
Washington, March 1, 1877.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry, I have to say that the paper presented by Mr. HEWITT, of New York, yesterday, in the joint meeting, and which the President of the Senate refused to receive, was not at any time in Mr. FERRY'S hands. As to myself, I did take it up, and remarked in the hearing of several, including the House tellers, that I was a friend of Mr. FERRY'S, and as the paper seemed to be a private communication addressed to him, I would take charge of it. I put it in my coat-pocket, intending to bring it away with other papers. Being admonished by the President of the Senate that my reception of it might be considered a constructive reception by him, I took it from my pocket and laid it in plain view upon the desk where I was seated. I never again had it in my possession and do not know where it is. I felt no responsibility concerning it. If it was brought out of the House, I do not know it. If it was taken at all, I do not know by whom.

Respectfully,

GEO. C. GORHAM.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
House of Representatives.

That letter clears up all possible question about the matter. I understand that all persons belonging to the official force of the Senate who were present at the meeting of the two Houses disclaim any knowledge whatever of the whereabouts of the paper, and disclaim any implication that it was taken to the Senate at all. The fact that it has been discovered here in this House now ends the whole of that chapter.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. A Senate messenger brought it to me and refused to tell me from whom he received it, although I asked him.

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not know that, and I have no desire to go any further into that question.

The SPEAKER. Order must be preserved. There is too much confusion in the Hall for the gentleman to be heard.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will wait until Ajax and the other chiefs have settled their quarrel. [After a pause.] Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no pretense of a claim that under any law in America the President of the Senate ought to receive this paper under the circumstances. Furthermore, the paper does not purport to be an electoral vote. There is no signature on the back of the paper, as I am told, authenticating it as from anybody in the world. For anything we know, it is another mock certificate. But gentlemen say that they had a dispatch, which has been read, and made a part of one of the objections. But this dispatch to the Speaker of the House only declares that some judge in Vermont has a certificate that Aldrich is an elector.

Now the fact that the pretended certificate of an elector was deposited in the office of a justice in Vermont is of no account. It is no authority for the statement that we have double returns of electoral votes. It is no return of an electoral college. It does not pretend to be. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if anybody is deceived by the pretense that we ought to have the paper opened in this House, coming as it does in a round-about way, by an unauthorized hand, not sent here by any messenger known to the law and not delivered until after the time when it was lawful to deliver it, that pretense is cleared away. When gentlemen vote on this question, let them vote upon the facts as they know them, for a vote for this resolution is simply a vote to prevent the conclusion of the count an plunge the nation into anarchy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STONE. I desire to say a word in connection with the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] He has read a letter from Mr. Gorham, the Secretary of the Senate. Being one of the tellers on the part of the House I feel called upon to state what I know in connection with this matter. When that package was sent to the desk yesterday I saw Mr. Gorham throw it under the desk among the rubbish. I immediately wrote a note to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] informing him that the package had been thrown under the desk. Mr. HEWITT approached me and we had some conversation, and during the time that conversation was going on I cast my eye towards Mr. Gorham I saw him take the package from under the desk and put it into his coat pocket. Therefore I have substantial proof of the fact that he did hold it in his possession.

Mr. HOAR. He says so himself.

Mr. FIELD. It is greatly to be regretted, Mr. Speaker, that this whole day should have been consumed in an attempt to rectify a mistake of the President of the Senate. That it was a mistake I think I can show, a grievous mistake, which the dignity and self-respect of this House should compel it to rectify if it can.

I shall not go into any question about the vote of Vermont, whether it be good or bad, nor inquire whether the paper which has been referred to is of any value. All I know is that a question arose respecting it which the President of the Senate assumed to decide for himself and refused to submit to the two Houses. Now, I deny that the President of the Senate has power to decide any question or to do anything except to keep order and exercise such power as is expressly given to him by this electoral law.

You know, Mr. Speaker, and we all know that this is the very question that has lain at the foundation of our debates during this whole session. At the beginning of the session it was maintained by the republicans that the President of the Senate could count the votes for President and Vice-President. Upon that point they stirred up the country, subsidized the press, and procured any number of legal opinions. But what did it all come to at last? Why, sir, the Senate itself after solemn debate repudiated the doctrine as having no real foundation. And the President of the United States, in a message to Congress, declared that never in the history of this Government, from first to last, had the President of the Senate assumed to decide any question in dispute.

Now, he does assume to decide this question whether or not the paper tendered to him by the member from New York [Mr. HEWITT] was a return to be opened by him. I say that if the members of this House consent to this attempt of the Presiding Officer of the Senate, then they must take heed to what is coming, for at the next quadrennial election the Senate may come into this Hall and its President may say, "I am to determine which are the returns to be opened." He may say, in answer to questions put to him, as he said yesterday, "I have not received such a return." And shall we be told that no one has the right to demand, "Why have you not received it? It was your duty to receive it. At all events, whether it was your duty to receive it or not depends not upon you, but upon us."

Suppose that the President of the Senate had refused to receive the certificate from Florida known as No. 3, which he did receive on the 31st day of January, would that have been a reason why we should not have insisted upon its being opened and read?

Obsta principiis, is the rule of prudence and the rule of law. The Commons of England have gained the liberties of the English people, which have made our Anglo-Saxon race the glory of the earth, by standing upon the smallest question that concerned their privileges. We must not give up jot or tittle of the rights of this House. It was the duty of the President of the Senate, when that paper was before him, instead of refusing to receive and open it, to submit the question to the two Houses, and the only remedy that can be now had is for him to be invited back here to open the paper in our presence.

Why, it may be asked, cannot it be opened here by you, Mr. Speaker? Why did I object to its being received by you? For two reasons: First, each House has the right to say whether it is a paper proper or not to be received. The Senate has the same right in that respect that we have. The question must be submitted to the two Houses together, and each must separate and determine upon it.

If the two Houses differ upon the question, then arises the very contingency which I have forewarned this House might arise at any time.

Further than that, if there are two returns, we have agreed by this electoral law that they shall go to the commission and afterward be determined by the two Houses, respectively. Let us deal with this question as the representatives of the people, not as democrats, not as republicans, but as guardians of the right of the House of Representatives in the electoral count: a right to participate in the decision of every question that can be raised.

Mr. CATE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FIELD. Certainly, if it does not come out of my time.

The SPEAKER. It must come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. CATE. I desire to get the gentleman's ideas upon the question submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] as to the effect of a return not having been received on the day, or coming by a different channel than that provided by law.

Mr. FIELD. I will answer the question of the gentleman with pleasure. There is no time fixed by law when a paper must be received to make it valid.

Mr. HOAR. Is there not a source fixed by law through which these returns must come?

Mr. FIELD. It is not so fixed by law as to deprive a State of its rights under the Constitution. You have decided—you gentlemen who, having acted as judges, come in here and debate with us what you have decided—that the law cannot contravene the Constitution, nor can Congress derogate from the rights of a State. Congress could not do it if it attempted it, and it has not attempted it.

This is what Congress has done. In 1792 it passed a law that the certificate of the electors should be sent in by the first Wednesday in January, but if not received by that time the Secretary of State should send for it. He may send for it at any time before the two Houses meet to count the vote. But the act of 1792, if it were otherwise in the way, has been repealed by the electoral law of this session, which declares that "all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes of each State shall be opened." I have answered the objection that this paper has not been received, because it ought to have been received. In point of fact it was delivered in our presence. It was delivered by the member from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to the President of the Senate, and he refused to receive it or open it. Are the representatives of the people to submit to that? Are republicans to submit to it? If you do, then look out for 1881.

Let us put our heel upon the doctrine that the President of the Senate is, in respect to the counting of the electoral vote, anything more than a presiding officer; that up to the meeting of the two Houses he is other than custodian of the certificates; and that when they are opened by him he has any other duty to perform than to submit to the two Houses every question that may arise.

The SPEAKER. The time for discussion having expired, the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] which is first in order, will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House requires that the package tendered by the member from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses on yesterday, and purporting to be a certificate of electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States in the State of Vermont, shall be opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses, and if found to be such a certificate, the same shall be submitted, together with the certificate read in the presence of the two Houses, to the electoral commission for its judgment and decision; and that the Senate be requested to make a like order requiring the President of the Senate to open said package in the presence of the two Houses, and until such order be made the House will not be ready to meet the Senate to proceed with the count of the electoral vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of this resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, but was interrupted by

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey, who said: I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to have that paper read? If so, I request that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not the paper.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to have a divison of the question upon this resolution?

Mr. CONGER. I submit that this demand is too late, as the first name on the roll had been called.

Mr. BLAND. I desire a separate vote upon the last clause of the resolution providing that until such order be made by the Senate the House will not be ready to proceed with the counting of the vote. The resolution contains two distinct propositions. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CONGER. The roll-call had commenced.

The SPEAKER. The roll-call had commenced and will proceed.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 148, not voting 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Davis, Williams, Willis, Wilshire, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Yeates—148.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Bass, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Clymer, Durand, Gibson, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hooker, Hunton, King, Levy, Lewis, Metcalfe, Milliken, Piper, Purman, Stephens, Tarbox, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Warner, Warren, and Wheeler—26.

So the resolution was not adopted.

During the roll-call,

Mr. TUCKER said: My colleagues, Mr. CABELL and Mr. HUNTON, are absent from the House by reason of sickness.

Mr. WAIT. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. CALDWELL. If he were here he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

Mr. STENGER. My colleague, Mr. CLYMER, is absent, engaged on a conference committee.

Mr. WARREN. My colleague, Mr. ABBOTT, is absent on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr HOPKINS. I submit the following amendment——

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The question, I think, recurs now on my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is not prevailing. It has not been asked.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I call for the previous question. [Cries of "Too late."] I demanded the previous question at the time my proposition was submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. But it was not sustained by the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The Speaker did not submit the question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman now demand the previous question?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I do, and I ask that the vote upon my demand be taken immediately.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the previous question is now seconded, it does not cut off the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr HOPKINS.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the previous question on the original proposition, on the amendments and on the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HOPKINS.]

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House requires that the package tendered by the member from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses on yesterday, and purporting to be a certificate of electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States in the State of Vermont, shall be opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses, and if found to be such a certificate, the same shall be submitted, together with the certificate read in the presence of the two Houses, to the electoral commission for its judgment and decision; and that the Senate be requested to make a like order requiring the President of the Senate to open said package in the presence of the two Houses.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. That is substantially the same resolution which was just voted down.

Mr. CAULFIELD. No, sir; I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to state the difference.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is the same resolution, except the last four lines.

Mr. RICE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAGE. I make the point of order that this is the same proposition once voted on.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, rose.

Mr. HOPKINS. I voted against the other resolution because of the last four lines.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HOPKINS. I was only responding to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 115, nays 147, not voting 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Yeates—147.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Bass, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Darrall, Durand, Faulkner, Gibson, Goodin, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hunton, King, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Metcalfe, Milliken, Piper, Purman, Roberts, Savage, Stephens, Wait, Warner, and Wheeler—28.

So Mr. HOPKINS'S amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

During the vote,

Mr. WAIT stated that he was paired with Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, who, if present, would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. LANE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was rejected.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I make the point of order that the previous question is operating all through and therefore the motion to reconsider is not in order.

Mr. LANE. It is always in order.

Mr. WALLING. It is a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. BANKS. While the previous question is pending until exhausted on all questions under consideration no other question can be considered; it must be exhausted before any question can be entertained to reconsider.

Mr. LANE. A motion to reconsider is of the highest character; there is no question about it. What the gentleman refers to has nothing to do with the motion to reconsider. My motion is in order; there is no doubt about it.

Mr. WALLING. I rise to a question of order, and I desire to state the point of order I make before the Chair decides; and that is that the proposition upon which the House was acting was a request to the Senate to return a certain paper which had been in some form or other taken by the Senate away from the joint meeting of the two Houses. The resolution of the gentleman from New York is to proceed with the count, which is entirely a different one. This is to return a paper from the Senate to this House. It is different from that of the gentleman from New York. The previous question could not operate except upon the subject-matter upon which we voted.

The SPEAKER. There is great force in the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts that where the previous question has not been fully executed it is not in order to entertain any other motion, but the practice of the House the Chair thinks would allow the motion to reconsider. If the gentleman from Massachusetts, however, can point to any rule the Chair would like to have him do it.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Not when it is partly executed.

Mr. HOOKER. It is entirely executed so far as the vote on the proposition is concerned.

Mr. WALLING. That is a very different proposition from this. This is a different proposition from that of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BANKS. The rule relative to this question is that when the previous question is ordered the questions pending upon which it is ordered and covered by it must be voted on before any new question can be proposed to the House. This motion to reconsider therefore is at variance with that rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. The House voted to reconsider and lay on the table a few minutes ago.

Mr. BANKS. This part of Barclay's Digest has been handed to me and I will call attention to it. It is on page 172. It is not in order to move the reconsideration of a vote on ordering the main question when it is partly executed. No motion can be made until the previous question is executed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The latest ruling we have had on this subject was, I think, from Mr. Speaker COX, who held that a motion to reconsider was not in order until the operation of the previous question had been exhausted upon the amendments and the main question.

Mr. HOSKINS. As I understand the operation of the previous question, it applies not only to the amendment, but to the original resolution. And in this case, of course, the previous question attaches not only to the proposition which has been voted upon, but clear down until we reach the original proposition. The action of the House in ordering the main question has not been executed until the last and final vote is taken. If, therefore, you attempt to reconsider this vote, you attempt to nullify and reverse the order of the House, which is that the question shall now be put.

The SPEAKER. Not nullify; unless the House desires to do so.

Mr. HOSKINS. But the previous question attaches, and has been partly executed; and I maintain that no motion to reconsider a partly executed previous question is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will observe, the practice of the House has been that when a reconsideration of a vote has taken place then the proposition is divested of the previous question.

Mr. HOSKINS. Yes; but until the previous question has been fully executed and all the votes taken under it, no intermediate motion can intervene.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman must recollect that where a proposition has the previous question operating upon it, and a reconsideration of it by the House takes place, it is immediately divested of the previous question; and by analogy that would allow, it seems to the Chair, this motion to reconsider to come in.

Mr. HOSKINS. This vote is only a partial execution of the order of the previous question, and the motion to reconsider cannot be entertained until the whole order has been executed.

The SPEAKER. It only delays. The majority does not suffer to any extent. It only delays the final decision.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOSKINS] allow me to state that the practice has been the reverse of what he states?

Mr. PAGE. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York applies his statement to the case where the previous question has been ordered; and it is settled in the rules that where the previous question is ordered and operating, then, if the previous question is partially executed, it is not in order to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the main question was ordered.

Mr. HOSKINS. The previous question attaches to the original motion and to all the amendments down to the main proposition.

The SPEAKER. This point is a very delicate one—if the Chair may use the expression—to decide. In the absence of any rule prohibiting it and in the presence of the analogy to which the Chair has alluded, that when a motion is reconsidered it is divested of the operation of the previous question, the Chair would rule that this motion is in order.

Mr. HALE. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

Mr. LANE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk commenced to call the roll.

Mr. LANE, (interrupting.) I addressed myself to the Chair before the call of the roll commenced. I desire to have the proposition read, that the House may understand it.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know if the gentleman can interrupt the roll-call.

Mr. LANE. I rose and addressed the Speaker in time. I do not intend to violate the rules. I desire that the Clerk shall read the original proposition, the vote on which it is now proposed to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The roll-call has been commenced.

Mr. LANE. I addressed myself as well as I could and as loudly as I could to the Chair before the commencement of the roll-call.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

The Clerk continued and completed the call of the roll.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 171, nays 80, not voting 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Bell, Blair, Blount, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Buttz, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Carr, Cason, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Davy, Denison, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Ellis, Evans, Felton, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Gause, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cate, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Collins, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Faulkner, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Henkle, Hooker, Humphreys, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Franklin Landers, Lane, Luttrell, Lynde, Mackey, Maish, McMahon, Meade, Money, Morrison, Mutchler, O'Brien, John F. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Jere N. Williams, and Benjamin Wilson—80.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Bass, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Caulfield, Chapin, Clymer, Cook, Dobbins, Durand, Egbert, Field, Garfield, Gibson, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, Hopkins, House, Hunton, Lewis, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Piper, Purman, Savage, Stephens, Swann, Thompson, Wait, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Warren, Wheeler, Willard, and Young—39.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. JOHN REILLY. I desire to say that my colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. HOPKINS, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. COOK. I am paired with Mr. WARD, of New York, who is absent on account of sickness. If he were present he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I now demand the previous question upon the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is already operating.

Mr. WALLING. I move to lay the resolution of the gentleman from New York upon the table.

Mr. McCRARY. Under the law that motion is not in order. It is the duty of the Chair to put the question on the resolution. This is a question that goes beyond the main question, and certainly no motion to lay on the table is in order under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. HOAR. The motion to lay on the table is in substance that the question shall never be taken. Now the law requires that the two Houses shall vote on the main question after two hours' debate.

Mr. WALLING. You can vote down the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair has ruled that certain motions are in order including the motion to reconsider, but the Chair has never ruled that the entire subject-matter may be withdrawn from the consideration of the House; so that this would be a direct violation of the electoral bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would direct the attention of members to page 133 of the Manual, which says:

> An order for the main question to be put does not preclude the motion to lay on the table, but it may be made at any stage of the proceedings between the demand for the previous question and the final action by the House under it.

An order for the main question to be put does not preclude a motion to lay on the table, but it may be made.

Mr. HOAR. There is no doubt that the Chair is entirely right under the rule, but my point is that the electoral bill requires the question to be taken at the end of two hours' debate; and although the Chair has very properly ruled that amendments are in order, yet it is not in order to put a motion to remove the entire subject from the House, as a motion to lay on the table would do.

The SPEAKER. The vote on the motion to lay on the table is a counterpart of the vote that would carry the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the House lays this resolution on the table another resolution could be offered under the law.

Mr. HOAR. But the previous question is operating.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the previous question will exhaust itself when we have passed upon all the questions now pending.

Mr. WALLING. There is no possible doubt that upon every principle of parliamentary law the motion is in order.

Mr. McCRARY. The language of the law is as follows. I read from the close of the fourth section:

> And after such debate shall have lasted two hours it shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without further debate.

Now, if that be the duty of the Chair he certainly cannot entertain a motion to lay upon the table, for suppose that motion should be carried, then the question could not be put in accordance with the requirement of the statute.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the motion to lay on the table should be carried the gentleman from Iowa or any other gentleman may move another resolution in accordance with the expressed desire of the House under the statute. If one resolution be defeated another may be offered, and therefore we may lay the pending resolution on the table and adopt something else.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I submit that the rules of the House must be construed according to the law which provides that we have to vote in the affirmative and negative on the question of this elector from Vermont, and we must decide that question now. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] can move to lay the resolution settling that question upon the table he can prevent the House from coming to a vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state in answer to the gentleman who refers to the law that these are motions which appertain to and are allowed in the progress of the main question being put.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. In ordinary cases, but this is an extraordinary case, and we are operating under an extraordinary law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the law to provide that the main question shall be put at the end of the two hours of debate, but these motions are motions allowed and recognized under the rules and which are applicable where the main question is ordered.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The Chair will pardon me; suppose this motion to lay upon the table should carry, the effect would be that the House could not decide the main question.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, another proposition to decide it can be offered.

Mr. BEEBE. It can be done under the provisions of the law without any motion at all.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the Chair desires to hear any further remark, I will say, in regard to the motions which have been made since the previous question was ordered, that the electoral bill was framed entirely upon the rules of both the House and the Senate. The Senate for example has no previous question. A ministerial duty devolves upon the Chair at the end of two hours to put the question on the main question, and the Chair could with great consistency have held that at the end of two hours the main question, "Shall the decision of the commission stand as the judgment of the House?" should be then put. Whenever the previous question is seconded, you have, under the rules of the House, all the subsidiary motions, amendments, motions to table, motions to reconsider that motion, and a consequent absolute impossibility of executing this law.

Now there is no disposition to find fault with the entertaining of an amendment showing the views of the minority, although I believe that the law strictly construed cuts it out. But when we go further and appeal to our rules outside of the law, rules which the Senate could not apply and under which we are doing something not contemplated by the law, it would be perfectly competent for the minority in counting the votes of the few remaining States to defeat the count by these dilatory motions, and I hold that under the law these dilatory motions cannot be entertained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the law reads as follows: "But after such debate shall have lasted two hours, it shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without debate."

Now the Chair thinks that any motions which are allowed by the rules of the House, and which pertain to the main question, are allowable at any period of the progress of the main question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then one word further and I will not say anything more. It will be absolutely necessary for this House, as a question of the highest privilege, if they intend to execute this law, to adopt a resolution cutting off all filibustering, or we may as well stop right now.

Mr. WALLING. I deny that there is any intention on the part of this side of the House to filibuster. When fraud is law filibustering is patriotism.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Chair has ruled that this motion to lay on the table is in order, I hope we will now proceed to vote.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to say in regard to this motion to lay on the table that, if it should succeed and another similar resolution should be offered and it is competent to move to lay that on the table, it seems to me we may go on indefinitely, and cannot protect ourselves against delay under the ruling indicated by the Chair.

The question was taken on the motion to lay on the table; and upon a division there were—ayes 65, noes 119.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. WALLING called for tellers.

Mr. HANCOCK. I call for the yeas and nays; we may as well take them at once.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 61, nays 167, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, Samuel D. Burchard, Carr, Cate, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Collins, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Henkle, Hooker, House, Humphreys, Thomas L. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Poppleton, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, James B. Reilly, John Reilly, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Seelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Stowell, Strait, Tarbox, Teese, Thomas, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Warren, Watterson, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Yeates—167.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Ashe, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Bland, Bradford, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Caulfield, Chapin, Clymer, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Danford, Davis, Durand, Egbert, Field, Fuller, Gibson, Goodin, Robert Hamilton, John T. Harris, Hays, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, Hopkins, Hunton, Hurd, Frank Jones, Knott, Franklin Landers, Le Moyne, Lewis, Maish, Metcalfe, Milliken, Neal, Odell, Phelps, Piper, Purman, Scales, Sheakley, Slemons, Stephens, Swann, Wait, Waldron, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Jere N. Williams, and Young—62.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. FORNEY. My colleagues, Mr. BRADFORD and Mr. HAYS, are absent on account of being unwell, and are paired. If they were present Mr. BRADFORD would vote "ay," and Mr. HAYS would vote "no."

Mr. WILLIS. My colleague, General WARD, is absent and paired with Mr. COOK, of Georgia. If Mr. WARD were here he would vote "no," and Mr. COOK would vote "ay."

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I desire to announce that Mr. WAIT, of Connecticut, is paired with Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. If present Mr. WAIT would vote "no," and Mr. CALDWELL would vote "ay."

Mr. JOHN REILLY. My colleague, Mr. HOPKINS, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. ELLIS. My colleague, Mr. GIBSON, is absent on account of illness. If here he would vote "no."

Mr. COCHRANE. My colleague, Mr. CLYMER, is absent on a committee of conference.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I now call for the regular order.

Mr. POPPLETON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to lay on the table the amendment moved by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.]

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I raise the point of order that that motion cannot be entertained.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Because its intention and design is to continue this session unnecessarily.

Mr. FRANKLIN. How do you know that?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. It is a dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a motion which under the rules of the House pertains to the main question.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. It is a dilatory motion.

Mr. FRANKLIN. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. It is designed to have that effect, and that is its purpose.

Mr. FRANKLIN. It may have that effect; but how does the gentlemen know that that is the design?

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HANCOCK. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 162, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, William P. Caldwell, Carr, Cate, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Collins, Cowan, Cox, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Henkle, Hooker, Humphreys, Hurd, Thomas L. Walker, John W. Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Wheeler, Wigginton, Willis, and Young—64.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

During the roll-call, the following announcements were made:

Mr. COOK. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. WARD.

Mr. PLAISTED. My colleague, Mr. FRYE, is absent on account of sickness. If present he would vote "no."

Mr. WIGGINTON. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. LAMAR. If present he would vote in the negative and I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. REAGAN, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. FULLER, are paired.

Mr. FORNEY. My colleagues, Mr. BRADFORD and Mr. HAYES, are paired. Mr. BRADFORD would vote "ay" and Mr. HAYES "no."

Mr. HATCHER. My colleague, Mr. BLAND, has gone home sick. If present he would vote "no."

Mr. WIKE. My colleague, Mr. BAGBY, has been called from the House on account of illness. If present he would vote "no."

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CALDWELL] are paired. Mr. WAIT would vote "no" on this question and Mr. CALDWELL "ay."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the following resolution——

The SPEAKER. It is not now in order. The House is operating under the previous question.

Mr. WALLING. And the gentleman himself put the House under the constraint of the previous question.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Then I ask a direct vote on the amendment proposed by me.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from New York will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the vote of Henry N. Sollace, claiming to be an elector for the State of Vermont, be not counted.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I rise to a question of order. The main question, as I understand, must be ordered after two hours' debate.

The SPEAKER. It has been.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Yes, sir; the view that I take of the law, after reading it carefully, is this——

The SPEAKER. This is not a point of order.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Well, I make a point of order. My proposition is that the amendment of the gentleman from New York is not before the House, has never been discussed before the House. The main question before this House to-day has been whether in regard to the vote of the State of Vermont there was a single return or a double return. I propose to read the law:

That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission or other question arising under this act, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes, and not oftener than once.

The question that arose under this act was whether there was a single or a double return; that is the only question now before the House; and we have therefore the right to debate the gentleman's amendment, when it does come up, for two hours more.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing in the law about debating any resolution. The debate contemplated by the act is upon the objection.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I rise now to a parliamentary inquiry: What was the motion before the House during the debate to-day?

Mr. PAGE. The objections.

Mr. CAULFIELD. What objection?

The SPEAKER. The law provides for debate upon the objection.

Mr. CAULFIELD. If that be the case, then we have not debated the objection, because we have not had the certificate before the House. The objection has not been debated.

The SPEAKER. That is no point of order at all. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York, which has just been read.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I ask the amendment be read.

Mr. EDEN. You cannot call for the reading of the amendment when the House is dividing, and I object to the reading of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I demand the yeas and nays on the pending amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I demand we shall know what we are voting on. What is the amendment and what is the original proposition to which the amendment is offered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated the amendment, on which the House is now dividing, and that amendment has been read. It has been read once at this stage, and it is not in order to have it read again except by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDEN. And I object.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I ask that the original proposition to which this amendment is offered be also read.

The SPEAKER. That is not before the House at this time.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I insist that the original resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot insist on the original resolution being read, for that is not at this time before the House, as the pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I do not insist on the amendment, but I insist on the reading of the original resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is not before the House.

Mr. LANE. I ask by unanimous consent that the original proposition be read.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. And I object.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 206, nays 19, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Beebe, Belford, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Boone, Bradley, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Carr, Cason, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Collins, Conger, Cox, Crapo, Crounse, Culberson, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, De Bolt, Denison, Dibrell, Douglas, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Ellis, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Finley, Forney, Foster, Franklin, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gause, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hendee, Henderson, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hooker, House, Hubbell, Humphreys, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, King, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lane, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Levy, Lord, Lynch, Mackey, Magoon, Maish, McDougall, McCrary, McDill, McMahon, Meade, Miller, Mills, Money, Monroe, Morgan, Mutchler, Nash, New, Norton, O'Brien, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Poppleton, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Rea, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Scales, Schleicher, Seelye, Sheakley, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Stowell, Strait, Teese, Terry, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Turney, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Yeates—206.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, John H. Baker, Buttz, Davy, Dobbins, Fort, Joyce, Le Moyne, Lynde, Neal, Purman, John Reilly, Savage, Smalls, Tucker, White, Whiting, and Wike—19.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Bagby, Bass, Bliss, Blount, Bradford, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, Caswell, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke, of Kentucky, Clymer, Cook, Cowan, Davis, Durand, Egbert, Field, Flye, Fuller, Gibson, Goodin, Robert Hamilton, John T. Harris, Hays, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hunton, Frank Jones, Knott, Lewis, Luttrell, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Morrison, Odell, Payne, Phelps, Piper, Reagan, Sayler, Schumaker, Stanton, Stephens, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Thompson, Wait, Waldron, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Wheeler, Jere N. Williams, Woodworth, and Young—65.

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. COOK stated he was paired with Mr. WARD, and that both would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, stated that Mr. WAIT was paired with Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, and both would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. JOHN REILLY stated that Mr. HOPKINS was absent on account of sickness.

Mr. MACKEY stated that he was paired with Mr. WOODWORTH.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] was adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. And I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I wish to inquire whether the proposition to reconsider is not a dilatory motion?

Mr. O'BRIEN. O, no; not at all, sir. [Great laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not bound at this stage to express any opinion on such a subject.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 172, nays 55, not voting 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Blount, Bradley, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Buttz, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Carr, Cason, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, Conger, Crounse, Culberson, Cutler, Danford, Davis, Davy, Denison, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Ellis, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gause, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, House, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, King, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lawrence Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Levy, Lord, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, Miller, Monroe, Morgan, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rea, Reagan, James B. Reilly, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Seelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Stowell, Strait, Tarbox, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Warren, Watterson, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Yeates—172.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Beebe, Bliss, Boone, William P. Caldwell, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane Collins, Cowan, Dibrell, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Henkle, Hooker, Thomas L. Jones, Lane, Luttrell, Lynde, Mackey, Meade, Mills, Money, Morrison, Mutchler, O'Brien, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Rice, Riddle, Roberts, Schumaker, Sheakley, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stone, Terry, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Whitthorne, Wigginton, and Jere N. Williams—55.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, George A. Bagley, Banning, Bass, Belford, Bland, Bradford, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Clymer, Cook, Cox, Crapo, Darrall, De Bolt, Dobbins, Douglas, Durand, Egbert, Field, Fuller, Gibson, Robert Hamilton, John T. Harris, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, Hopkins, Humphreys, Hunton, Knott, Lewis, Maish, McMahon, Metcalfe, Milliken, Odell, Payne, Phelps, Piper, Purman, Rainey, John Reilly, Miles Ross, Savage, Stanton, Stenger, Stephens, Swann, Teese, Thomas, Thompson, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Wilshire, and Young—63.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. SAVAGE said: I am paired with Mr. WADDELL, of North Carolina, who if he were here would vote "no," while I would vote "ay."

The Clerk proceeded to read the list of names.

Mr. CARR. I move that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. CATE and others objected.

The reading of the list was concluded and the result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the original proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] as amended by the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.]

Mr. POPPLETON. I call for the reading of the resolution as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause it to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the vote of Henry N. Sollace, claiming to be an elector from the State of Vermont, be not counted.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, and Mr. COX addressed the Chair.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I move to lay upon the table the resolution as amended.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. COX. I was about to offer the same motion as has just been made by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. VANCE.]

Mr. POPPLETON. I have called for the reading of the resolution presented by myself as amended by the adoption of the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. It has just been read.

Mr. POPPLETON. The amendment has been read, but not the original resolution.

The SPEAKER. The original resolution has been amended by the adoption of a substitute for it.

Mr. CAULFIELD. The resolution of the gentleman from New York was offered as an amendment, not as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. O, well; it is the same thing.

Cries of "Regular order!"

Mr. CAULFIELD. I move to lay the resolution, as amended, on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion has already been made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. VANCE.]

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a point of order. It is that when the House has just adopted a proposition and a motion to reconsider has been made and that motion to reconsider laid on the table, it is not then within the province of the House to attack it by a motion to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VANCE] is a legitimate parliamentary motion.

Mr. COX. A motion to lay on the table is always in order; at every stage.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 180, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Beebe, Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, William P. Caldwell, Carr, Cate, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Collins, Cox, Dibrell, Douglas, Forney, Franklin, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Henkle, Hooker, Humphreys, Thomas L. Jones, Lane, Luttrell, McMahon, Meade, Mills, Morrison, Mutchler, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Rice, Riddle, Roberts, Miles Ross, Schumaker, William E. So the House refused to lay the resolution, as amended, on the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. PHELPS said: I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. ODELL. If he were here he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MONEY. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. HALE. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALLING. That is right; let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.
